TxDOT to hold hearing Feb. 23

A hearing to gather public comments and opinions on possible routes for the Trans-Texas Corridor will be held February 23 at 6:30 p.m. in the Donley County Courthouse.

According to the Texas Department of Transportation, the corridor is a proposed network of roads, rails, and dedicated utility zones to move people, goods, utilities, and information through the state.

Construction of the corridor will be funded over several decades through tolls, bonds, and other financing tools. Likely starting points for the corridor will be in high population areas.

Health Nazis put Coca-Cola in crosshairs

The Health Nazis are alive and well, and their present target is children right here in the Panhandle. A couple of over-zealous medical types have decided that Coca-Cola is the devil, and they are on a crusade to banish the beast from the halls of Amarillo schools.

Dr. Ken Crossland, who heads a regional dentists' association, and Dr. Dennis Dove, who I'm ashamed to admit is associated with Texas Tech Medical Center, co-authored a draconian opinion piece in Sunday's AMA-RILLO GLOBE-NEWS, in which they call for Coca-Cola to let the by roger estlack Amarillo Independent School

commentary

District out of its vending contract with the bottler. Ordinarily, I wouldn't care much about what was going on with Amarillo schools; but, frankly, I don't think the Coke Police will stop with Potter and Randall counties. If successful, they will begin their march across the Panhandle and soon will be trying to exorcise the supposed evil influences from our own Herr Crossland and Herr Dove state matter of factly that: 1) Coke causes tooth decay and diabetes, 2) AISD collects $700,000 from the sale of Cokes, and therefore 3) this means AISD parents incur $3.2 million in dental costs.

Crossland and Dove never explain how they arrive at that dollar figure for dental costs, and they show no proof that the presence of Coke machines has a direct causal relationship with even one cavity. Like so many leftist Chicken Little wannabes, they don't want to be bothered with the facts or with common sense.

"Childhood obesity and diabetes are major health concerns that have been increasing at an alarming rate (simultaneously with soft drink consumption)," the doctors write.

Yes, but it's also been simultaneous with an increase in the number of available cable channels, an increase in the number of kids on the Internet, an increase in the number of kids playing video games, and - believe it or not - a decrease in parental involve-

The writing duo bemoan that the revenue from this sinful activity is being used to fund Amarillo schools, and then not-so-subtly they imply that AISD really doesn't even need that 700 grand because it's only 0.3 percent of the budget. They further complain that most high school teachers allow Coke consumption in class and that Amarillo parents "have enough of a job encouraging children to eat right without being blind-sided by the school system."

The authors claim they do not want anyone to dictate what people can eat or drink, but that's exactly what these two busybodies are doing. They are following the ongoing pattern in this country of demonizing a product because it's "bad for you" and then doing everything possible to stop the sale of said product in order to protect... altogether now... "the children."

This is not an exaggeration. Crossland and Dove write, "We believe that the 17 teaspoons of suguar in the most commonly sold Coke in AISD is excessive." A few lines later they state that AISD "sold marketing rights to children for profit." By inference, AISD and Coca-Cola, which purchased the aforementioned marketing rights, is somehow engaging in the exploitation of children, and they must be stopped.

This attempt to demonize the bottling company and the Amarillo school district is distasteful and disgraceful. Coca-Cola is an American institution, the products of which have been enjoyed by millions - if not billions - of people for more than 100 years. AISD is not the devil, either. It is simply trying to provide an education and use a free market mechanism to take a little pressure off the taxpayers. That's a good thing,

I doubt that any kid is getting cavities or diabetes solely as a result of a Coke machine or the products contained therein. It is the lifestyles of those kids at home that matters most. What are they drinking there? Are they practicing good dental hygiene? And, once again, where are their parents in all of this? That is who has the most influence on a child

You also have to question the intelligence of this pinhead dentist, Dr. Crossland. I guarantee if the president of my regional press association were trying to find ways to reduce the sales of newspapers, we'd have that guy lynched - figuratively, of course - at the next

