Wednesday, June 28—We arose early so we could view the International Lions Club parade which began at 9:30 a.m. We took a taxi to the Paseo de la Reforma, the main street of Mexico City as this was the street on which the parade would pass. Here Lee thought he was renting a chair for me from a private home. He paid the little boy but soon he was back saying, "His Mama said, 'No charge.'" But when the parade was over he came for the chair so we gave him some pesos. The parade was three hours long and very impressive with the different countries and states represented dressed in their native costumes. Many countries and states were represented by bands, but our own State of Texas was the greatest with the Hereford Band representing us and a group of riders on horses and our Lions Clubs and their wives dressed in their official uniforms or dress made a great impression on the Mexican people. I told Kathy this was worth a year's education to see this much culture displayed at one time.

In the afternoon, Mrs. Gilmore, Kathy and I walked over in the district of Polanco, a block or two from our hotel where we enjoyed seeing the beautiful clothes, silver, flowers and fruits in the shops.

Thursday, June 29—Our hotel manager hired a guide for us. We left at 9:00 a.m. and returned to our hotel at 6:00 p.m. Among the places that we visited in Mexico

City were: University City, Pedregal Gardens, the Cathedral, The National Palace, The House of Tiles, The Olympic Stadium, The Bull Ring, Flower Markets, the new part of Chapultepec Park and two of the pyramids within the city. The guide also explained who most of the statues were and the meaning and reason of their presence.

The new buildings of the National University impressed us with their bold architectural forms, and the lavish use of murals, frescoes and mosaics in decoration. The University is the oldest University in North America, founded in 1551. Many of the buildings are made of lava rock. The library building is faced with colored mosaics by Juan O'Gorman, depicting the history of ideas. The students do not live on campus and there are 90,000 students enrolled at the present time.

Pedregal Gardens is a modern residential district near the University and its modern homes costing about 70 to $90,000 (American money) are built to take advantage of the interesting black lava formation. We saw homes of prominent people in this district.

Xochimilco, the famous floating gardens are sometimes called

"Mexican Venice." The water flows placidly through channels bordered by floating gardens called chinampas. We took a ride on the flat bottomed boats (trajineras) decorated with flowers, followed by other boats with mariachi bands playing. An arch of flowers over the entrance of the boat spells out the name of each boat, and vendors paddle along selling corsages, food of all sorts and cold drinks. Our boat was named Marietta and it was handled by a small boy of perhaps 10 or 12 years of age with two wooden oars. We had lunch in the park's restaurant along with our guide. He assured us the drinking water was "agua purificada."

The Zocalo (means pedestal) is the main square of Mexico City. Here we visited the Cathedral, the largest church in North America. It was Baptismal Day for infants and saw hundreds of mothers with their babies and small children. The National Palace in the same area contains Government offices, archives and the frescoes are by Diego Rivera.

The Paseo de la Reforma, Mexico City's main thoroughfare, is a two mile long street which was transformed from a dirt road into a broad tree-shaded boulevard by Maximilian. It has many gloriolas, or traffic circles at each intersection, usually with a statue or fountain.

Some of the most famous ones are the great white marble semicircle erected in memory of Benito Juarez, the poor Indian shepherd who became Mexico's great defender of the oppressed; the fountain of Diana, the huntress; monument to the Heroic Children which is the principal gate to the Chapultepec Park; a memorial to the heroes of the Revolution; a monument to Beethoven; and the King of the Rain (Tlaloc) placed at the entrance of the Anthropological Museum. It has a weight of 60 tons. There is also a monument to Mexican Mothers.

Plaza de Toros is the largest in the world seating 48,000 enthusiastic fans. We did not see a bull fight as we had seen one in another city so we skipped that part of the tour.

The House of Tiles is one of the famous eating places in Mexico City, as well as a gift shop. It was once the mansion of a rich Spanish Nobleman. The food was very good. They had an excellent supply of silver goods and gifts from all over Mexico, and believe it or not, American newspapers, our first papers to buy since leaving the states.

Friday, June 30—We drove to Chapultepec Park as it was only a few blocks from our hotel and we didn't need a guide. It is much like Golden Gate Park in California or Central Park in New York City with its zoos, carnival rides, boating, amusement parks and concerts. This 21,000 park is heavily patronized on Sundays, the local people told us.

Chapultepec Castle was our next place to visit. It was built in 1783, on an overlooking hill, and has been the home of Spanish Viceroy, Mexican Presidents, and Emperor Maximilian and Empress Carlotta. Their bedroom of pink and gold brocade walls remains to be seen and admired. I did not get to go into the castle as there were too many stairs to climb but I did look in a window and see the carriage and stage coach used by Maximilian and Carlotta. Also the view of the city with the Latin American tower shining so brightly, the canals, the beautiful cathedrals, and the busy six million people hurrying and scurrying about was breath-taking from this mountain top.

Also in the distance you could see Popocateptl (smoking mountain), a dormant volcano with a height of over 17,000 feet, which occasionally emits clouds of smoke. Ixtacihuatl (sleeping lady), another dormant volcano, is also sometimes visible from here. Its last eruption was in 1869.

We also visited the museum of Anthropology in Chapultepec Park which was built by Pedro Ramirez Vasquez. It shelters a vast collection of the cultures of the Mayas, Toltec and Aztec, and in fact all cultures that inhabited the area. This building was so large that Lee was able to borrow a wheelchair from the museum in order for me to enjoy these wonderful displays. All floors were made of marble so walking was difficult.

At night we took a ride downtown on the Metro (subway), much like the ones in Paris or New York City, but the stations underground were large, well lighted and beautifully decorated, and some even had escalators.

July 1—We hated to leave our hotel in Mexico City on account of the courtesies extended to us while there. The only thing we lacked was wash cloths, but we had taken our own. We left for Acapulco going via the pyramids. The best known are those about 30 miles northwest of the city in the eight square mile archeological zone of San Juan Teotihuacan. Here, Lee, Mrs. Gilmore and Kathy explored the pyramids and took pictures. I was told that the bases of these are larger than the ones in Egypt. I stayed below and bargained at the gift shops for statues of the sun and moon gods.

On to Cuernavaca, the only city in the world where the flowers bloom the whole year round. We admired the bougainvillea, the tabachines, blue or purple jacarandas, and the beautiful poinciana trees and shrubs.

We could not find two rooms in any motel so we drove 21 miles east of Cuernavaca to this marvelous 150-room 400-year-old restored sugar hacienda. It is indeed one of the most beautiful natural spots in the world and one of the top resorts of Mexico. A guest told me that it would take two whole days to see and explore all of it. The name of this resort is Hacienda Cocoyoc. The history of the hacienda goes back to the 16th century. The present owners bought it in 1958 and have managed to maintain the flavor and beauty of the spot and the entire labyrinth reeks of ambience. It is now a hotel, restaurant, night club, theatre, golf course, garden spot, and thermal spa. The food is beautifully served and is prepared in exquisite kitchens. We had dinner here one night and breakfast the next morning. Some of the suites have their own swimming pools and there are also two public pools for their guests. This was a paradise for Kathy. The adaptation of the ancient ruins into this modern Xanadu will amaze any tourist.

Is now
the time to refinance loans?

Capital for expansion, more money from your equity, debt consolidation, smaller payments—these are important reasons for adjusting your loan structure. It's sound business to analyze credit obligations at least once each year to make sure borrowed money is being used to full advantage. Let's talk it over. Should you decide to rearrange your debts, we would be glad to make a Land Bank refinancing proposal.
