C. Patterson said today. Based on the number of farmers who have agreed to sign contracts to remove portions of their crops from cotton production, it is estimated at approximately 8,000 acres will have been offered for plowing up, he said.

FARM PROSPERITY.

William G. Sheppard of the staff of Colliers' Weekly completed a whirlwind tour of the principal agricultural states. In the current number of the weekly, Sheppard, who was for years a widely known correspondent of the A. P. and the U. P. news gathering associations, prints an eye-witness picture of what he calls the "new boom" in the states he visited on his whirlwind trip. This is his foreword: "Boom is an inadequate word for what has happened. Everywhere things are looking up for the farmer. Wherever I went I had a sense of gold rush."

His description of the flight of level from the low to the high in the prices of corn and hogs is a thrilling story. He did not overlook Texas, the leading agricultural state. "I stopped to look at Texas," he said. "The coming wheat crop, already being harvested in Texas, will be shortest for various reasons for over 20 years. This crop will bring prices to the farmer that will pay taxes, will pay interest, help to redeem mortgaged lands and pay him a profit. The government has provided for rearrangement of mortgages, for extensions of time and for a reduction of at least 1 per cent in interest. The mortgage pressure has been taken off. If the farmer borrows from government sources, he may stretch out his mortgage to as long as 34 years, and thus spread his debt so that it will visit upon even the second generation. The farmer who was not completely ruined has been saved. His worries are becoming only ordinary ones. He is sleeping again nights and whistling as the golden yellow harvest of 1933 comes into view."

Of the swine industry, Sheppard says that hogs have doubled in value; that wherever you go in the Mid-West you see hogs; that one hog today will pay as much taxes as two hogs would have paid not long before, or will buy twice as many pairs of shoes.

There is another side to the picture of prosperity. "It is almost certain that the increase in food prices will be passed on to those who buy at the grocery store and the meat market. But that bridge must be crossed when we get to it. The farmer is whistling again, the farmer who for a dozen years had seen prices falling, who at last finds that the upward turn has come and prices are advancing by leaps and bounds."

There are pessimists, of course. In a sense, many of the plans of the New Deal administration are more than extraordinary — they are revolutionary. Those of an optimistic turn of mind, who demanded that the American people get out of the ditch and go somewhere, are willing to gamble on the future and are more than hopeful that a new America based on constitutional lines will give the people of the republic in this new civilization a prosperity based on the industry and honesty and plain living habits and customs of the pioneers of 157 years who made this republic what it was before the coming of the Grundys and their type of lawmakers and beneficiaries of class legislation and almost made a complete wreck of the fabrics of government as well as the economic structures of the social order.

DANIELS' DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Josephus Daniels is the American ambassador to the republic of Mexico. He is the publisher of one of the outstanding daily newspapers of the Old South. He was for eight years secretary of the navy in the cabinet of Woodrow Wilson. Franklin D. Roosevelt was his first aide in those memorable years. Roosevelt became president of the United States. His old first aide was given the most important post, diplomatically speaking, in the Latin-American world.

Ambassador Daniels, in an independence day speech at the American embassy July 4, made this broad declaration: "A new declaration of independence from favoritism and privilege is needed for this day and hour. The growth of semi-feudalism in the United States has made it largely a nation of feudal lords without the responsibilities and obligations assumed by the liege lord in the operations of the systems of the Old World."

He was addressing a large audience of the American colony in Mexico City and minor cities of the sisterhood republic. Facing his fellow-countrymen he said: "The hour has struck for a new declaration of independence to get rid of the yoke of favoritism, the tyrannical rule of privilege, and this declaration phrased to suit the modern era would be something like the following:" First, "that the national resources of the country are the right and are the property of all the people not to be sequestered or transferred or monopolized for the enrichment of any group." Second, "that in the pursuit of happiness every willing worker has an inalienable right to a job, and that it is the duty of governments to exercise the necessary wise statesmanship to insure him of the opportunity to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow." Third, "that possession of liberty must include the unrestricted right of freedom of thought, of speech, or worship and the control for the public weal of all agencies of government and all sources of industry when such control is necessary to insure the welfare of all the people or to prevent monopoly."

