Mrs. Hardy consulted Conward. It had grown to be her habit to consult Conward on all matters in which she found an interest.

"How is it, Mr. Conward," Mrs. Hardy said to him one evening over her fancy work-for she practiced an indefatigable industry in matters of no importance-"how is it that there is no demand for property? You are a real-estate expert; you should be pble to answer that. Isn't this city as good today as it was a year ago? Doesn't it occupy the same site? Are not the farms still producing?"

"That's just it, dear Mrs. Hardy. Why, indeed? Simply because the booster has given way to the calamity howler. Its psychological explanation is simple enough. The world lives by faith. Without faith there would be neither seedtime nor harvest. That is take your easy money someone else true of raising cities as well as of raising crops. But there are always just to show you how I feel about it-
