Barbecue Time And Make It Chickens

The aroma of outdoor cookery, specially that associated with barbecuing chicken, is reason enough to whit appetites and bring on visions of good things to come. The great outdoor season is here, notes Marshall Miller, Extension poultry marketing specialist, so let us take our place at the grill and encourage others to do the same.

A fancy grill is not a retirement for barbecuing broilers or fryers. A simple rack set over bricks or stones works mighty well, says the specialist. And he adds, it's no trick at all to serve chicken barbecue for as little as 50 to 75 cents per serving, including everything. In fact, he emphasizes, it can be most economical main the course available and is tasty, ital.

He suggests using broilers weighing from two and a half to three and a half pounds. Split the birds into halves and place the halves on the grill with the skin side up. They should be turned every five to ten minutes and basted. If the skin blisters, the fire is too hot and the halves should be turned more often. Use the basting sauce generously and never let the coals burst into flame, he advises. A good cooking job may be completed in as little as an hour and half but two hours with less heat gives a juicer product with better flavor, says the specialist. During the last 30 minutes of the cooking period, he advises using a finishing sauce which can
