ROOSEVELT APPEALS FOR WORLD PEACE

Tax Returns of Morgan and Partners Are Being Studied

SENATE GROUP WILL REVIEW INFORMATION

(Copyright 1933 by United Press) WASHINGTON, May 16.—J. P. Morgan's income tax returns, the United Press learned today, are being studied by a senate banking committee investigator.

Returns of his partners in the great international banking firm also are being examined. It is believed likely the information obtained will be introduced early in the committee's investigation of the bank's operations scheduled to begin next week.

One of the purposes of the committee's investigation of the bank's long and stock market practices is to turn the spotlight on loopholes in the income tax law and to devise legislation to plug them up. Chairman Norbeck recently predicted the committee's work would bring the government millions of dollars in additional taxes.

It was before this committee that Charles E. Mitchell, former head of the National City bank, admitted selling stocks to his wife at a loss to avoid income tax payments. He now is being tried in New York on charges the transaction was illegal.

Charges that Andrew Mellon also avoided heavy taxes by selling stocks at a loss and later by buying them back through a corporation controlled by his family are being studied by the justice department. Returns of other wealthy persons also are being investigated.

RAINS FLOOD BASEMENT OF FEDERAL BLDG.

Workmen pumped 20,000 gallons of water out of the basement of the new federal building here today, besides what was removed from the drainage pit back of the building, according to E. A. Jensen, construction engineer of the H. W. Underhill company.

About two inches of water collected in the basement, coming in through the plumbers' holes at the sides of the building during the recent rains, Jensen said. Pumps were still working to remove the water from the pit at noon today, although work on other parts of the building was going forward as usual. REDISTRICTING BILL SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

AUSTIN, May 16.—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson today signed the congressional redistricting bill fixing the 21 congressional districts in Texas. Failure to redistrict resulted in the election of three congressmen-at-large at the last election.

Complications have resulted from the governor's signature of the bill. Late yesterday the state senate passed a substitute redistricting bill changing three east Texas counties. It is awaiting house action. Several years ago an attorney-general's opinion was given that when the state legislature once redistricts the state it cannot change the districts until congress makes a new allotment of representatives.

MESSAGE IS DIRECTED TO 54 NATIONS

WASHINGTON, May 16.—President Roosevelt struck two smashing blows for peace today.

In a call that rang around the world he addressed an open message directly to the heads of 54 governments, including Soviet Russia. He called upon them to pledge themselves not to move any armed forces across their frontiers. He urged immediate reduction of offensive armament. He warned that any nation refusing to cooperate would have to assume responsibility for such obstruction before the civilized world.

He followed this appeal with a message to congress cast in sharper words.

He transmitted the text of his world appeal to congress for its information and added:

"The way to disarm is to disarm. The way to prevent invasion is to make it impossible."

Thus in two historic-making utterances, one to the world and one to the American congress, Mr. Roosevelt seized the leadership in a war threatening crisis. His action was intended to mobilize world opinion against those who for selfish ends would plunge everyone over another precipice.

Significant. Significantly he struck his mighty blows on the eve of the speech which Chancellor Hitler is to make tomorrow to Germany.

"I was impelled to this action," Mr. Roosevelt told congress "because it has become increasingly evident that the assurance of world political and economic peace and stability is threatened by selfish and shortsighted policies, actions and threats of action."

President Roosevelt believes the menace of war can be removed if fear of attack is removed.

He broke a precedent in including the head of the Soviet Union among the sovereigns to whom his message went.

Aside from the vital questions at stake this feature of the message attracted more comment than any other for many say in it the beginning of a resumption of relations with Russia after more than a decade of official aloofness.

The booklets are to be sold through schools of the state, their distribution being directed by district chairmen, with the approval of L. A. Woods, superintendent of education. They also will be sold at the Texas exhibit in Chicago during the period of the fair, June 1 to November 1.

