INDEPENDENTS URGE FEDERAL CONTROL

Two Men Are Arrested in Kidnaping of McMath Child

"GO-BETWEEN" ADMITS PLOT, SAY OFFICERS

BULLETIN.
HARWICH, Mass., May 6.— Police announced here this evening that the entire ransom paid for the return of kidnaped Peggy McMath, had been recovered.

HARWICH, Mass., May 6.—Cyril Buck, Harwich garage proprietor, and supposed intermediary in the Peggy McMath kidnaping case, and his brother, Kenneth Buck, were placed under arrest this afternoon after admitting, according to police, they were implicated in a four-man plot to abduct the 10-year-old girl.

Brig.-Gen. Daniel Needham announced the arrests after 16 hours of questioning Buck, Neil McMath, father of the victim, and William Lee, McMath's business associate. Needham said Kenneth Buck had been positively identified as the man in a hood who sat beside Cyril Buck when the kidnapers first picked up the girl's father.

State police had suspended operations in their wide search for the kidnapers of the girl after the child had been returned alive to her father upon payment of $60,000 ransom, and concentrated on solving the mystery of the girl's adventure by questioning those who brought her back and who helped raise the ransom. From a group of six men, including Peggy's father, authorities hoped to secure information which would lead to apprehension of the kidnapers and solution of the mystery.

Told Story.
The story of the kidnaped child was made public previously by Gen. Needham, state director of public safety.

It was a dramatic tale of blindfolds and ropes, of long imprisonment in darkness under the guard of a kindly man, and of treatment which drew a protest from her only once when she was served ham sandwiches for the third day in succession.

The girl was found with her father and several other men aboard a boat off Harwichport late yesterday.

As Needham had told the story Cyril Buck was approached by an agent of the kidnapers and asked to arrange negotiations. Buck insisted on proof the girl was alive and asked she be requested to tell the name of her pet dog. The kidnapers' agent returned with the name "Peter the Great," written in Peggy's handwriting, Needham said. That convinced the McMaths it was safe to negotiate and payment was arranged.

COMMITTEE PLANS TRADES DAY MAY 20TH

Members of a chamber of commerce committee, appointed to consider feasibility of a trades day coincident with the convention of the 17th district of the Texas department of the American Legion May 20 and 21, voted yesterday morning to promote such a trades day for Saturday, May 20, the first day of the convention.

"HEALER" GETS 50 YEARS IN CHILD'S DEATH

LINDEN, May 6.— Paul Oakley, self-claimed "faith healer", was found guilty of murder today and given a 50-year penitentiary sentence for the death of a three-year-old girl in a healing ceremony.

The state had asked the death penalty. The victim, Bernice Clayton, had been paralyzed from infancy. She died last December after Oakley, his brother, Coy, and her father, Sherman Clayton, conducted the ceremony in the Claytons' backwoods cabin near Linden.

Coy Oakley will be tried in Hopkins county, Sherman Clayton will be tried here later.

Testimony at the trial was that the defendant loved the afflicted child and desired to restore her to health. Witnesses told of his belief he was a supernatural being with god-like powers.

Two alienists testified Oakley was insane.

Holmes Resigns as Texas Company Head
NEW YORK, May 6.—C. P. Ames, president of the American Petroleum Ass'n, has been elected chairman of the Texas corporation and the Texas company, succeeding R. C. Holmes, resigned.

The resignation of Holmes, president of the Texas company since 1926, came as a surprise. He refused to comment on his resignation today but said he would issue a statement tomorrow.

Holmes took the initiative in cutting crude oil prices in the east Texas field following the present available order of 750,000 barrels daily.

STILL FOUND IN MANSION ONCE "CAPITAL" OF SOCIAL REALM

Gurgling irreverently in the huge mirrored room where the late Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont once ruled New York society, one of the largest stills ever seized in the New York area was discovered by federal agents. The top photo shows the huge boiler of the 5,000-gallon still, the copper columns of which go through the ceiling into the late society leader's ornate bedroom.

Below, exterior of the Belmonts' former summer home where the still was found. Five men, bunking in the servants' quarters, were arrested.