His fourth point declared for the substitution of arbitration in the high court of reason rather than by recourse to arms for the very substantial logic "that assured peace is the highest goal and the essential condition to permanent restoration."

Born in a country village in North Carolina, Josephus Daniels was on his own at 14 as a printer boy. Rung by rung he ascended the ladder. All through his career as an editor and publisher as well as a public servant he has followed the flag of his own convictions, bowed to the constitution and ever championed the rights of the many. He is not a socialist, he is not a red, he is for the so-called capitalistic system, with all its defects, but he would not destroy the system or ravish the constitution, the paladium of American liberty, in removing the defects. Read the high points of his declaration of independence and the dullest of Americans may readily understand the creed of this all-American ambassador and public servant.

The Dollar at Home Is American Government's First Duty

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

In his famous message of instruction to the America delegates who are floundering around and about at the world economic congress, Pres. Roosevelt made this very important declaration: "Revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is the end from which the government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear. We are interested in American commodity prices. What is to be the value of the dollar in value of foreign currency is not and cannot be our immediate concern. When the currencies of those great nations of the continent of Europe—France and Italy and Belgium—depreciated over a period of years—there was no criticism from us nor did we criticize their ultimate devaluation. And when Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries went off the gold standard there was only sympathetic understanding in the United States."

Gold standard nations of Europe meaning the French bloc, depreciated their own currency for a purpose. Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries did the same. If it is a blow-up on the other side, let it go at that. It is for the American government, meaning the people of the United States, to back the American dollar to the limit at home and abroad.

INTERNATIONAL STABILIZATION OF MONEY

One of the ablest industrial captains of the southwest, a lifelong democrat and a man of large wealth, on July 3 sent a letter to a Texas senator. It covers credit and currency, speaking of the international stabilization of money. Read it:

"My dear senator—As you are aware, article 1, section 8 of the constitution reads in part, 'the congress shall have the power ... to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin ...' Section 10 of the same article reads in part, 'No state shall coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin or tender in payment of debts ...' In considering the problem of the standardization of money from the viewpoint of a layman rather than a lawyer or an expert, the following are two most important factors as applied to the use of a metallic base, whether gold or silver, or whether both: First, weight; second, fineness. From the standpoint of demand (other than for use as currency) neither of the metals may be considered as having appreciable intrinsic value and are largely dependent on their use as money by governments of issue in maintaining the equivalent value at which they have been exchanged.

Further factors are: Third, national wealth, area, population, natural resources, income, foreign indebtedness, and net wealth, in turn determining; fourth, the volume of money that may issue soundly; fifth, that all nationalities may provide for free coinage; sixth, using the dollar here as the yardstick; seventh, each grain of fine gold to be fixed at five cents; eighth, value of money in terms of gold be standardized as follows:

Franc	1 grain	$ .05
Lira	1 grain	.05
Belgia	.3 grains	.15
Mark	5 grains	.25
Florin	8 grains	.40
Dollar	20 grains	1.00
Pound	100 grains	5.00

EFFECT OF ADOPTING PLAN

"The effect of adopting the above" the letter reads "would be to increase the value of the miner of the gold in the dollar from $20.67 to $24.00 per ounce, instead of the $41.34 maximum permissible under the dictated on the adoption and maintenance of gold and silver at fixed standard of weight and fineness. Twelfth, all reserve against credit issues by banks to be adjusted to conform with the volume of money authorized or outstanding and changed from time to time in conformity therewith. Thirteenth, adopting such a plan would of course call for certain readjustments and a redistribution of gold and silver phase of the question that I am not assuming to enter into here, feeling that if the principles of uniform standard of weight, fineness and interchange is accepted, nations such as France and the United States who are supplied with abundant stock of gold may proceed at once, allowing the question of redistribution between nationalities to be worked out and put into effect later. The importance of such a plan would be in removing the intricacies that now apply to foreign money and foreign exchange thus enabling the business man or the citizen, as well as the banker, to readily compute the national or international monetary terms the value of what he is exchanging in property, commodities or service."