Van Camp of Fort Worth, author of the booklet, released his copyright to the commission without cost. He and J. L. Duncan of Dallas, are joint chairmen of the booklet sales division of the commission.

The Texas exhibit before the more than 50 million persons expected at the fair will depict 100 years of the state's progress in education, agriculture and industry. It will be presented in a fashion suggesting the opportunities the state offers to new settlers and to new investments. Prof. W. T. Rolfe, University of Texas, and Ivan H. Riley, architect of Harlingen, Texas, and Chicago, are supervising preparation of the exhibit which will forward to Chicago soon, Snavely said.

BOOSTING FARM PRICES.

It is a safe bet that the powers ceded the administration under the farm relief bill to boost agricultural commodity prices by means of a processing tax to raise these prices to a normal pre-war level will be exercised only as a last resort. Roosevelt has already given Secretary of Agriculture Wallace orders not to apply this provision of the bill until the chief executive has scrutinized the procedure and given it his ok. The processing tax is what has drawn the sharpest fire of the conservatives who predict a fate for the measure similar to that which overtook the Hoover farm board policies, including a period of further depressed prices, a shifting of demand from the favored commodities to those upon which no processing tax applies and a consequent increase in American surplus to be shunted onto the foreign market.

Mr. Roosevelt, no doubt, is quite aware of these dangers. He agrees with opponents of the farm relief measure in their contention that adequate farm relief can be accomplished only through a tariff truce and a lowering of excessive import barriers, as evidenced in the fact that he has engineered such a truce prior to and pending the London economic conference.

The farm bill provides that for any tax imposed on the processing of any agricultural product a corresponding impost must be levied upon that product or the goods made from it. Mr. Roosevelt is quite anxious that any application of the terms of the farm relief bill shall not create any foreign misunderstanding in view of the tariff truce that has been agreed upon at his initiative.

What appears likely, in respect to the administration's approval of the processing tax and the acreage reduction feature is an intention of the administration to add a gesture to reality, using the debt relief authorities of the bill and the provisions for cooperative dealing with the marketing problems of each agricultural division as the means of working out a sounder basis for the industry upon which the ultimate reforms may be the more naturally obtained. The more radical features may be more of a palliative than a corrective, although capable of application as a last resort. The real relief, meanwhile, would be sought through international concert to remove tariff barriers and dissolve other major obstacles confronting world trade intercourse, and through currency "reflation."

Such, it may be deduced, is something of the thought behind the application of the measure. It should be remembered, in estimating any activities of the administration in connection with farm relief, that these activities are initiated from a viewpoint quite distinct from that which prevailed from a pre-war conception of the nation's foreign relationships when America was a debtor rather than a creditor among the powers of the earth. This shift in international relationship dictates quite as radical a shift in approach to questions which involve foreign trade. The administration, in recognizing this changed status, is adopting some new engineering policies for correcting the fault into which world trade has slipped. For another thing the farm relief program is not of itself alone the answer to the depression. It is simply part of a broad program, rather remarkably dovetailed, thanks to a united legislative and administrative front, and calculated to encompass every feature of the national economic life.

It may fail, but at least it justifies the bold promise of Mr. Roosevelt for action and more action. Its very ambition may count for something.

RAIN IN WEST TEXAS.

Blessed with bountiful rains central west Texas is in smiling garb today. Its crops, hindered by a three months drouth, are responding lustily to the new moisture. Its cattle ranges are green with revived grass. Its water tanks are full. The only element that the west needs of all the elements that make a great country has fallen in copious benediction.

It can be truly said that the Almighty loves west Texas. He seems to be mighty hard on it sometimes. He knocks its oil business cock-eyed. Once in a while He shrivels up its crops, dries up its sheep and cattle ranges. Occasionally He stirs up a sandstorm and the weaker of us begin to wonder if it would not be better to move over the rim into the blessed imagination of another land. Then, all of a sudden He opens his arms and we wouldn't leave west Texas for a paradise. Perhaps, if we may dare to anticipate the omniscient mind, He has to do all that to keep the rest of the country populated.

