Local F.F.A. Boys Outline Their Objectives For The Ensuing Year

Local chapter of Future Farmers of America met in regular session Thursday under the leadership of Paul Harlow, chapter president, and outlined objectives for the ensuing year.

Objectives toward which the boys will work are: To develop competent, aggressive, rural and agricultural leadership; to strengthen the confidence of the farm boy in himself and his work; to create more interest in the intelligent choice of the farming occupation; to create and nurture a love of country life, and to improve the rural home and all its surroundings; to encourage cooperative effort among students of vocational agriculture to promote thrift; to supplement the regular systematic instruction offered to students of vocational agriculture; to advance the cause of vocational agriculture in public schools.

Under the objective to develop competent, rural and agricultural leadership the local boys plan to send all of their officers to at least one district officers' training school; to cooperate with national and state agricultural agencies; to sponsor an F.F.A. improvement contest; and a terracing program improvement contest.

Means of strengthening the farm boy's confidence in himself will be by endeavoring to advance at least 75 per cent of last year's "green hands" to Future Farmers and two per cent of last year's Future Farmers be elevated to "Lone Star Farmers", usage of official secretary and treasurer books; and have F.F.A. manuals available for every member.

To create more interest and intelligent choice of farming occupation the local boys will visit outstanding farms and ranches, and federal and state projects, all members will participate in eradicating one pest.

In creating and nurturing love of rural life of the local chapter will sponsor a parent and son banquet of which 100 per cent of members are to bring parents, endeavor to beautify home farm grounds, encourage use of official uniforms, leadership training conferences, and organize a musical group.

To promote thrift program calls for 100 per cent of members pay national, states, area, and district dues, and all alumni retain membership for three years as provided in the constitution by paying dues, encourage all members to participate in chapter thrift program.

In supplementing systematic instruction the plan calls for entering leadership contests, state judging contest, encourage rural fire prevention, encourage chapter to have library, and encourage united service programs.

To advance the cause of vocational agriculture the chapter will hold its annual F.F.A. Fall Stock Show here in the spring; encourage area, district, federation, and chapter radio broadcasts; encourage area association to publish official F.F.A. and strive for more and better publicity on F.F.A. activities.

The local F.F.A. chapter is sponsoring a sweetheart contest, which opened Monday, October 24, and will close October 28, at 4:00 p.m. The purpose of this contest is to help raise funds to finance various F.F.A. activities for the ensuing year.

Those selected to run were: Maxine Hise, Margaret Browning, Toody McDermott, Betty Jean Pemberton, Katherine Young, and Evelyn Pethrel.

BAIRD MUNICIPAL POWER PLANT NOW FACES LITIGATION

A district court law suit filed by four members of a citizens' committee looms as a stumbling block over which promoters of a municipal light plant must hurdle before issuance of bonds can be realized at Baird.

The suit, filed by T. E. Powell, banker, R. L. Russell, attorney, C. W. Conner, operator of a newspaper agency, and R. E. Hall, machinist, asks that the court void a recent $190,000 bond election and that the City of Baird be restrained from issuing the bonds on the grounds that 136 qualified voters had been disfranchised when the election was held September 30.

It also was contended that "the form of the ballot was calculated to and did deceive voters" in that it led them to believe that the bonds were to be paid out of revenues derived from the sale of electric service.

Further questioning feasibility of the project in Baird, the petition states that "any engineer subjects his state license to forfeiture by demonstrating his lack of professional or engineering ability when he estimates that such a project could meet its expense obligations on present rates."

Three licensed engineers, the petition recalls, "have made reports and filed statements with the city council that it is impossible to maintain two light systems charging rates as low as now being charged in Baird. It thus becomes financially impossible to pay such bonds without resort to other sources of revenue."

A hearing probably will be set by Judge Milburn S. Long when he convenes 42nd District Court at Baird October 31. Attorneys delivered a copy of the petition to Mayor H. Schwartz as official representative of the city.

CITY DRUG LOOTED OF $750 WORTH OF WATCHES AND RINGS

Robbers entered the City Drug Store here either late Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning and escaped with a loot estimated in value at about $750, most of which was jewelry.

