37 Walker St., Baltimore, Dec. 25th. For six years I have been a great sufferer from Blood Disease, Dyspepsia, and Constipation, and became so debilitated that I could not retain anything on my stomach, in fact, life had almost become a burden. Finally, when hope had almost left me, my husband seeing Brown's Iron Bitters advertised in the paper, induced me to give it a trial. I am now taking the third bottle and have not felt so well in six years as I do at the present time. Mrs. L. F. GRIFFIN.

Visions.

Youth's Companion.

The belief in visions has not been confined to any people or to any age. It is recognized in that oldest book on earth, Job. It is found throughout Greek and Roman literature. The Bible shows its prevalence among the Jews. It is still universal among barbarous nations, and is found among the most highly cultivated.

This belief is not the product of superstition, however much superstition may have intensified or moulded it. It is not infrequent that persons see likenesses of friends--forms without substances presented to the mind with all the distinctness of sight.

As men instinctively believe their senses, it is difficult for a scientist to convince himself, in such a case, that he is looking on a real object. The forms that a person sees may appear either in the dark, or in the broad day-light. Less often they may seem to talk, in the clear tones of an intimate friend; or one may apparently hear from them familiar words, or in connection with them even the most complicated and delightful music.

When one has repeatedly had these visions he learns to "lay" them, or at least to perceive their true character by the touch, which is seldom imposed on. A lady at a dinner-party found the chair assigned to her at table apparently occupied by another person. She was about to speak of the matter to the hostess, when, on reaching her fan toward the apparent person in the chair, the vision disappeared.

That these apparitions are empty creations of the brain projected into space, there is no doubt. They are akin to the clear impressions which the mind is always able, through the brain, to call up and hold before it.

Our familiar dreaming visions are of the same character. Certain drugs, which act specifically on the brain, such as opium, absinthe, and Indian hemp, have a wonderful power in causing such visions.

So does alcohol, after the brain has long been under its influence, creating generally visions of the most grotesque and hideous character.

The brains of the insane give rise to false thoughts, as well as false sights and sounds. It is often the same with fevers that effect the brain. Such visions are also common to the peculiar state of the brain that precedes death.

Death of Gambetta.

News of the death of the great French republican and reformer reached here Saturday night. He died Sunday. Concerning the effect of the death of this man of genius the London Daily News says:

"Since the death of Thiers there was not in France a man who could be compared to Gambetta. He stood like Saul, head and shoulders above his contemporaries. His death has scattered many a conjecture, made grim banter of many political arrangements. His loss is one that passes all calculation, but it may be hoped the republic is safely established and will have little to fear from internal enemies, and conspirators of factions. If this republic keeps steadily to the ways of peace, she can be served to advantage, even by statesmen far superior in capacity to the man of genius she has lost."

HEADACHE.—Dr. Haley says (Australian Medical Journal, of Aug. 15 1881) that, as a rule, a dull, heavy headache, situated over the brows and accompanied by languor, chilliness and a feeling of general discomfort, which distaste for food, which sometimes approaches to nausea, can be completely removed, in about ten minutes, by a two-grain dose of iodide of potassium dissolved in half a wine-glassful of water, this being sipped so that the whole quantity may be consumed in about ten minutes.

Curious Facts about Precious Stones.

Scientific American.

In his lecture on precious stones, Professor Egleston, of the Columbia School of Mines, says there is in Paris a diamond so hard that the usual process for cutting and polishing made no impression upon it. The black diamond is mostly used for tools. In Russia it is broken into flakes, polished, and worn as airt mourning. The historic diamonds have no more luster than a piece of glass. The shan diamond was more beautiful than the genuine stone, but it has a tendency to decomposition and does not retain luster.

The diamond mines of Brazil were first opened in 1727. It is estimated that since that time they have produced at least two tons of diamonds. In England, a stone weighing one carat and of the purest water is worth, when cut and polished, about $60. The dealers in rough stones acquire the habit of distinguishing the water of a rough stone by simply breathing upon it. Among the historic diamonds, the Rajah weighed 367 carats, and the Great Mogul 280. Before it was cut the latter weighed 900 carats. From the composition of the diamond we see what costly things Nature makes from common material. All the diamond fields of the world are not worth the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania.