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

Decorations for the convention of the 17th district of the American Legion, convening here next Saturday, are being put in place. Hardly any particular thing makes so much of convention atmosphere as decorated streets. Add a band or two and though the streets be as bare as November woods you'll get a crowd, color and action. The formula is as old as Rome's triumphs, perhaps older than that, yet it always works. The size of a crowd is not important. It's the stirring around, the circulation, if you please, that makes the thing.

However, the local lads are smiling over the prospects of a large influx of visitors. They expect at least 500 out-of-towners to be here for the district reunion of the boys who fought to "make the world safe for democracy." (They are now trying to make democracy safe for the world). The merchants, likewise, are grinning by way of anticipation. They plan to put bargains in their windows to make the shekels flow. An edition of the Daily News this week and a flurry of circulars will tell the country what Cisco plans to do Saturday and Sunday.

Some light-fingered and lighter-moralled gentleman of the skulks has appropriated the family's automobile blanket. The better half of the household was so upset that I began to believe I had stolen the thing. For the benefit of the culprit I should add that the article is quite easily recognized.

In the event of an attack of remorse return of the property will not subject anyone to embarrassing questions.

BETTERMENT IN BUSINESS SPURS MARKET

In its weekly review of business and financial conditions The Wall Street Journal says:

The apparent betterment in general business, coming from many quarters, served to bring about an extension of the advance in the securities markets over the past week. Industrial stocks, measured by the Dow-Jones average, carried more than a full point through the September high, and the railroad average was swept up close to the level reached at the height of the fall rally. An encouraging background to the recovery in equities was the upswing in bond prices which reached new tops for the year but did not exceed the fall recovery peak.

Business news was of paramount influence in bringing about the rise in security prices. There was hardly an item which appeared during the course of the week which was not favorable. Electric output exceeded the 1932 week for the first time in close to three years that such a comparison has been shown. Loadings reports of a number of individual carriers topped the figures for the similar 1932 week. Motor sales were reported holding well, and a number of individual companies reported sharp upturns in special lines.

Washington developments played second fiddle to the industrial news but happenings in the capital helped the market. Progress was made in putting through the president's program designed to bring about industrial recovery in this country. The progress included passage of the farm relief bill, and drafting the rough outline of the proposed industrial legislation. That will embody, according to indications, government cooperation with industry to help itself, rather than direct control.

International affairs took a turn for the better. Virtual agreement by England, Germany and the United States on the tariff truce proposal, as a preliminary to the London economic conference, was reached. If such an agreement is finally arrived at, it should smooth the way of the conference.

Two Factors
Two factors should prove strong influences on the stock market over the coming week. One is the presentation, in final form of the administration's industrial program, and the terms of the measure. The other is the action of directors of American Telephone at the dividend meeting on Wednesday. The financial community still is in doubt as to what action will be taken, with the Street divided between hopes for continuance of the $9 rate and expectation of a reduction to an annual rate of $7 a share. The telephone company's business has picked up in the last two months, and the rate of loss of telephones has slackened.

Steel production in the week ended May 8 was estimated at 32 1-2 percent of capacity, compared with 28 1-2 percent in the preceding week. Demand continued to pour into the steel companies from a variety of miscellaneous consumers, and the automotive industry continued to provide the trade with its main strength.

While buyers generally are fearful of a price advance and are anxious to be protected against future needs, there is little speculative buying, in the opinion of leading steel authorities. This is considered a constructive sign, for producers would rather see steel moving into actual consumption than being bought and held for a price rise.

Strength continues in raw materials, notably scrap, but producers are not inclined to favor any immediate marking up in prices unless it becomes absolutely necessary. They would rather encourage a healthy business recovery by removing the speculative risks of fluctuating prices. Some price rise in finished products may become necessary, however.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON.—A new third party—a radical party appealing to labor and the farmers—may be born from the recent Continental Congress for Economic Reconstruction which met in the capital.

