people shortly after the Christian era. The discovery, however, that came interested in Panhandle archaeology, the man who has made the job his life's work, is Mr. Holm, of the Department of Anthropology at the University of Texas. Mr. Holm, who has been studying the history of the Panhandle region for many years, has written several important articles on the subject. In a recent issue of the "Texas Quarterly," published by the Texas Technological College, he described his latest research findings on the ancient Panhandle race.

"It is highly probable that the ancient Panhandle race was influenced by the peoples of the American Southwest," Mr. Holm said. "The discovery of the Panhandle race in the vicinity of the Canadian Valley, near the Texas-Oklahoma border, has provided new evidence of the relationship between these two groups. The Panhandle race, which was a sedentary and agricultural people, lived in the vicinity of the Canadian Valley for several centuries after the Christian era. They were a hardy and resilient people, who were able to adapt to a wide range of environmental conditions."

Mr. Holm went on to describe the agricultural practices of the Panhandle race. "The Panhandle race were skilled farmers, and their agricultural practices were a testament to their ingenuity and resourcefulness. They were able to make use of the resources available to them, and they were able to adapt to a wide range of environmental conditions. They were able to make use of the resources available to them, and they were able to adapt to a wide range of environmental conditions."

Mr. Holm, who is considered a leading expert in the field of Panhandle archaeology, has been working on the Canadian Valley project for several years. He has made important contributions to the understanding of the history of the Panhandle region, and his work has been widely recognized. His research has been published in several important journals, and he is considered a leading expert in the field of Panhandle archaeology.