A ruby of five carats is double the value of a diamond of that size, and of ten carats is worth three times as much as a diamond of corresponding size. A perfect ruby is the rarest of all stones. Rubies are often imitated with real stones, the most common being spinel. But it is not difficult to distinguish the imitation, as the ruby is the only stone having a pigeon blood color. Another precious stone is the sapphire, which is like the ruby with the exception of the color. He had seen a small stone which was ruby on one side and sapphire on the other. The emerald is a deep green, the deeper the better. It loses no brilliancy in an artificial light, but its color may be expelled by a gentle heat.

Most of our emeralds come from New Granada, and will always have flaws. In imitations it is not the hardness nor the color that is sought, so much as the flaw. The first eye-glasses were made in England of emeralds.

Bonners Stables.

Pittsburg, [Pa.] Stockman.

A visitor to the Bonner stables thus speaks of that interesting spot in horse matters: "Among the famous horses in Mr. Bonner's Tarrytown stables are several that have the interest of relics. Wandering dejectedly about the pasture on sunshiny days, with the blindness of old age in her eyes and her muscles stiff with rheumatism, is Flatbrush Maid, who in May, 1851, trotted with Lady Palmer two miles on the Fashion course, in 5:01 1/2. She is now 30 years old. Dexter is in his 24th year, and has aged in appearance and gait considerably since he astonished the world by doing a mile in 2:17 1/2. Rarus, who has trotted six seconds faster than the old favorite, and little Mamie B., who has trotted a quarter in 32 seconds, are his stable companions."

PART III.

The frightful cries of the lady brought a dozen hands to her help. The doctor next door was summoned. But the swoon was so like death that even the prompt, vigorous measures immediately resorted to had no apparent effect. The child lay like one dead. Nothing seemed to arouse him. The doctor's grave face grew graver as the time went on.

"Will he live?" eagerly questioned the lady, pausing in her task. Her hands foremost among the active hands about him. "The little fellow has been through a great ordeal in some way, and it is doubtful," said the doctor. "It is very doubtful whether he ever comes back to consciousness again."

But he did, in a measure. Half roused he looked vaguely about him. Only one thought was clear. "The baby?" he whispered feebly, looking anxiously up into the kind face bending over him. They raised him up and showed him where the baby lay sheltered in her warm nest of a crib by the fire. He could but vaguely realize even that. That and everything seemed floating away from him. He fell back upon the pillow in the wild delirium of fever.

Then came a prolonged season of suspense in which there was a tremulous fluttering between life and death. And all the weary time the lady to whom the light had led him, hung over him with motherly solicitude, healing the soreness of her own stricken heart in her Christ-like ministrations to the poor little waif, which, like a leaf in the storm, the bleak December winds had borne to her door.

Care and time, skillful medical aid, and the boy's youthful vigor triumphed at last. Feeble as the veriest infant, but fully restored to consciousness, he opened his eyes one bright day, and looked about him.

In the sweet, motherly face of the woman seated by the bed, holding his baby in her arms as she watched beside him, he recognized the one on which he had looked. He vaguely recognized the room into which he had tottered that stormy night. The kind face lighted up with motherly delight as she saw the light of reason in his eyes again. She laid the baby down, and was bending over him, in a moment, with some nourishing food she had prepared.

The little fellow looked at her with speechless gratitude in his great hollow eyes. He took the food she offered him with grave wonder. "He that led me here could do it all," he murmured, and with a look of supreme content on his little wasted face, he nestled down upon the pillows again, and fell into a deep, dreamless, life-giving sleep. He came slowly back to life and strength, but for some days the past was a blank to him. He was sitting in a great easy chair, propped up with pillows eating with infinite relish some broth his good friend had given him, one sunny afternoon.

"Christmas must be past, I suppose," he said, pausing to reflect upon it.

"Oh, yes," said the lady quietly.