Entrance was gained by knocking out a small glass panel above the awning. Inside, the thieves smashed a lock on a show window in which the jewelry was displayed. Nine watches, 19 rings and incidental items were taken.

Cigarettes and tobacco also caught the attention of the robbers and 15 cartons of cigarettes are known to have been taken. Cash drawers were unmoistened.

The thieves did not leave the same way through which they entered, but instead made exit through the rear door of the store, where it is believed an automobile was used.

Deputy Sheriff W. A. Peterson and J. C. Huntington were in Abilene Wednesday, having pieces of the broken glass checked for finger prints, and running down other clues.

As the Legs; among various other Legs appear the Master Legs, the Butler Legs, and unhappily the Highly Insured Legs belonging to a motion picture actress whose vain, silly, little mongrel, Dalziel almost played havoc with the well-ordered lives in the Master Leg's well-bred kennels. The dialogue is a skillful rendering of clever dog talk translated into English.

While the story alone is sufficiently interesting in its own right it is impossible not to find it somewhat of a fable, since every page is richly flavored with universal truths that apply to man and beast alike. The hero is a lovable, but very intelligent Great Dane who believes himself to be the ugly member of the dachshund family with whom he has been brought up. He looks at life with the dachshund viewpoint and is made humble and unhappy because he is not petted and appreciated as they are by the Legs. He yearns to be carried in his master's arms and he cannot understand why he is not allowed to sleep across his master's feet. He feels it is his own clumsiness that prevents his crawling through a fence where the other dogs have easy access. On the other hand he does not mind walking through wet grass where they will go so because as he says, he can manage his stomach better.

"I am not done in the best kennels to mention or even admit that does ever went mad and bit Legs. Occasionally a very rare little tradesman's dog might write up the word 'Hydrophobia' with a snigger on the wall, but it was quickly rubbed out again and nice puppies were taught to look the other way." After numerous adventures the story reaches a happy ending when the Great Dane comes into his heritage and his world assumes its rightful proportions. Do not assume that because this is a story about dogs that it is meant for youthful readers. It is definitely a book for grown-ups. Drawings by K. F. Barker carry out the spirit of the tale which is published by MacMillan.

Although it has never ceased to be a source of regret to him, husband long ago stopped being amazed at my unerring ability to choose the most expensive thing in sight before I go shopping; but only yesterday he learned that such ability is an inherent instinct in every feminine heart. With his well-known weakness for the younger members of the fair sex, he offered to let his current flame choose her own doll in celebration of her second birthday. Patsy Jo surveyed the large array of beautiful dolls. She pointed to a doll on the top shelf. "Zat's a pretty doll," she said. "Zat's a twenty dollar babe!" There were bigger dolls, dolls with lighter dresses. Patsy Jo eyed them all with simple scorn. "Zat's a pretty doll," she still insisted. In desperation JPR finally tolled her away with an ice cream cone and chose her doll himself from the bottom counter.

This little bit of philosophy by John Kendrick Bausis is worth remembering: To take things as they be— That's my philosophy. No use to holler, mope, or cuss— If they was changed they might be wiss.

Suppose he was your old man," replied Timmie bitterly. "Suppose he ran out on you when you was a little kid, and wouldn't take care of yourself and had to eat anywhere you could pick it up? Maybe you'd go to him?" "Yes, Timmie," said Roger without hesitation. "I think I would." Timmie turned away. He clenched his fists and seethed, as though absorbed by conflicting emotions. Finally he came to a decision, and, with a curt good-bye to the others, he hurried down the stairs and out of the house.

When Timmie made his way to the room in the third-rate hotel designated in the wire, and knocked on the door, a barely recognizable voice called in low tones, "Come in."

The senior Donovan was propped in bed. His features appeared white and drawn. A battered nightstand, drawn close to the bed, contained an imposing array of medicine bottles.

Timmie advanced toward the bed. When he spoke his voice indicated that uncertain hardness which one sees in a sick person whom one dislikes.

"Well, what do you want?" he said finally.

"Sit down, son," admonished his father.