FIRE DEPARTMENT VOTES NOT TO COMPLY WITH ORDINANCE

The Cisco fire department, at its regular meeting Friday evening refused to comply with the terms of a city ordinance recently passed requiring the immediate nomination of three of its members for fire chief, one of whom would be chosen by the city commission to serve until January, 1934, the time fixed for the annual election of officers.

The department, without a dissenting vote, passed a motion to refuse to comply for the reason that the department at a regular meeting last January had elected all officers called for in the by-laws of the department and in accordance with the department and city ordinances existing at the time. The motion also expressed the willingness of the department to consider with the commission the question of nominating officers next January as provided for in the new ordinance.

It instructed the secretary to inform the city commission of this action.

New Ordinance.
The ordinance passed by the city commission last Monday provides for the nomination of three members of the department for the position of chief, the nominations to be made on the first Friday in each January and submitted to the commission which will elect therefrom a chief to serve for a period of one year. Election of the remaining officers of the department is left to the department without necessity of confirmation by the commission.

Another provision required the department to make three nominations Friday night from which the commission was to choose a chief to serve the remainder of the current term. An emergency clause attached to the ordinance made it effective immediately upon passage at one reading. The commission explained this action with the statement that, according to existing ordinances, there is at present no duly qualified chief of the department. C. O. Pass is the present chief. He declared that he had been elected in accordance with regulations and with a mutual agreement entered into between the commission and the department two years ago when the fire department "was divorced from the city and told to elect its own officers."

Called Meeting.
"They told us at that time," said Mr. Pass to a called meeting of the department Friday afternoon attended by a number of business men, "that they didn't want to have anything more to do with the fire department and that we could elect our own officers and run the department ourselves."

Practically all of the business men present at the called meeting declared a desire that the department continue to be operated as it is. The argument was advanced that to submit to the terms of the new ordinance would cause a disruption of the department and consequently high insurance rate penalties which would have to be borne by the property owners and business men. The efficiency of the department was praised.

The commission, on the other hand, has taken the position that the department is approaching an unsatisfactory state and that a closer supervision is essential if efficiency is to continue. It declared that under the present arrangement the commission has no voice in the department.

WEST CENTRAL TEXAS GROUP WIRES ICKES

Asserting that Texas authorities have "made political football" out of the oil industry the West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association, through its president J. D. Sandefur, Jr., of Breckenridge, Saturday wired Sec'y of Interior Ickes endorsing "direct federal control and supervision of the oil and gas industry."

The message said that thousands of employees of the oil industry are being thrown out of work over the district because of operators shutting down production. It also said that the association opposes compulsory unitization in the belief that it would give the major companies a distinct advantage over independent operators.

The wire was approved by directors of the association scattered throughout 16 counties of this section of the state it was understood. This action on the part of the west central Texas operators unit is in direct contrast to the attitude of the Independent Petroleum association of Texas which has taken a strong stand against federal supervision.

Earlier in the week a telegram from that association urging local operators to protest against a purported recommendation for the appointment of a federal "dictator" was ignored when Cisco independents decided to take no action. This passive attitude was tantamount to approval of federal control, although some opposition to it was expressed.

"Complete Failure"
Sandefur's wire to Sec'y Ickes declares that Texas authorities have made a "complete failure" of proration and conservation laws enforcement. It challenges the position of the Independent Petroleum association of Texas as representing the sentiment of "bonafide independent operators" of the state.

The wire:
"We heartily endorse direct federal control and supervision of the oil and gas industry in the United States. Texas authorities have made a complete failure of proration and enforcement of conservation laws and are making political football of the oil industry. We are opposed to compulsory unitization believing it would give major companies distinct advantages over independent operators. Thousands of employees are now being discharged by operators shutting down production in our district which is composed of sixteen west central Texas counties. Our organization consists of three hundred bonafide independent oil and gas operators and royalty owners. To our personal knowledge the Independent Petroleum association of Texas does not represent sentiment of bonafide independent operators of this state.

West Central Texas Oil and Gas Association.
J. D. SANDEFUR, JR., Pres. Cisco has two directors in the association, J. A. Bearman and W. W. Wallace. Mr. Wallace told the Daily News yesterday that he heartily endorsed the message. Mr. Bearman declined to comment on the telegram Saturday afternoon.

IMPROVED BUSINESS IN TEXAS.

