ABBA Women's Center's celebrates 20th Anniversary

ABBA (All Babies Born Alive) Women's Center held its 20th Anniversary Celebration Silent Auction and Dinner at Centennial Hall in Lindsay on Saturday, March 8. More than 550 attended the event to raise support for the charity's 2014 budget.

Executive Director Sandee Feyereisen reported, "Last year, ABBA served over 7,013 area clients with free services including pregnancy testing, educational classes, sonograms, peer counseling, and material assistance without losing a baby to abortion. And we would like to thank our sponsors, donors, board of directors, staff, 80 active volunteers, and our donors for another successful year of saving babies in Texas".

Texas Governor Rick Perry sent a letter of congratulations which read,

*"Greetings:
As Governor of Texas, I am pleased to welcome you to the ABBA Women's Center's 20th Anniversary Celebration.*

"Our nation was founded on three key principles: the rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Tragically, the first three of these is denied to thousands of the most vulnerable - more than 70,000 unborn children in Texas alone - each year. In addition to ending an innocent life, abortion can cause lasting emotional and mental trauma for women. As Texans, we must stand together to instead promote a culture of life and hope, even in what may seem like the darkest hours.

As you gather together to celebrate your organization's successes and plan for a bright future of encouraging women to choose life, I am proud so many Texans join me in fighting the unspeakable injustice of abortion. I commend you for your dedication to preserving the sanctity of life.

First Lady Anita Perry joins me in sending best wishes for an enjoyable celebration."

Texas House Representative Drew Springer of the 63rd District was the special speaker for the event, explaining HB2 which was a landmark bill passed in a second special session last year affecting the work of pregnancy resource centers and abortion clinics across the state. Restrictive medical regulation on abortion clinics which encompasses patient safety is expected to result in a decline of abortion clinics in the state to approximately six by September of this year. There are currently about 20-22 abortion clinics remaining open, compared to 44 functioning abortion clinics in the state a few years ago.

Rep. Drew Springer received an award from the ABBA Women's Center for his pro-life efforts to help save babies in Texas. Mike Black of Flower Mound was also honored with an award for outstanding service in creating the new website abbatexas.org to which he volunteered his professional creative effort.

ABBA Women's Center of Gainesville leads the nation in client visits, success rate, and quality and number of educational classes offered out of approximately 3,500 non-profit pregnancy resource centers nation-wide. All funding for ABBA Women's Center comes from the free will gifts of businesses, churches, friends, and neighbors locally or within the state of Texas. ABBA does not accept government funding and is a 501 c 3 non-profit organization.

ABBA will expand its borders to open a new pregnancy resource center this year in the Lewisville, Highland Village, and Flower Mound area to serve a population of about 200,000. A drive to support the additional ABBA Women's Center of Lewisville has begun and these fundraising efforts will be raised separately from the ABBA Women's Center of Gainesville funding.

ABBA Chairman Bill Black acted as Master of Ceremonies for the event, working with Cooke County Judge John Roane in presenting awards for the organization.

Ballot placements decided

Ballot placement for County Judge runoff candidates was determined by a flip of a Texas quarter on March 13. Byron Berry will appear first on the ballot, and Jason Brinkley second.

The coin toss was conducted by Republican County Chair Chuck Bartush following the canvass of the County's state election results, with both candidates present as well as four members of the County GOP Executive Committee.

The runoff is required because the winner in a Primary Election must receive at least 50% of the vote. If no candidate reaches that, the top two vote-getters qualify for the runoff. In the three-

Saloon Museum preserves Saint Jo's western history

Cowboys, cattle herds, and horses once kept the town of Saint Jo busy. All three of these could be found on the town square as cowboys gathered in town off their cattle drives along the famous Chisholm Trail. Saint Jo has preserved much of the old west flavor in its historic buildings. One can stand on the town square, close your eyes, and almost hear the jangle of spurs, cattle mooing, and horse nickering.

Irb Boggess opened the Stonewall Saloon in 1873. It is Saint Jo's oldest building and houses much of its history since it is now the Stonewall Saloon Museum.

Framing the bar of the Stonewall Saloon is a colorful painting. This is a reproduction by Joel Hale of what the original artwork in the saloon looked like. Janis Sneed described the discovery of the original painting. "When we were hammering and taking the plaster off the wall, we quit when we saw that. That's the most defined part of it." A piece of the now-faded painting was saved and Plexiglas placed over it. The bar was moved down to allow the painting to be displayed. An artist out of Galveston, who is knowledgeable in historic paintings, was consulted and helped them with the restoration. He feels that the painting was done by a German artist who traveled through the countryside doing painting along the way.

