"Black Belt" of Windy City Scene Latest Riot; Destroy American Flag

Associated Press. CHICAGO, June 21.—All Chicago police are busy today scouring this city searching for R. D. Jonas, an alleged riot agitator, and three negroes, in connection with the rioting in Chicago's "Black Belt" last night, in which two white men were killed and two negroes were seriously injured.

The fight last night followed an attempt of the negroes to burn an American flag which was being carried at the end of a parade.

Seven negroes, who it is said led the parade, were arrested today.

REPORTER LOCATES JONAS. Associated Press. CHICAGO, June 21.—R. D. Jonas was found late today by a newspaper reporter, and told his version of the rioting here last night.

Jonas said he had met a fellow by the name of Redding, who posed as an Abyssinian, and other "Abyssinian princes," whom he had denounced as radicals to the federal authorities, without results.

Jonas said the Abyssinians called a meeting yesterday to boom Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago as their presidential candidate of the proposed third party.

The meeting was composed of Irish, negro and trade unionists, and was considering a treaty that was negotiated under the Roosevelt administration, which, if restored, would invalidate the Jim Crow laws of the south, as negroes who are claiming protection as Abyssinians could demand the right to travel on the same terms as the whites.

Hughes Exercises His Rhetorical Abilities in An Address Delivered Before Harvard Law School Today

Associated Press. CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 21.—Charles Evans Hughes, speaking at the Harvard Law School today, declared that "in the art of governing ourselves we not only fall short of the attainments we should expect of a free people with so great an intelligence, but we frequently present a sorry spectacle." "Passion for legislation is not a sign of democratic progress," he said, "and in the mass of measures introduced in the legislatures of our free commonwealth there is too little evidence of perspective and an over-abundance of elaborate, dreary futilities." "Occasionally a constructive measure of great benefit is skillfully planned, but we are constantly impressed by the lost motion and vast waste in the endeavor of democracy to function wisely."

THE LEADERSHIP IN CISCO REQUIRES—

Leadership has been so stamped on every hand with the brand of political ambition that men who are in a position to render a real service to the community have sought the seclusion of their own private businesses rather than have their efforts misconstrued. Nor can they be blamed for this attitude.

Doing something for the public has become to some such a thankless job that men unbolstered by political incentive have almost entirely deserted this field except for some few brave souls who stalk stoically down the lanes of public criticism, doing what they can, nor turning to heed the cries of those who stand along the side lines and assume to judge.

A national political convention has nothing but the welfare of the country and the ideals of its party at heart, apparently, until some one man is chosen to head that ticket. Then we see how much of that fabric is loyalty and patriotism and how much is envy and personal ambition.

But unfortunately for the humanness of our natures the ideals we visualize in the abstract are often repulsive to us when draped about another human being than ourselves, and we are more or less inclined to withdraw from things that we ourselves have sponsored when others are chosen to lead them.

whole rather than choose another man of stronger convictions, perhaps, but who might be blind to everything outside of those convictions. But no matter— The real leader of today is not the man who can dominate. It is not the man who believes that any one conviction or any set of convictions can embrace or solve the millions of problems of the world.

The real leader of today is the man who can preside; the man whose ears are open to every one; the man whose brain is a clearing house rather than a light-house with its single ray. In brief, a man who can grasp public sentiment, crystallize it and translate it into action.

That is the only kind of leadership Cisco requires, and the quicker we recognize it the better.

BORROWED, STOLEN AND CREATED

There is one class of people who could stay away from national conventions and the business would go on just the same. They are the delegates.

He left the office, but returned in a few minutes, poked his head in the doorway and asked: 'Shall I drop this in the eye before meals or after?'"

OPEN OPINIONS

DON'T GROWL, BUT SMILE. In your editorial of June 17th, you argued in favor of cleaning up around the Cisco passenger depot. I believe your motive commendable and beyond reproach.

However, it occurred to me that a statement of just how the repairs on the Cisco passenger depot were hastened by activities on this end would correct the inference of your editorial that our "growing" or our efforts impelled the railroad officials to make the improvements in our depot which have been brought about.

In the first place let us eliminate human "growing" from the vocabularies of the citizens in the "City Which Team-work is Building."

It is my recollection that the obtaining of the station repairs was a one-man proposition so far as Cisco was concerned, and the gentleman who, doubtless, was the sole cause of getting Cisco's request granted, instead of growling, with which the railroad people were already too well acquainted, smiled, asked pleasantly, yet firmly, for Cisco what he knew, and they knew was due her.

I remember this because this gentleman sought an interview with the chief engineer of the Texas & Pacific railroad in Dallas, and when the latter named a date impossible for his Cisco correspondent to meet him there, I made the journey in his stead.

Mr. Mitchell, the chief engineer, did not frown when I was ushered in, but smiled, and without one bit of growling pointed to a messenger from the Cisco gentleman, and stated that he was converted and that the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad officials, who had to be consulted, would also accede to Cisco's request.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of the West Presbyterian church met in regular session on June 8 with Mrs. A. J. Olson, 601 West Ninth street.

Much important business was transacted, and the study hour for the meeting was conducted by Mrs. E. P. Crawford.

After a delightful social hour, during which the guests were entertained by the young daughter of the hostess, Miss Rosalie Olson, with readings and piano solos, lovely refreshments were served by the hostess.