The University of Texas bureau of business research in its early May report revealed improved business conditions in Texas during March. For instance, the Texas cotton textile industry made a much more impressive showing than was to be expected on the basis of unusual seasonal increase, "with sales, production, and unfilled orders gaining by much more than the usual seasonal proportions and showing substantial gains all last year."

Unfilled orders at Texas mills, according to the survey, jumped 24 per cent during March to the highest total for any month since October, 1929. In addition to this, fewer Texas commercial failures were reported in March this year than in any other March since 1920.

Only 32 Texas firms went into bankruptcy during the month. Not since September, 1929, has the number of failures been so small. In March last year there were 79 failures. According to present indications, the survey estimates the Texas wheat crop would be about 18,500,000 bushels as compared with the actual harvest of 29,500,000 bushels in 1932 and 56,000,000 bushels in 1931.

A reminder that federal agents of the department of agriculture predict an increased acreage planted to cotton in 1933. Why should the cotton growers invite continuous financial disaster?

BRATTON GIVEN LIFE JOB.

U. S. Sen. Sam G. Bratton of New Mexico has been handed a life job by Pres. Roosevelt. Sen. Bratton is a democrat; he is widely known in Texas from the Gulf to the Rockies, and has been one of the outstanding leaders of the democrats of the Spanish-American commonwealth.

He has accepted an appointment to be a judge of the 10th district court of appeals but will remain in the senate until the special session ends. Bratton and Sen. Bronson Cutting are warm personal friends.

Cutting is a newspaper publisher, a man of wealth and high culture, an independent republican who followed the flag of Roosevelt as against the flag of Hoover in the election last year. He is the scion of an old New England family, one of the scholars of the American senate, and a power in the politics of his adopted state.

Bratton fought his way to the top. Now a life job as a federal judge is a position of honor and trust not to be sneezed at in these so-called days of world-wide economic wars and strife.

TEXAS AND ITS SALT QUARRIES.

Grand Saline is a flourishing town in the county of Van Zandt. Experts have said that the deposits of saline ore are considered to be sufficient to last for 2400 more years. Also that Belgium, once the salt center of Europe, required more than 1000 years of mining to deplete its salt dome.

Now one of the largest salt domes in the world is located at Grand Saline, where the deposit is over two miles in length and over one mile wide. Its surface is underlaid with 99 per cent pure white rock salt to a depth of about 3000 feet. It is estimated the dome contains over 20,000,000 tons of pure

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—A large gob of the Roosevelt emergency legislation, according to rather common opinion here, is headed straight toward the supreme court.

It will take quite a while to get there and no one knows what circumstances will then be in, but the issue of constitutionality has been raised at least every other time an important new measure has come up in Congress.

Optimists are confident that the court's so-called "liberal majority" will take cognizance of the stress of the times and the emergency nature of the Roosevelt program. And it's likely that President Roosevelt will have been able to appoint a man of his own choice to the court before the test cases begin to reach it.

THE measures for inflation, the 30-hour week with a minimum wage provision, farm relief, munitions embargoes, beer, banking and securities regulation and government reorganization are a few of those which have been questioned. Lawyers in the Department of Justice have been studying steadily so they may be able to support any measure of the administration that may be taken into the courts.

The enormous and unprecedented delegation of power to the president by Congress present the most controversial issue from the constitutional point of view. In some cases Congress is delegating to Roosevelt and members of his cabinet discretionary powers which seem obviously within its own province of legislation.

Sometimes a measure is proposed which allows the administration a choice of one, all or none of several alternatives—as in the inflation measure and the farm bill. Or the president may be given drastic powers which he may invoke when and if, in his judgment and after investigation, certain contingencies arise.

THERE is much weight behind the assertion that the supreme court must virtually revamp the Constitution—through new interpretations—if the Roosevelt measures are to stand on the statute books.

Nearly all the arguments centering on the constitutionality of the various delegations of congressional power to the president are based on the case of J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Company versus United States, decided by the supreme court in 1928. This decision upheld the flexible provision of the Fordney-McCumber tariff act enabling the president, after investigation of differences of production costs in competing countries, to alter tariff rates. The Hampton company argued that, if it were allowed to stand, Congress could then also commit the fixing of the rate of every federal tax to the executive branch.

THE supreme court, in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Taft, said that Congress had described clearly its policy and plan in the tariff act.

