second only to Wittenburg for its prevalence of disease, cruelty, harsh treatment and wretched living conditions.

It was at Muhlhausen that Bessley participated in a mutiny. There was a rule that prisoners should not be made to work in the rain. This gang of twenty-eight men had been felling trees in the forest. It was raining but no orders came for them to cease work and return to the barracks. Finally they asked permission of the sentry. He refused. Word passed from man to man--all together they would quit--not just a few for they would quickly be shot--but all. Simultaneously laying down their implements, they started for the cabins, but their way was blocked by the guard with his rifle. Turning back for their axes, they returned and by threats of hacking him to pieces, the guard was forced to yield. The men marched to the camp, and fearful that their actions would call for immediate execution of all of them, laid plans for escape. However, luck was with them. The two German guards in charge of this kommando were not congenial, in fact they were inimical to the point of having their meals served in different rooms and avoiding all possible conversation and contact with each other. For this reason, presumably, the matter was not reported and the prisoners escaped even a reprimand.

Alike--Appalling. Conditions in the various prisons were practically alike--appalling. Disease was rampant--typhus, Asiatic cholera, small pox, and with little or no medical attention, men died like flies. Rations consisted of a piece of black, clay-like bread sometimes said to have been mixed with sawdust, potatoes, flour, a pint of acorn coffee, a pint of cabbage water soup for the noon and night meal. Later on the prisoners were permitted to receive parcels sent from the outside world and some food was provided them by the Red Cross. But thousands died of starvation. During one month, Bessley conducted funeral services for 127 men who died of starvation alone. Disease was so prevalent at one time that eight rows of wire encircled the camp to exclude it from the town and German guards emptied the food rations in troughs to be obtained later by the prisoners.

In 6 x 3 boxes, built two-tiered fashion, the prisoners slept covered by a single blanket, less than that which might sleep warmly enough at a time. At first there were only camp duties to perform, but later, they were sent into the fields, mines, forests. It has been truly said that the prisoners and German women did all the work in Germany during the war.

Entertainment in Hell. For entertainment though, they did not lack. In Bessley's camp there was a noted violinist from Belgium, likewise a famed French actor, fencers, athletes of all types, and musicians. Numerous orchestras were organized--Bessley himself played in the British orchestra but the most excellent was the International orchestra directed by an Italian. Uniforms, which of course, were furnished by the Allied countries, were black trimmed with brown.

According to history, at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, many French prisoners of war, sent to out-of-the-way villages, mines farms, never knew the war was over, and continued until death living in Germany. Fearing this, prisoners working in the mines and country continually moved about, coming into the prison camps. Especially was there an influx of this kind immediately after the Armistice was rumored. Their food rations, and these were strictly and carefully apportioned, having been sent to the place from which they came, the camps now found themselves with added hardships. They were over-run with hungry men and had only a limited amount of food. Conditions were deplorable.

Valueless Lives. It was at this time that an incident occurred characteristic of the lightness with which German guards were wont to regard their prisoners' lives. The prisoners were enjoying a football game, and almost all were either taking part or witnessing the sport. The German captain received word that a rebellion was anticipated momentarily. Sending out some fresh recruits, long-serviced men following the new men, being nervous and over-anxious, having been provoked and the experienced soldiers, hearing the shots, opened fire also. Fifteen men were killed and others wounded. Apologies were made by Germany for the unfortunate occurrence, and military funerals with all due honors were given them. Rev. Bessley conducted the services.

Released from Germany December 1918, Bessley went through Holland where new uniforms, food, blankets, were distributed and back to England. A delegation met the boat and a letter of commendation from King George was delivered to each of the soldiers.

After two months vacation in England, Rev. Bessley returned with his wife, also a native of England whom he had married during the war, to Canada. For several years he was in charge of two parishes in the Diocese of Huron. In 1927, he moved to Dallas, where he remained for two years before coming to Mineral Wells where he now makes his home.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The Deliverance At the Red Sea

HERE, FOR INSTANCE, IN THIS STORY OF THE PASSING OF THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL THROUGH THE RED SEA WE HAVE A GREAT DRAMA THAT LAYS HOLD OF THE SOUL.

Text: Ex. 14:10-16, 21, 22. The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for July 24.

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of The Congregationalist

The study of the lessons of this quarter, drawn from the early political and religious history of the Jewish people, will inevitably quicken in some minds the question, Did all these things actually happen?

For many the answer to such a question is found in their view of the Bible which they regard as a verbally inspired book in which every detail is authenticated by the very fact of its appearance in the record.

For others the matter is not so simple. They see in the Bible not only a book, but a book of many books coming to us through a long and rather difficult historical process in which many conflicting views and judgements have participated. The inspiration of the Bible, they find, in its distinctive general teaching and in its guidance for life rather than in any mechanical repetition of its accuracy of detail in every particular, or perhaps one should say the history of every detail.

In the early history of England we have such stories as that of King Canute putting his chair on the sea-side and bidding the incoming tide recede. The purpose and effect of that story, and its valuable lesson, are, of course, quite apparent, and have nothing to do with the question whether Canute did actually put his chair upon the shore or not. In the same way the spiritual teachings of the Bible depend only in a very secondary way upon critical questions and the attitude that one assumes toward them.

In these comments on the Sunday School lessons it is neither possible, nor desirable, to enter into these critical questions. Our quest and our emphasis are upon spiritual teaching. Here, for instance, in this story of the passing of the children of Israel through the Red Sea, and the destruction, by the returning waters of the pursuing hosts of Egypt, we have a great drama that lays hold of soul as well as that of the artistic mind.

It is an epic of deliverance, full of meaning and of inspiration for people to whom the Red Sea represents a barrier but also a gateway to the Promised Land which they are enabled to conquer through Divine Providence.

The experience is one that is not limited to the history of Israel. There are those even in our modern days of distress and trouble who are facing the experience in real, and it is this that gives us hope that society itself may pass through the waters of depression to the promised land of safety and deliverance.

Sunday Services at The Churches

HOLY ROSARY CHURCH

Mass at 7 a. m. This is the Tenth Sunday after Pentecost and the Gospel read to day is taken from St. Luke, XVIII, 9-14. Here we are told the story of the Pharisee and the publican who went into the temple to pray. The Pharisee was proud and left the temple unjustified and with his sins on his soul; but the publican was humble and left the temple free from sin because of his humility--"the highest virtue, mother of them all," as Tenyson wrote. Pride was the sin of the angels in heaven. It is also the ruin of many men; on earth.

FIRST METHODIST CHURCH

Sunday school at 9:30. S. H. Nance, Supt. Subject of the morning sermon, 11 o'clock, "Capitalizing Our Calamities." The evening hour will be devoted to a young people's service with the pastor preaching from the subject, "Square Plus in Round Holes". The Ely Orchestra will play before the services and Misses Madeline and Jewel Ely will give a special number. O. O. Odom, pastor.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

"Things That Matter Most" will be the subject of the morning service at the First Presbyterian church today. "Essentials in Christian Character" will be the subject of the evening sermon at eight o'clock.

Because their double duties are threatening them with physical breakdown, Eugene Meyer (top photo), governor of the federal reserve board, and Paul Bestor (below), farm loan commissioner, are to be relieved of their duties as directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Senate has agreed to President Hoover's proposal to appoint two other Republican directors to replace them.

Special music at both services. The public is cordially invited.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH In the absence of the pastor, E. L. Miley, who is conducting a revival meeting at Nacona, Professor W. F. Bruce, of Randolph College, will preach at the First Christian church during the morning services. His subject will be "Repentance." There will be no service at the evening hour.