Attending the annual meeting of the Texas Agricultural Association at Waco October 25th and 26th as Callahan County delegates were, Earl C. Hays, president of the Callahan County Agricultural Association, of Clyde and Fred W. Stacy of Cross Plains.

The Texas association comprising about 25,000 farmers of the state were largely responsible for getting the subsidy payments that are coming in at the present time for farmers, as well as getting the provision for using 1938 soil conservation crops such as sodas grass, millet, and red top come for hay and no doubt, the group in 1939 will accomplish as many worthwhile things for farmers of the state and the South as was done in 1938.

Cliff Day, farmer of Plainview and nephew of Judge R. L. Russell of Baird is president of the state association.

Many peanut growers of the county have sold their crop to the Southwestern Peanut Growers' Association for 94 1/2 cents, 88 cents and 81 cents, depending on whether the grade was No. 1, 2 or 3. The closest warehouse operated by the association is located at Cisco where it is expected thousands of bushels of peanuts will be delivered by Callahan County growers in order to get these prices.

Shellers, it is reported, are paying only 80 cents per bushel for No. 1 peanuts.

A committee of boys composed of Dalton Lebow, Julian Farmer, and Jake Warren was appointed to help arrange future programs and select some local farmer who would serve as local leader.

"What's this fussin' about?" she demanded.

"Timmie's father's sent for him," explained Cricket. "He's sick, but Timmie doesn't think it's important enough to go."

"You've got to go, son, if your father's sick," counseled Mother Rabbi.

"No matter what's he's done, Timmie, he's your father, added Roger.

"Suppose he was your old man," replied Timmie bitterly. "Suppose he ran out on you when you was a little kid, and wouldn't take care of yourself and had to eat anywhere you could pick it up? Maybe you'd go to him?"

There's a Chicago specialist could give me an iron lung and maybe pull me through—but I'm broke. Could you help me, son?"

"I ain't got any money," replied Timmie.

"But I know how you could get some," said his father, significantly. "I know how I could, too," said Timmie, "except I don't do them kind of things."

"But you wouldn't stand there and watch me die, would you, Timmie?" pleaded his father.

"I ain't ridin' any crooked races," reiterated Timmie.

"You'd just give me my life, kid. This one race can't make any difference. Listen, Timmie, I know people who'd pay me five grand if the horse you're gonna ride in the Bidgemores didn't win."

"How'd you know I'd ride in that?" he asked. For answer his father smiled slightly and waved.

"Do you think, I'd throw down a white guy like his Honor, Sir Peter?"

There was no reply from the bed, and Timmie continued:

"I'm supposed to be a good rider. People bet their money on me. I like to win for 'em, and I don't pull any races!"

Donovan's voice seemed to come even more faintly from tightly pressed lips.

"I thought you might give me this one chance, kid," he said. "But it's okay. Good luck to you."

As Timmie started for the door, a slender man carrying a black case—apparently a doctor—entered.

"Oh, I didn't know you had company," he said haltingly.

"This is my boy, Doctor," whispered Donovan.

"How are you, young man?" said the doctor. "Perhaps I shouldn't have taken the liberty of sending that telegram, but I—well—" He broke off, looking awkwardly toward the bed.

"Say anything you want to, Doc," prompted Donovan. "I know I ain't got a chance. I thought Timmie

"I ain't throwin' no races for nobody," repeated Timmie, hard past the doctor. He struck the door, and went out.

He rang the elevator bell into the corridor, then thrust his way into his pockets. In a moment he turned about abruptly, went back and opened the door of his father's room.

"How long would it take for that specialist here from Chicago," he asked the doctor.

"Less than twenty-four hours," he answered.

"Okay, dad," exclaimed Timmie. "You get your iron lung. I'll lookah won't win." He walked away.

"The Ugly Dashed" by G. B. Stern, on the current list of best sellers, furnishes the most delightful reading imaginable if you are in the mood to be amused. Even if you are not in the mood you will be amused anyway! This is a story about real dogs in their own particular dog world. The human beings appear as shadowy creatures of authority in the background and are known merely