But "it is a breach of fundamental law if Congress gives up its legislative power and transfers it to the president." And "in determining what it may do in seeking assistance from another branch, the extent and character of that assistance must be fixed according to common sense and the inherent necessities of the governmental co-ordination." "The true distinction, therefore," said the court, "is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made."

Government of the People, by the People, for the People salt. Indeed, the experts say salt will be produced from the Grand Saline dome long after the oil and gas resources of Texas have been depleted. Then they say unless a synthetic substitute is developed salt mining should take first place among Texas' natural resources. At present average prices for salt, the natural value of the Grand Saline dome is over 400 billion dollars.

Texas has the largest sulphur deposits in the world. There are phosphate beds in certain West Texas counties whose value some day will be staggering to the mind.

There are beds of iron ore in East Texas awaiting development. They say that the iron kings of Pennsylvania are the owners of the land or hold options.

Texas has the largest natural gas reservoirs in the world. Its supply is being depleted at a rapid rate. It is piped for domestic purposes to thousands of outside cities and towns, and for fuel purposes to the industrial centers of the North and the West and perhaps the East. Its oil wells today are more than staggering to the mind. It has millions of acres of tillable land untouched by hoe or plow or tractor. It has all the chalks and the clays. It has millions and millions of tons of lignite. It has asphalt beds. Why should the government of Texas be poverty-stricken?

president. He refused to give the proposal his approval. His viewpoint was that with petroleum selling at 10 cents a barrel in the East Texas field "Something Should Be Done." Yes, the senate "did something."

CRACK DOWN ON BOOTLEGGERS

Speaking of gasoline tax evasion and the running of "hot oil", an example should be made of those who are robbing the treasury of its just dues and this, too, without delay. It is said that "justice travels with a leaden heel, but it strikes mighty hard." It has been traveling at the pace of a snail, and it is high time that its agents of law were "striking mighty hard" to turn four million dollars annually into the general revenue fund for the maintenance of highways and the support of the public schools of the commonwealth.

President's Message Hikes Pay of 2,000

"Something Must Be Done" for Sick Petroleum Industry Says Sec'y Ickes

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALE

Speaking of the petroleum industry, Secy. Harold Ickes of the department of interior has sounded this slogan: "Something Should Be Done."

Secy. Ickes said in submitting to Pres. Roosevelt a bill drafted by a group of oil men which would make the secretary of the interior a virtual dictator of that industry. Moreover, the measure was not drawn at the instance of the secretary and in submitting it he said he had not given it his approval. He added, however, that with the present demoralization in the oil industry and with petroleum selling at 10 cents a barrel in the East Texas field, the aforesaid industry is face to face with a crisis. Pres. Roosevelt declined to express himself on the measure.

According to the Associated Press, among those who frame the bill, based along the line of a measure previously introduced by Sen. Arthur Capper of Kansas, were Joseph G. Guffey, a Pennsylvania oil man; Aron G. Carler of Fort Worth, a newspaper publisher; M. L. Bennett a Pittsburg oil man; and James Moffett of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey. In addition to all this the Washington A. P. corresponding announced the presence in the city of Washington of a group of landowners and independent oil operators, who journeyed to Washington to present their views on the East Texas oil industry to the president. It is said that many who attended the conference endorsed the 15-point plan outlined at the recent oil conference in Washington and expressed belief that separation of pipelines from oil companies would help their cause. Furthermore, these East Texas independents discussed vigorously the production of "hot oil" in the field.