Leaders of the Socialist Party and other moderate left wing groups which operate in the large field lying between the major parties and the conservative labor and farmer organizations on one hand and the Communists on the other, are distinctly hopeful.

Old-time Socialists thought the congress was the most impressive convention their party had ever had. They recognized a stronger militancy among the country's dissatisfied elements. They were surprised that the meeting actually drew nearly 4000 delegates from all parts of the country.

Manifestations of such new revolutionary spirit as has been created by the depression were not alarming, since the Socialists who dominated the meeting continue to place their faith in the ballot box and in democratic, parliamentary government.

The leaders, however, are going to seek a broader political base for American radicalism. They want to organize among the millions of unemployed, millions more of the employed workers and millions of hard-pressed farmers. The Socialist Party has had little success at this job. Now many of its members are perfectly willing to change the party name and drop some of their shibboleths in the hope of building quickly an organization which might begin with the political proportions of the LaFollette independent progressive movement of 1924. There would surely be a fight over that point, however, as many old-line Socialists prefer to retain the party label at all costs.

Among the larger organizations which met with the Socialists were the Farmers' Union, the National Farm Holiday Association, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and a couple of dozen state farmer and labor federations.

Although the Socialists and their friends demonstrated an increased militant determination, the most pronounced radical expressions came from the farmers. The protests of city workers against unemployment were far from as bitter as those of the farmers against evictions and destitution.

A. C. Townley of the Holiday Association, head of the old Non-Partisan League, received a much more vociferous ovation than any other among dozens of speakers when he promised that farmers would "keep possession of the land," organize their own food distribution systems and urged labor unions to set up agencies for the exchange of "coal, overalls and farm machinery" for farm produce. He was applauded for six minutes.

Utterances of other farmers indicated a feeling of desperation not found even among the unemployed delegations, and it was the sons of the soil who spoke most frequently of "direct action."

Communists were scattered about, urging an advanced program including $10 a week relief for each unemployed worker and a $15,000,000 public works program as well as a militant campaign embracing strikes, demonstrations and "struggles at relief bureaus."

They were also demanding a "united front" and didn't try to create any unpleasantness.

The tendency of many delegates toward the left was most obviously demonstrated when a proposal to include a tribute to the "workers' republic" in the resolution calling for Russian recognition was defeated by no very large majority.

What will become of this attempt to create a real third party is anybody's guess. Even its promoters aren't at all sure they will succeed, although they are convinced that this is the time, if ever.

BEHIND THE WAR SCENES IN THE FAR EAST

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second installment of Frederick Whiteing, United Press Staff Correspondent's diary written while with the Japanese army in Jehol Province, China.

By FREDERICK WHITEING United Press Staff Correspondent WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY, PEIPIAO, Jehol, Feb. 28.—This town, just within the eastern border of Jehol, is connected with Chinchow by a railway, the short part of which in Jehol is the only rail line in the province.

I arrived today from Chinchow on a freight train which left that city about 7 a. m. though I had been waiting at the station from dawn.

The train was laden with ready-made track, and four-wheel trucks, for freight cars, for a light railway which is to be laid from Kohokuinzu From Kohokuinzu I came here on a little train of three or four flat-cars with a gasoline engine.

In the train from Chinchow, I traveled in the conductor's van, packed in with a score of other newspaper men, many uncomfortably close to a little stove which was red-hot and cold by turns.

Among us was a young Japanese lieutenant. He spoke with freedom to a foreigner who could converse in his own language. He had been in command of one of the small motor trains which carried the first Japanese troops into Pei-piao.

He told how in a village four kilometers before Pei-piao, three men had come to him and said their people were peaceful villagers and asked for protection. He reassured them. The two or three hundred villagers, overjoyed had rushed out in welcome, waving an improvised Japanese flag made by sewing a red center on a square of white cloth—on one side only, as it had been made in a hurry.

WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY TRANSPORT HEADQUARTERS, CHAOYANG, March 1.—Last night was spent in a Chinese bath-house at Pei-piao enlivened by conversation with two Chinese brothers, who knew a little English and possessed an old torn American school reader, and by the stares of customers of the establishment.

The bath-house had plenty of warmth, a great virtue in this bitterly cold country and plenty of hot tea, useful in washing down some bits of provisions I had. The bath water looked dirtier than I myself was, so I passed it up.

Tonight I am staying in an abandoned Chinese building, not far from headquarters. I arrived at nightfall after traveling most of the day with a column of motor trucks, carrying soldiers and provisions. I

Sculpture Art Put on Display

PHILADELPHIA, May 16.—An international exhibition of sculpture is opened on the terraces and in the great stair hall of the Pennsylvania museum of art on the Parkway.

Not only the outstanding figures in American sculpture, but leaders in the art from Russia, Germany, Britain, Spain and Roumania have contributed to what is expected to be one of the most significant shows of the year in the east.

Bronze, stone and plaster work in the traditional mood and creations in the "advanced" school are shown with absolute equality.

The show is under the direction of the Fairmount Park Art association which is co-operating with the Philadelphia Art alliance and the Pennsylvania museum.

Sculptural pieces executed for New York's Radio City; for the Century of Progress Exhibition in Chicago; for the Folger Shakespearean Library in Washington; and for the Roger Kennedy Memorial at Worcester, Mass., are included in the display.

am much bruised from the constant jolting over a bad road.

The dark, deserted streets, with an occasional flitting, shadowy figure, present an eerie appearance and I am glad to be with the business-like Japanese soldiers, whose sentries are posted here and there.

I called on the transport colonel here. He told me of conditions in Chaoyang, occupied only a few days before; food was short, and the people had feared starvation if the Chinese soldiery had been on their hands much longer. The colonel gave me some of his own rations. A jovial major, who told me he had had nothing to eat since yesterday had just received a bottle by airplane and he insisted on making me take a drink, which warmed me up considerably and counteracted the numbing effects of the journey.

While we were talking a sniper slipped up among the motor trucks and fired at the sentry just outside the colonel's door, hitting his bayonet. With the aid of the civilian official accompanying me from the Kwantung army headquarters, I have managed to make a fire in the stove-bed in the doorless building I am in tonight.

RANGER, May 16.—O'Brien, Milwaukee brewer, won a rough three fall match from Tiger Billy McEun, California grappler, here last night. McEun forced the offensive after the first fall, but knocked himself out in trying to pry O'Brien loose from the ropes and his opponent was quick to take advantage of the situation.

Ug Moore, former Denton football star, threw Fred Gotch, Boston job, with a rocking chair split. Eddie O'Shea, of New York, who wrestles Benny Wilson for the junior middleweight championship next week, downed Johnny McCain, Tulsa, with two crab holds in the opening match.

DARLING FOOL

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MONNIE O'DARE who lives with her mother, brothers and sister in a small town is in love with DAN CARDIGAN, heir to a local fortune. CHARLES EUSTACE, newcomer in town, seems to admire her but she likes him only as a friend. KAY, her sister, is discontented at home and Monnie is worried about this.

SANDRA LAWRENCE who pretends to be a friend of Monnie's tries to win Dan away from her. HETTY, a maid in the Lawrence home, thinks Sandra is "vamping" JAMES, the chauffeur, and she is jealous.

Sandra plans an elaborate party to which Monnie is not invited.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVII

HER voice over the telephone sounded small and clear. "It's Monnie, Dan." She could almost hear the intake of breath at the other end of the line.

"Monnie! That's great! But you said you wouldn't—" "I know I did." She bit her lip to keep it from trembling. How absurd it was to behave like this! "I changed my mind. I want to see you, Dan."