Crossland and Dove would have you believe they and their colleagues are willing to forego $3.2 million in revenue for the purely altruistic reason of improving the health of the children. They should instead put their money where their mouths are and use a free market tactic of their own to protect kids. If they would just give AISD $700,000 per year and make other promises of buying scoreboards and such for the schools (as Coca-Cola does), then I'm sure the school administration would be more than happy to kick Coke

But until they do that, they're just meddling. They're trying to interfere with the kids' ability to have a Coke and a smile, trying to disrupt a steady stream of income for schools, and, most importantly, telling people how to live their lives. All of which are bad lessons for kids in any school district.

Professor's message causes car wreck this week. As we wish her a speedy recovery, we present this Carrie classic in a Life's Lessons flashback to October 9, 2003.

I learned a very important lesson this week: cell phones and driving are bad.

I am not a very good driver. I will be the first to admit it. I'm not ashamed. I have never liked driving. It makes me nervous, and I don't like being that stressed

I also have a history of being unable to walk and chew gum. I cannot clap and sing. Contrary to popular belief, I do not think the ability to multi-task is gender

So I have been genetically set up for a fall.

I was driving back to campus the other day, and I looked at my cell phone and saw I had a missed call. I didn't recognize the number, but it had the prefix for a number on campus.

Normally, I would have tossed the phone back in my bag and checked it later, but I was waiting for an important call from a boy. I listened to the message.

It was from one of my professors. I didn't hear the whole thing, but I picked up that some paper of mine was missing or something.

I was trying to re-play the message

when the girl riding with me cursed and told me to stop! Red light!

I slammed the brake and slowed down enough that when I hit the car in front of me, it was a very gentle "love pat." Maybe it was a he thought everything was okay. He was bitter because he had just gotten his car back after an accident he had a few months earlier that wasn't his fault either. He said I needed to realize I wasn't the only person in the world and I should be concerned with someone besides

Here I was talking on a brand new cell phone in a relatively new car. I had just come from an important meeting so I was all dressed up. He thought I was some spoiled little rich girl whose Daddy was going to take care of bribing judges and officials to keep me from getting in

How much further from the truth can you get!

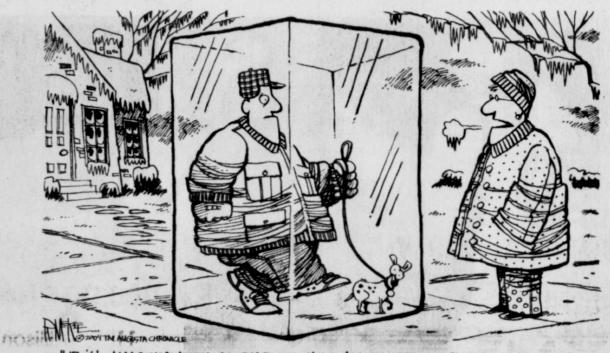

It was obvious that the accident was less than a fender bender. I would hardly even call it a scrape. The guy didn't want to look like a jerk, so he said he didn't have time to get a bolice report, he had better things to do, but he would be in touch later.

The girl who was riding with me at the time is 19 years old and doesn't have a driver's license. "Why is it they let you have a driver's license, and they won't give

All of this stressed me out beyond my normal limits. I mean, this is a feeling worse than the security alarm going off in the computer lab.

I called my mom, and then I went back to my room and cried. There was a message on my dorm phone, too. The professor found my paper. Oops. She had it all along. She was sorry she bothered me.

I was pretty sorry myself.

Texas plays vital role in national defense

The first responsibility of the federal government is preserving our national security. A strong defense is also critically important to Texas and our economy. So as we launch a periodic review of our national system of defense facilities, we must take into account the changing nature of our security challenges, particularly the new threat posed by terrorism. Decisions on troop strength, training, deployment, and facilities should be based on conditions that fully assess current

The Pentagon has begun the 2005 Base Closing and Realignment Commission (BRAC), charged with adjusting our military capacity to meet realities of the 21st Century. The Defense Department started the process by publishing a set of draft criteria, seeking comment on the ground rules to be used in judging whether military facilities across the country are to be maintained or closed.