LEASING OF OIL LAND

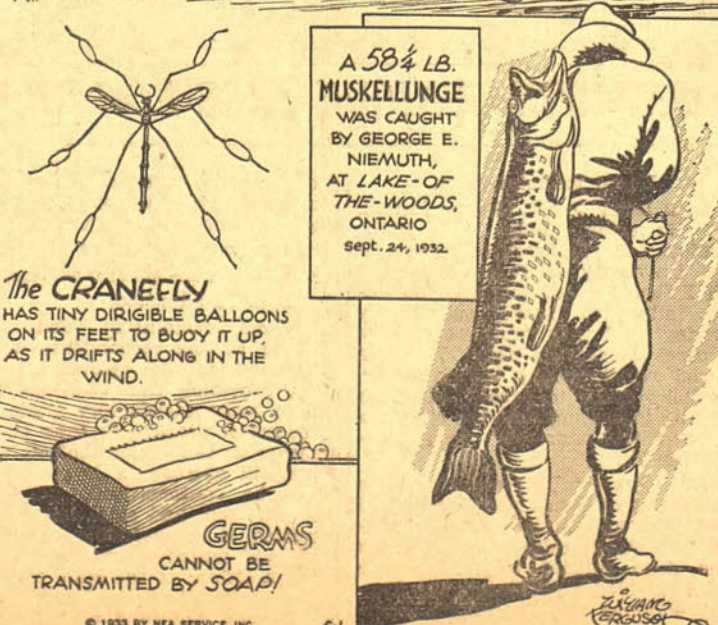

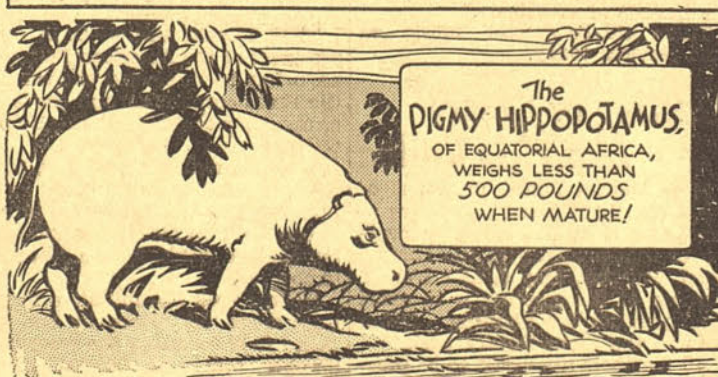

Now the board for lease of university lands has announced for May 20 a sale of oil and gas rights to state lands in Crockett, Upton and Pecos counties.

All of which is a reminder that the personnel of the leasing board was recently changed by the board of regents of the University of Texas who had the power to name two of its members to serve with Gen. Land Commr. J. H. Walker. Charles I. Francis of Wichita Falls and Beauford H. Jester of Corsicana were appointed to succeed Edward Crane of Dallas and R. L. Holdiday of El Paso.

This is a fast moving civilization. For instance, the Texas senate voted to kill a bill to create an oil and gas conservation commission. Purpose of the measure was to strip the railroad commission to the bone, so to speak, and place the oil and gas industries of the state in the hands of three commissioners to be appointed, should the measure have run the gauntlet of the lawmakers. Atty. Gen. James V. Alfred fought the measure to the last ditch. He had denounced it in scathing words and had defended the railroad commission and its proration order for the stabilization of the oil industry in Texas. Now what will the president do? What action will Secy. Ickes take? He is not responsible for the drafting of the bill submitted to the

BEHOLD HERE TODAY

MONNIE O'DARE, who works in a Belvedere drug store and helps to support her small brother, younger sister and mother, is in love with DAN CARDIGAN, whose parents are wealthy. CHARLES EUSTACE, handsome newcomer in town, berates her and her brother, BILL, who works in a garage. Monnie suspects SANDRA LAWRENCE, who pretends to be her friend, of undermining her with Dan. BILL plans to marry ANGE GILLEN, who works in a candy shop, as soon as she gets a divorce. Dan telephones, asking Monnie to see him, but she refuses. Monnie, who is about 16-year-old KAY, disconcerted at home, Charles Eustace invites them to a dinner party.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IX

SANDRA pursed her lips, watching her slim, cool reflection in the glass and approving it. Her frock was of white lace, deliberately ingenious. Sandra was not the ingenue—far from it—but occasionally she chose the role.

A horn sounded below stairs and she snatched up a brief wrap of green silk and hurried out of the room. On the stairs she passed a maid in trimmest black. "I'll be late tonight, Hetty. Tell Father," Sandra directed. The servant's small dark eyes flickered at her mistress for a moment with a hint of antagonism. Instantly quenched, her reply was perfectly respectful. "Very well, Miss Sandra."

There was the rustle of soft draperies, the hint of an elusive scent on the stairs. A door slammed and gears clashed noisily. A motor purred away into the summer evening.

Lilac and rose and blue stained the western sky. The air was delightful—warm, yet fresh—and as the car slipped westward the odors of summer night in the country drifted to the nostrils of the two occupants of the car. "Nice," purred Sandra, slipping her long, white hand, with its red jewels of pointed nails, around her escort's arm.