WRITER A ROOSEVELT DEMOCRAT

As has been said, the writer of the letter to a Texas senator is one of the outstanding democrats of the southwest, a business executive of extraordinary capacity, a man whose knowledge of international affairs, including finance, commands respect at Washington as well as Texas and who despite his financial success (never as a politician or an office holder) has ever been sound to the core in the battles for a government of the people and the protection of the rights of all instead of "the golden interests of the few."

Through the Editor's Spectacles

By GEORGE

The problem of putting over the federal government's ambitious cotton acreage reduction program is a clerical one and not one of convincing the farmers that they should cooperate to their own salvation, to judge from the experience of Eastland and adjoining counties. The fact that as much as 5,566,000 acres had already by Saturday been pledged for removal in advices reaching Washington should be taken as a cheering sign.

The amount of work that must be done to get all contracts in proper form for government acceptance is staggering to the mind which regards the program as a mere question of yes or no. When the human element is figured into the calculation there is ample reason for some frenzied hair-tearing on the part of the over-anxious. County agents and local vocational instructors who are devoting their time to organizing and conducting the campaigns are doing some splendid work. Their value to the community and the county is nowhere better illustrated than in the work they are doing to push along this campaign. Eastland county has already, on the basis of contracts signed or indicated promised exceed the quota fixed for it. Counties located in the black land belts or other areas where earlier planting weather has advanced the crop beyond its local stage can not be expected to fall too readily into the program, because it means for them plowing up stalks that are already beginning to square.

The new federal building is rapidly taking its ultimate form. The building will be one of the most attractive in this part of the country. It is unfortunate, however, that the government's propensity for red brick places it in such contrast with the light gray tones of the telephone building a block away. A harmony of color between these two would have increased the attractiveness of the area they occupy. However, as is, the structures represent several thousand per cent improvement and Cisco ought to be proud of them.

Some sort of a celebration ought to be planned for the formal opening of the new federal building. There is another task for the chamber of commerce and for President R. L. Poe's "young blood" formula. The formula worked mighty well with the Fourth of July entertainment. Given a couple of mouth pieces, or more if necessary, the youngsters should be able to work out a fitting expression of Cisco's appreciation of the federal government's gift.

I have been accused by J. T. Elliott of telling other folks how to run their businesses through this column. I submit that the estimable ex-commissioner's charge is quite unjust. This column, of necessity inured with some of my own ideas and prejudices, is dedicated to the function of a gossip and not by any means to the exalted dominion of a kibitzer.

I have too much trouble trying to convince the better half at our home how to run our own business to invite more by meddling in other folks' affairs.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

By EDSON R. WAITE
Shawnee, Oklahoma.

J. David Stern, publisher of the Philadelphia Record, says:

"Advertising is becoming more intelligent. During the past thirty years there has been a constant rise in the level of advertising appeal. Not only are the large advertising agencies which prepare the big national campaigns employing better talent to design and write the advertising, but they are attuning their copy to a more intelligent audience."

"The day is past of flamboyant, balmy advertising with crude illustrations and absurdly superlative claims."

"Up to date advertising is the logical argument of an intelligent salesman addressing intelligent prospects."

"Advertisers have abandoned the idea of editing their copy down to the masses. As a result American advertising has become one of the greatest educational and cultural forces in our social organism. It has changed our diet, telling us what food to eat, and when, and how to prepare it. It has changed our home life by introducing a multitude of labor-saving devices which lessen the drudgery of housework. It has influenced our styles of architecture, and the materials with which we build our homes; the way we dress, the shoes we wear, the books and magazines we read. It has indicated laws of health and hygiene, standards of personal cleanliness. From baby's food to burial plots, the whole course of our lives has been influenced tremendously by advertising, which has become more forceful as it has become more intelligent."

"Future historians tracing the trend of our civilization will recognize the great influence of advertising upon our customs, styles and ideas. It has speeded up the development of our nation. What is more important, it has knit together the nation by making the development uniform throughout the land."