The next meeting will be held tomorrow afternoon, June 22, at 3 o'clock, with Mrs. E. P. Crawford, 509 West Fifth street.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winston had for their guests for a noon dinner Friday Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Finley and their daughter, Miss Gladys.

The fried chicken and summer vegetables that were served made this dinner one of which would make a hungry person wish he might have been one of the honored guests.

To please her many friends, Miss Joyce Langston received at her home on West Fifth street Friday afternoon. Her beautiful bridal costume and expensive wardrobe was on display, to the admiration of every guest that came. Miss Langston took pleasure in showing what she would wear when she became the bride of Paul Schmidt, in Los Angeles, California, in the near future. During the evening it was announced that the bride-to-be would sing her farewell song at the First Baptist church Sunday morning, and the announcement brought many of her admiring friends to listen to her sweet voice for the last time as Miss Joyce Langston.

There were no traces of the old home they once occupied; they found a modern home had been built on the site, and the street number on the house, in the days when they lived here, when asked where do you live, the answer was either near the church, or next door to "Mr. Somebody's" house.

New the Garrisons find the streets are numbered up into the twenties, and homes into the hundreds.

MOTHER THROWS HER CHILD TO DEATH UNDER AN AUTO TELLS PATHETIC STORY OF UNHAPPINESS

By MARGERY REX.

Mother of the human species are noted for excessive love of offspring. For their little ones they sacrifice to the point of suffering, toil without end and face any danger to protect them. Exceptions to the rule are few. The mother who will harm her child is rare. It is usually believed that she is crazy, suddenly gone mad. Mrs. Mary Marino of Brooklyn, wife of James Marino, threw her five-year-old daughter, Angelina, under an automobile, while in an argument with her husband. The couple were standing on Eastern Parkway quarreling. They had been separated for some time. Mrs. Marino says she believed Marino had been attentive to other women and was unwilling to provide for her; that he cared for his children, but not for her, and that he would not buy her a new dress because his interest in her was dead. Mrs. Marino was arraigned in the New Jersey Avenue Police Court. Creamy of skin, rounded features, tired eyes and smoothly drawn back, pale brown hair, the young mother stood calmly before the Magistrate. Her glance seemed to dwell on something far off as she listened calmly to the arraignment. More restless was James Marino, her husband, as he sat upon the witness stand. Thin faced, dalk and wiry, he made a striking contrast to his wife, who never looked at him. He was smartly dressed in a dark suit, good shoes—a touch of bright color in his green socks. He held a new Bangkok hat in his lap.

Mrs. Marino, because she is rather stout, looks older than she is to the casual observer. Perhaps that is why her garb appears more careless than that of her drapper mate. She has a simple, kind face.

Why, then, did Mrs. Marino kill her child?

After the arraignment she sat in a chair near the front of the courtroom. During our talk she remained calm enough till someone blunderingly spoke of her three children, forgetting that there are but two now, and that the death of one of them was the whole cause of the proceedings.

"My children," she sobbed. "There are only two now. If I could start again and live just for them—my children."

"Why did you do this?"

"I don't know," she said wearily. "I don't remember everything. I will tell you about my married life."

"My husband is Italian. I am of Polish descent. A difference in nationalities is built in marriage. It makes lots of trouble."

"Then there was his mother. We lived in her house. I went there when I was a bride. I was used to one sort of things to eat. She didn't like what I liked. I couldn't eat what she had and was not allowed to cook what I wanted. When I would leave the food on my plate his mother would say that I was not hungry and there was something the matter with me."

"Nothing I did was right. People from different countries do not understand each other."

"No couple should live with the mother of one of them. We moved away before Angelina was born—not so far—we lived next door. That was too near. We separated then. I thought he got tired of me. He liked the children, I guess, but he didn't want to do anything for me."

"If you are set free, will you live again with your husband?" Do you still love him?"

"I don't hate him," she admitted. "I can't hate him. If he acted right I would let along with him."

"After-—after-—I can't remember—the other day when it happened—a woman came up to me and said she saw it, and it was an accident, but some detectives drove her away. She could tell you it was an accident, and I wish I could find that woman. I wish she would come and tell what she saw. She was a young Jewish woman. I remember that much.

Nobody comes to see me but my mother. My husband hasn't been near me in the jail. Only my mother. She is the only one who stands by me. He never even sent me a note or anything."

During the arraignment the Magistrate ordered Marino to give his wife some money, saying she might like something in the way of food besides jail fare. Marino drew a bill out and handed it to the prisoner, who took it hastily, not looking up at him.

Perhaps—Mrs. Marino is to be believed—this husband would have done better to have handed out more bills at an earlier date.

It is expected that Mrs. Marino will give temporary aphasia or some such plea for her mad act.

Meanwhile the mother who through madness or other cause caused her child's death is protected and cheered by her own mother, who follows the immemorial habit of her kind.

The instinct to guide and protect its maternity's most admirable phase when it is not overdone, as in the case of a woman who tries to guide her offspring in matrimonial affairs, thereby obstructing desired domestic peace and quiet.

TEXARKANA, Tex., June 21.—The final chapter of a mother's sacrifice for her baby was written when Mrs. Lynne Frazier died recently while enroute to a hospital in Minnesota for treatment of progressive paralysis. Mrs. Frazier sustained injuries to her shoulders and spine when she was thrown from an overturning automobile with her infant baby in her arms near here several weeks ago. Those who saw the accident said that Mrs. Frazier cuddled the baby, which came through uninjured, in her arms and made no effort to use her hands to break the force of her fall.