Dan Cardigan grinned down at her. "Lady, you said it!" That was Dan. The argot of the man in the street served him for speech. In spite of all his background and training Dan talked, Sandra recalled lightly, rather like a roustabout. She didn't mind. She liked everything about him—his bigness, his frown, his masculinity. Liked? Well, that was a mild word.

"Who's going to be there? At Charles' place, I mean," she inquired idly. Dan shrugged. "Dunno. Probably the Waterman crowd." "Oh, I don't think so. I hope not," protested Sandra. "They're awfully dull. Oh, Danny, if they are you'll have to take me away early. I shall perish of boredom." "Wait and see," advised Dan. Sandra slumped luxuriously in the roadster's low seat. After a moment she demanded, "Give me a cigaret, Danny, like an angel."

WITHOUT removing his eyes from the road, Dan produced a packet, lighted a cigaret, and put it between the pouting lips of the girl. Sandra narrowed her eyes, squinting through the smoke. Most men took advantage of such tiny intervals to snatch a kiss or two. It wasn't—it couldn't be—that Dan thought her unattractive. "Absurd," she muttered to herself. "What did you say, Beautiful?" she drawled the object of her thoughts. She patted his coat sleeve possessively. "Nothing." They drove on in silence for another minute. Then Sandra said suddenly, confidentially, "Remember what we talked about yesterday, Dan?" A slow red burn under the man's deep tan and his voice sounded embarrassed. "Guess I said too much. Didn't mean to rave on so but Mother burned me up at lunch. I had to talk to someone."

Dan stared at the pretty face. Before he knew what was happening, his lips were pressed ardently to Sandra's provocative ones.

"I know, Danny dear." Sandra was all gentle understanding. "It's difficult. It's terribly so. But—has it ever occurred to you that perhaps your mother's right?" Dan slowed the car a little, turning to stare at her. "About Monnie? You mean? But I thought—but you said—" He seemed bewildered. "I know, Dan. I'm terribly fond of Monnie. You know that. She's had a difficult time. She works hard. She's a splendid girl. We all know it. But here's the point—are you two suited? Is it worth all the fuss and fighting it's sure to cause in your family? Remember, Dan, your father's awfully proud of you. He's expecting great things. You'll have a position to maintain some day. Not just here but in Cleveland—in New York. You might be—why, Dan, there's no reason at all why you shouldn't do something really big! In politics, or something like that." Her eyes widened. "What's that got to do with Monnie?" Dan wanted to know.

SANDRA hesitated. "Monnie's all right," she admitted slowly. "But—it's the family, Dan. They're—after all, we might as well face facts—they're nobody. Her brother works in a garage. Her young sister's rather wild, I hear. It's just not the sort of thing that would sound awfully good later on if a man were to go in for public life." "Whoever said I was going in for it?" asked Dan, mildly humorous. But Sandra could see the idea had appealed to him. She pressed the point. "All these things seem so unimportant now," she said, gently. "A man doesn't know at 22 what he wants to be in 10 years. He has to plan—look ahead—or someone else has to do it for him. Many splendid men I've found their lives all warped and twisted because they'd chosen the wrong sort of wives."

"But Monnie isn't—" Dan began protesting. "I know, Dan. I know. Haven't I, asked Sandra, smiling ruefully, "done everything possible to help Monnie? Not that I think it's done much good, really. I'm afraid, deep down, she doesn't honestly like me." She sighed and brushed at her eyes lightly with a whisp of chiffon and lace. "No, Danny, dear," she continued, still in that dulcet, stately tone. "I can see both sides of the question. I see yours and Monnie's and I see your parents', who are proud of you and want the best. How can they be sure it's not just a boy and girl infatuation? How can anyone of us know it isn't?" Dan growled something unintelligible and averted his car into the driveway curving before the little old stone and timber house where Charles Eustace lived.