There was no hesitation now on his part. He said heartily, "Sure. Glad you decided to. When and where?"

"Tonight," the girl told him. "It's important."

There was the barest pause and then Dan said, "Of course. I've got a date—but I'll break it. Shall I call for you around 7?"

It was arranged then. How simple it had been! Monnie hung up the receiver with fingers that shook a little. Sandra did not know how right she had been when she had advised Monnie to play a waiting game with Dan Cardigan. The very fact that she had held him at arm's length for a month had awakened his interest anew. Now she determined with all her heart to fight for him.

Sandra had once said with her air of knowing all about it, "A woman can have any man she wants if she really sets her mind on it." Of course when Sandra had said that she had been thinking only of herself. She had not meant the words to apply to anyone else.

Monnie felt more than unusually self-conscious when she explained to her mother that she had an engagement with Dan Cardigan that night.

"But I thought—" Mrs. O'Dare had the evening paper in her hand, folded back to Miss Anstice's social column. The words leaped at Monnie: "Among this evening's guests will be Mr. Charles Eustace, Mr. Daniel Cardigan, Jr.,—"

"He was invited to that party," Monnie said lightly. "He's just not going."

"Not?" Mrs. O'Dare's pretty, anxious face looked up, looked away. "Oh, I see!"

A MOMENT later she said gently, "I'm glad you're having a little fun, lovey. You've been so quiet lately. It isn't quite fair—your not having a good time when the rest of those girls do." Her gesture embraced Sandra and all Sandra's crowd.

"Don't you worry about me," Monnie's voice was gay. Indeed she felt singularly light-hearted. "I'm all right."

"But you're young," fretted the mother. "You need your chance, Monnie. Don't think I don't know what working in that store all day means—helping to run this house—everything. It's not exactly a girl's job. It's too much for you." She bent over the paper to hide the sudden rush of moisture that had sprung to her eyes.

Monnie laid her smooth young hand over the worn one. "You're not to worry, I said. Everything's fine. Everything's splendid!"

She sang as she dressed, little snatches of dance tunes. It was enough tonight to be young, to be alive, to have a brief glimpse of that elusive thing, happiness.

When at 7 a motor horn sounded and she heard Dan's deep voice an instant later, conferring with Mark on the veranda, she could have wept for sheer joy.

"Sandra's going to eat me alive for this," Dan told her, helping her into the car.

"She's—for what?" Monnie pretended utter innocence. Her candid eyes implored him to share the secret.

"Oh, that big racket she's throwing tonight," Dan said carelessly. "They'll be one man short, that's all."

"Oh, really?" Monnie frowned thoughtfully.

"Doesn't matter a bit," Dan grinned down at her. "To me, that is. I had Frear, at Dad's office, call her up and say I was yanked out of town—on important business. Good joke." With his free hand he shook a cigarette from the paper packet and somehow managed to light it.

"She'll be awfully mad at me," Monnie informed him, "if she finds out." Her eyes were limpid, guileless.

"Nuts!" said Dan inelegantly. "She can't run me. Let her be mad. Tell you what, Monnie, she's too bossy for me. No matter what Mother says—"

"That's what I wanted to talk to you about, Dan," said Monnie in the gentlest voice imaginable. "I think it's about time we came to some decision about our—our affairs. There's a good deal of talk around town—"

THE young man interrupted her, frowning deeply. "About what?"

Monnie tucked in a vagrant curl. Her expression was still sweetly untroubled.

"About you and Sandra," she said. "They all say you're going to marry her." She put up her hand to ward off Dan's torrent of explanation. "I don't know how true it is and honestly, Dan, I don't care." She paused to let that sink in. "But what I wanted to say was—I completely release you from the—the agreement we had last autumn. I want you to feel perfectly free to go ahead, to do as you like. After all," said Monnie in dulcet tones. "We were pretty much kids last year. Perhaps we've grown up, both of us. Perhaps we're seeing things in their true light."