"And is New year past, too?" he questioned, anxiously. "It is, my dear," she answered.

He looked at his little wasted hands. "I must have been sick a long time," he said. "How long?"

"Three weeks. Three long, weary weeks."

He passed his hand over his brow in vain effort at recollection, and looked at her with a vague, pained, puzzled look. Then the mist cleared. Suddenly he remembered all. "My mother! Oh, my mother, my poor darling, half-blind mother!" he cried starting up wildly. The startled lady caught the poor little hands he was wildly wringing, and held them fast in hers. "Don't, don't my dear," she pleaded, in grave apprehension. "You must not excite yourself in this way. Tell me where she is, and she shall come to you immediately."

"Oh, she can't," cried the boy. "She never can again. The men came and took her away. They have shut her up away from the baby and me, and they will never let her out again, never, never, never!"

"The men?" repeated the perplexed lady, "What men?"

"The men that do the bidding of the church. The church over there. The Mormon church."

His friend turned pale, but made no answer. With infinite compassion she urged the food upon him. "My poor child, eat this," she said. The tears running over the poor boy's face fell into the broth she held. He pushed the food from him. "How can I eat when poor ma is hungry?" He put his trembling hands on the warm blankets that covered him. "How can I bear to be warm when she is cold. Oh! do try and find my poor mother. The star and the light led me to you. The dear Christ led me to you. Do, do! We haven't got nobody but her, the baby and me. Papa's got so many wives that he don't care nothing about us. Oh! do, do try and find her!"

He had slid from his chair, and was down on his weak, trembling knees before her, clasping her hands, and wildly clutching at her dress in an agony of supplication. The lady, sorely perplexed by this vague, passionate appeal, and the wild, wandering, pathetic lament from which she could gather nothing clearly, took the poor child in her arms, by way of answer, and pillowed the forlorn, young head upon her motherly breast. By dint of soothing assurances she calmed him after a time. By dint of persistent and patient questioning she at last gathered all the truth. "The search shall be begun at once. I will do my best to find her, God helping me," she said.

His faith in God, and his faith in her was so simple that not a doubt clouded the bright hope thus given him. He sank to sleep immeasurably comforted.

What need to dwell upon the weary search of weeks that lengthened into months. The mother of the boy was found at last; found imprisoned but a few blocks from her old home; found, and dying. So near the end, that the precious time was counted by a few brief moments when the one who had searched for her so long stood beside her bed.

The woman who had her in charge, whom her sublime patience had won as a friend, bent over her. "Ruth Rawson, can you hear me?" she said. The dying woman, with a mighty effort, answered faintly, "Yes." "The lady who has your children is here beside the bed."

"God bless her!" she whispered feebly. The dying hand groped aimlessly in vain endeavor to find the stranger's hand, and take it. Tenderly the lady took the cold hand in hers.

"They are well," she said. "They are safe with me."

"Keep them. They are yours," said the dying mother, in a voice hardly above a breath. That was her last of earth. Then her freed soul had passed forever from under the dominion of earth's cares and sorrows. Heaven had come to the little darkened room. The dying eyes looked upward, and desecrated all about her the glories of the unseen—the immortal. "Death is sweeter than life," she said, with clasped hands, and radiant face, the breath went out with the words in a low, fluttering sigh.

And the lady went her way, and said, as she gathered the little ones that God had sent her, in her arms; doubly hers now, the gift of God and the gift of the dying mother. "I am quite content to wait. Christ's suffering ones that are here need me far more than my own happy darlings."

Ambrose Yancey, Sr.
Grenola, Kansas, Dec. 27, 1882.

Our Chicago Letter.

Dear Mac.
In my last letter I promised to say something in this about Chicago Medical Colleges. It may seem at first blush, a somewhat narrow subject...

We have the Rush Medical College; the Homeopathic; the Haneman;
the Woman's; the Chicago Medical; College of Physicians and Surgeons; the Eclectic, and how many more I am unable to say.

Cook County Hospital, and institution of immense proportions, is located on the West side of the city, considerably removed from the principle business center of the city...