"Don't be cross, Danny-boy," pleaded Sandra prettily as they came to a halt under the porte cochere. "You know I want the best for you, too, don't you?" She was very close to him. Dan, hurt, puzzled and somehow definitely annoyed, stared down at the pretty face lifted to his. Before he knew what was happening his lips were pressed ardently to Sandra's provocative ones. There was a sigh and then Sandra slipped out of his grasp and through the door. "Danny, I can't imagine what's getting into us," she breathed, scandalized. "I'm sorry—didn't mean—" muttered the man, following her. In Sandra's long-lashed eyes was a suppressed glimmer of triumph.

been utterly unprepared for the shock of seeing Sandra arrive with Dan. For an instant, not meaning to, she had stared at the pair below. Then she had seen Dan's face hover for an instant close to the girl's—had seen the sudden, brief but passionate kiss that followed. One felt sick and faint. Her blood hummed in her ears. Where should she go—what should she do to escape? She turned, like a hunted thing. There was a sharp rattle at Charles' knocker now. The servant was hurrying in response. None of the people in the little fireside group—neither Kay, sparklingly pretty in her old pink organdie, nor Charles Eustace, the host, nor his New York friend, Webster Hullam—had witnessed the tableau. Monnie alone knew what had passed between Sandra and Dan just before the opening of the door.

She braced herself to meet them. "Hello, Dan!" "Hello, Monnie. This is nice." The shadow of annoyance crossed Sandra's mobile countenance and was instantly erased. "Monnie, darling. What fun!" Sandra was more effusive than usual. That, thought Monnie, was her guilty conscience. "Cocktails, everybody!" Charles Eustace, very splendid in his white flannels and double-breasted blue coat, held up the shaker. "That is, everybody but Miss Kay. She's a baby and can only have orange juice."

Kay pouted without really meaning it. Monnie, usually so concerned over all that happened to her young sister, scarcely heard. She was in a maze—she scarcely knew what to do or say. Sandra and Dan! Then it was true. It was true! Her instinct had warned her, time after time, and her instinct had been right. "Here's to you!" Charles Eustace said, saluting her. He drank. He offered her his arm. "Will you let me take you in to dinner?" (To Be Continued)

CLEMENTS SAYS HE MADE RACE IN GOOD FAITH

Joe Clements resigned city commissioner, Saturday issued a statement in which he declared that "any report to the contrary" he had asked for re-election as city commissioner "in good faith", believing that the amendment to the city charter limiting remuneration of city commissioners to $12.50 per month would not carry. He had made the race in the belief that he would be able to carry on the duties of full-time street commissioner at a living wage, he said, but since this is not possible he felt he must resign the office in order to make a living for his family.

"I cannot leave home at present to secure employment," he said. His statement:

To the Citizens of Cisco: When I asked for the votes of Cisco citizens to re-elect me to the office of city commissioner, I did so in good faith, regardless of any reports to the contrary. I believed the amendment reducing the remuneration of all commissioners to a maximum of $12.50 per month would not carry, and that I would be enabled to continue in the capacity of street commissioner at a living wage. I know that I had saved the city money by undertaking this work, and I felt that my work was satisfactory, inasmuch as I endeavored to give value received for every dollar paid me.

Since the amendment carried, and I cannot continue as street commissioner at a salary commensurate with my services, I feel that I must resign the office, in order that I may make a living for my family. The majority of you are my friends, and you understand that I cannot leave home at present to secure employment. The other commissioners understand my situation thoroughly and although they have been cut to $12.50 maximum salary per month, and are making a great sacrifice in order to serve our city with practically no remuneration, they are willing to accept my resignation, in order that I may continue working in Cisco.

I sincerely trust that my friends will all understand my situation, and that they will not censure me for resigning that I may not have to leave home for employment, nor blame the other commissioners for giving me employment. Trusting that every loyal citizen of our town will uphold the commissioners in their endeavors to serve the best interests of Cisco, and to remember that they are practically giving their best efforts for this cause, I remain, Yours for Cisco, first, last and always, JOE CLEMENTS.

Increase Is Shown In Car Loadings

WASHINGTON, May 6—Improved business conditions were reflected today in reports of increased car loadings which reached new heights for the year and in some cases exceeded the loadings of 1931 and 1932.

Miscellaneous freight loadings stimulated by beer shipments increased 21,652 cars above the week ending April 22 and 6,573 above the week ending April 29, 1932. It was the first time the association had reported a car loading increase this year above corresponding 1932 figures.

Loadings of livestock and grain products rose sharply, especially in the southwest where April 29 figures represented increases above the corresponding week in 1932.