The Pentagon's draft criteria are very similar - almost identical - to standards employed by the 1991, 1993 and 1995 BRAC rounds. These are Cold War criteria. I believe that using old standards to face a new enemy is a mistake. The criteria should be improved, enhanced, and updated to reflect the lessons we've learned after 9/11.

The current draft does not direct BRAC commissioners to take into account contributions a military base might make to our overall homeland security effort. Nor comment by sen. kay bailey hutchison does it require our extensive network of overseas facilities be included in the planning. I am urging that both omissions be corrected.

In the new war on terrorism, homeland security is the ultimate goal. They may be two separate federal departments, but Homeland Security and Defense are already working in tandem on numerous measures, from biochemical threats to port security.

For example, if a military base such as Brooks City-Base in San Antonio can play an important role in medical and biological research that's vital to both homeland and national defense, that contribution ought to be weighed as part of the BRAC process. If Corpus Christi's Naval Station Ingleside can host Coast Guard infrastructure to help patrol the Gulf of Mexico, that should be considered as well.

Most of our overseas bases were established during or after World War II, and maintained to meet conventional Cold War threats. Even the Department of Defense (DoD) has acknowledged that several bases are poorly located to meet today's military needs. Some bases, particularly those in Europe and Asia, lack the land area and flying space to allow first-class training for

I voted against starting the 2005 BRAC because I don't believe we've had sufficient experience in the terrorism war to evaluate all threats we may be facing. But now that it's underway, we have an obligation to make certain the criteria used in the base evaluation process are themselves updated and modernized.

Defense is important to Texas, and Texas is vital to our national defense. It's been said that "Texas defends America." That's true - Texas has more active duty than any state - and we're superb at it. Texans should welcome a thoughtful and politics-free BRAC process.

As Americans, we all have a stake in ensuring that our forces structure, and facilities are as efficient and effective as possible - and that the criteria used to judge those conditions reflect the changing threat we face at home and abroad

Healthy reintegration key for ex-offenders bution rather than becoming an economic

President Bush proposed an innovative plan in his State of the Union address that would help ex-offenders reintegrate into our communities through gainful employment. The four-year initiative will have an important positive impact on our nation and in particular our Hispanic and African American communities - two groups that statistically have a high percentage of people in the penal system. According to statistics provided by the Federal Bureau of Prisons, African Americans constitute 40% and Hispanics 32% of the prison popula-

I believe Bush's proposal will greatly benefit the ex-offenders by facilitating their reintegration into society and thus improve our society as a whole. It is critical that ex-offenders reintegrate into society in a healthy manner, making a positive contriburden or a repeat offender.

In addition to the difficulties of having a criminal record, ex-offenders often face other obstacles such as poor educational background, low work skills, lack of housing, and other risk factors. These issues can make their reintegration into society and the workforce difficult and could increase their likelihood of becoming a repeat offender.

According to the US Department of Justice, studies show that fewer than half of all released offenders stay out of trouble for at least three years after their release from prison. With more than 600,000 offenders released from prison every year, I strongly believe that regardless of party politics we all can agree that the benefits of helping ex-offenders reintegrate into society are great and we should all work toward making this possible. As former Attorney General of Texas, I worked hard to bolster the child support enforcement program, and I know that an additional benefit to helping inmates find work is the promotion of responsible parenthood.

Many faith-based and community organizations have made it their mission to mentor the children of prisoners and promote responsible parenthood. I am glad to see that President Bush's proposal brings these organizations together with State and Federal agencies to work toward the same goals and common good.

As a member of the Crime Corrections and Victim's Rights subcommittee, I am committed to protecting communities in Texas by helping ex-offenders obtain employment and transitional housing as well as receive mentoring in order to ensure their successful reentry into society.

The Broncos held a slight lead after the break, but they began to open up the point spread in the second half of play.