I left them in the heights of luxury and delight.
I learned through these gentlemen of the heavy cattle sales, that have recently taken place in Texas...

Nessrs. Fuller & Craig, Beaumont Tex., say: "Browns Iron Bitters is the most popular tonic and gives universal satisfaction."

THE STATISTICS OF THE CATTLE
TRADE of New York for the year 1882 show a decided falling off in the receipts of fat cattle and hogs...

As a consequence of the increased demand for learned and competent physicians, the medical colleges of respectability are taxed to supply the demand.

tricts. A term or two in a medical college after a few years of practice, is of great value, as it renews knowledge formerly acquired, and furnishes instruction in whatever is new and of latest discovery in the healing art.

The building of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, with which I am best acquainted, is new, large, beautiful and possesses all the latest and most approved appliances.

Among the elder professors are Dr's Jackson, Rev. Angear and Carpenter, also Palmer and Earl,

The younger Professors, although for the most part not so well known are men "well up in their parts,"

On Friday evening Dec. 22, 1882, the faculty gave a magnificent banquet to the students, in the dispensary hall. It was on the eve of the Holiday vacation, as a number of the students were about leaving for their homes to enjoy the festivities of the season.

To all the young men of Texas, contemplating a course of medical lectures we would say, come to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, if you wish first class facilities for preparing yourself for your profession.

Mr. Wosham, of the firm of Stevens and Worsham, Texas, called on me at the Medical College, one day last week, and being invited to the Palmer house in the evening, I accepted the invitation and there found
Mr. Curtis, of Curtis Ranch, Mr.
White and Capt. Icard of Wheeler County Texas.

Stock Notes.

Stock on the range in this vicinity are in quite as good condition as stockmen can expect at this season of the year, speaking of located range cattle. Thus far but few instances of range cattle dying have been reported. What losses have been reported have been mostly among the northern strays and cattle that were driven on to the range late. The occasionally severe northers have drifted the stock to considerable extent and stockmen are working together for mutual benefit.

Scarcity of Breeding Stock.

Texas Live Stock Journal.

The scarcity of aged saddle horses in the state, and consequent high prices will, we hope, induce breeders to hold on to their female stock. We have shipped and driven the best mares out of the state, until the fact stares us in the face, that we are no longer a great horse growing country, and that our horse stocks have been culled over, so that the future supply will not show the improvement in quality which will be expected.

The demand for our largest, best mares has been so great, and the high prices offered for them, has induced some breeders to sell all of the really good stock on hand, and keep such as were unfit for shipment. This gives us for breeding purposes a very poor quality of mares, and as "like is sure to produce like" we need not look for a better class of horses than was formerly used, and this demand for still better horses will grow just in proportion as cattle are improved. The man who owns his land is certain to improve the quality of his live stock. He cannot afford to raise or use common stock and he will go outside of the state for his saddle horses unless our home breeders can furnish him with a better quality than he now buys. The old type of pitching cow pony will in a few years be a thing of the past. As lands are fenced and cattle improved, the characteristics of the old time cowman will change, and the new business cattle-raiser will not be seen using a scrub pony. The few far-seeing horse raisers who have held on to their best breeding stock and gone on improving the quality of their horses, will make more money than any of the breeders who have sold their choice mares for big prices.

THE STOCKMEN of Texas, including all kinds and classes, should now begin to arrange their business, so they will be able to attend the meeting of the Texas Live Stock Association which meets at Austin in February next. They should not only arrange to attend and aid this worthy enterprise by their presence, but should closely study the work to be done and the duties that will devolve upon them while there. Stockmen are too much accustomed to attend these conventions without giving the work to be done proper thought. These matters should be thoroughly discussed before assembling that each may be enabled to vote and act intelligently on all subjects that may come up. The legislature will be in session at the time of the meeting and we doubt not but a large attendance with united and harmonious efforts, will succeed in securing the much needed legislation in the interest of the stockmen of Texas. This is a matter of too great importance to be neglected, and we hope each and ever one interested will aid in securing the necessary laws by attending the Austin Convention.