"I don't know what you mean by that," Dan muttered sullenly. "It wasn't really an engagement anyway," Monnie pursued earnestly. "We just—well, sort of pledged ourselves to each other in a boy and girl way. You gave me this," and her curling fingers opened to disclose a seal Monnie's voice was gay. Indeed she felt singularly light-hearted. "I'm all right."

"But you're young," fretted the mother. "You need your chance, Monnie. Don't think I don't know what working in that store all day means—helping to run this house—everything. MCDONALD IS FAVORED FOR ADAMS' POST

DALLAS, May 16 — By a vote of 24 to 3 yesterday the state democratic executive committee passed a resolution favoring the nomination of C. C. McDonald, Wichita Falls, as Texas democratic national committeeman in the event of a vacancy. A dominant Ferguson majority forced the resolution through despite repeated attempts of the minority to leave the question open. The committee has been summoned into extraordinary session to nominate a successor to J. C. Adams, appointed to the federal board of tax appeals. Adams had sent his resignation to James A. Farley, national chairman, but upon Farley's refusal to accept the resignation, had advised the state committee by letter that his place on the national committee was not vacant and that it was his "present intention" to serve until the end of his term.

McDonald supporters professed to see in the phrase "present intention" the possibility that a vacancy would occur before the end of the term, however, and pushed through the resolution which had been prepared by a sub-committee headed by and selected by James F. Ferguson.

son, who held the proxy of Ras Young, of Longview. The resolution, while praising Adams' service of eight years as committeeman, expressed doubt of the propriety of his continuing as national committeeman while holding the post of member of the board of tax appeals.

Led Opposition
Hugh Carney, of Atlanta, led a futile fight against the resolution when he offered a substitute which would have left the question open. The substitute endorsed Adams' record and "rejoiced" that his resignation had not been accepted. Supporting the substitute Carney asserted that the original would cast reflection upon Vice-president John N. Garner, whose name had been mentioned for the national committee.

B. Y. Cummings, of Austin, holding proxy, replied that "this plan to place Garner on the national committee originated, not in the minds of the national committee, the vice-president, the state committee, nor J. C. Adams. It originated in the mind of the publisher of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Amos G. Carter." He said "we want the national committee to know that Carter does not speak officially for the democrats of this state." He also charged that Silliman Evans flew to Texas last week to have Garner nominated for the Adams' vacancy after a majority of the state committee had expressed themselves for McDonald.

"We don't want harmony in the name of men who take a pledge in July and repudiate it in November," he asserted. He charged that Garner was being misled "by a bunch of politicians in the person of Carter and Thomas B. Love".

The substitute was killed by a vote of 22 to 9. Two other efforts to eviscerate the original resolution were likewise defeated.

Three members of the committee voted against the Ferguson majority's resolution on the final vote. Among them was Will St. John, of Cisco. Four members did not vote.

Women Gain in Economic Life

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Women have begun to take a more and more important part in the economic life of the nation, according to the department of labor.

The women's bureau of the department said, however, that in 1930 seven out of every nine wage earners were men, whereas in 1910 for every 100 women "wage earners" there were 373 men, in 1920 the ratio was 100 to 387 and in 1930, 100 to 354.

Some of the occupations, in which women yet have to be employed, are boilermaker, puddler, structural iron worker, locomotive engineer, "soldier, sailor or marine" said the bureau. In 1930 they had a "toehold" in strikingly masculine occupations.

For instance four women were mining engineers, 41 were factory machine oilers, 66 earned their living as airplane pilots, and 11 as veterinary surgeons. Twenty-one were inventors.

"Women operators and laborers outnumbered men in 12 manufacturing industries in 1930," said the bureau, listing these industries as silk mills, knitting mills, cigar and tobacco factories, and candy factories.