The museum showcases photos of Saint Jo from its early days on, but they have not yet discovered a picture of the building that houses it when it was actually a saloon. In 1908, the building became a bank and there is a picture of it then. The bank's vault is still intact in the building. When it no longer served as a bank, the building became an office building.

"We try to tell the story of the building when it was many things," Janis remarked. "Like my mom said, 'You wear many hats in your life.' The saloon was the oldest building in the county and it changed as it went. It evolved." Janis said that the town was originally two blocks down the street and called Head of Elm because it was the head waters of the Elm Fork and the Trinity River. "The people were down there in 1849," she said. "The government had a sign up there. They were trying to find a route to California to the gold fields. A man named Marcee took an expedition trying to find a good route and he came through here and noted that there were people here already."

There are springs at the location which is why they first gathered in that area.

"After the Civil War when Mr. Boggess and Mr. Howell came over here, bought this land, and moved the town out to where the action was at the Chisholm Trail," explained Janis. "They laid out the square. They said there were seven businesses and five sold whiskey." The building served as a saloon until Prohibition closed its doors. Janis noted that Prohibition happened in Saint Jo before it did in other places. The town remained dry for decades. About three years ago, alcohol once again became available within the city limits. "It's kind of humorous considering what it used to be like," she remarked.

Janis knows that her grandfather William Harris worked in the saloon, but doesn't know in what capacity. Since he was born in 1866, she feels he was not old enough to be a bartender.

The exterior of Saint Jo's Stonewall Saloon remains as it was years ago when cowboys driving cattle along the Chisholm Trail tied their horses to hitching posts and went inside to enjoy drinks and companionship.

Janis recalled one of the sons of saloon owner Irb Boggess being interviewed. He said that when it got too rowdy in the saloon, his dad would say to get behind the bar in the box until it calms down. So, you know what it must have been like," Janis said with a chuckle.

When the town square was laid out, it was not done as most towns where it is square with the world. People are always confused about which direction they are facing in Saint Jo. There is no north or east side of the square because it is not set square in that manner. It is more diagonal, said Janis.

Montague County celebrated its 100th year in 1958 and there was a big celebration. Banker H.D. Fields owned the building and he made it the Museum Saloon. It has been that ever since, but not always kept up and open to the public.

Janis recalls that at that time, people gave family heirlooms to the Museum such as their mother's teapot or belt buckle, etc. She added, "They were all on display. It was rather disorganized in my youth when I'd come in here. You could just go through and look at all the stuff, especially farm tools and kitchen tools."

In the '90s, Stan Fields sold it to the Johnny Muellers from Rosston. Janis said Johnny took everything out and put in felt card tables, cedar siding on the walls, and made it look like an old-time saloon. Some rocks fell off the outside wall onto the road and the city asked Mueller to take care of it. He didn't want to and got crosswise with the city. He then closed the doors of the Saloon Museum for five years.

This bothered Janis, and she and the Jack Schoppas, who own the restaurant next door, purchased the building and turned it into a non-profit. Janis said they raised $100,000 from local people to fix it back up. It was leaning and needed new floors. They used historical mortar to put the original rocks back in place. "We tried to maintain the historical integrity of the building and not ruin it," noted Janis.

The bar in the Saloon Museum is not the original. It is as old as the original, which was removed when the building was used as a bank. The present bar came from south Texas in 1958.

There are items that families have donated since the Museum's re-opening. This includes a surgical set that belonged to Dr. Crump, a very old physician in Saint Jo. It Haley Haverkamp of Lindsay began her new duties with Muenster Memorial Hospital this week. She is the marketing director for MMH Home Care. Haley is a recent graduate of the University of Arkansas with a degree in Community Health Promotion.

Promoting and educating the community about the services that Home Care can provide is one of Haley's new duties. She wants to see the Hospital continue to provide the community with the services they need right here at home. "It is nice being back in Cooke County where I grew up," noted Haley. "The whole staff has been so welcoming, especially Home Health."

Adelia Wilson, Swing Bed coordinator for MMH, remarked, "I am excited to have Haley here. She brings a lot of great ideas and we look forward to watching our Home Health grow in our community."

According to Haley, Home Health is care provided in the comfort of a patient's residence. Care is focused on helping people manage a chronic condition or to recover from an illness, surgery, accident, or some change in their medical condition.

A few of the services provided by MMH Home Health are skilled nursing care for patient education, health assessment, IV therapy, and wound care. Aides can provide personal care such as assistance with bathing, grooming, and light house-keeping.

Following surgery, accidents, or strokes, therapists can come to the home to give physical therapy. There are speech therapists to help with speech problems or swallowing difficulties. Occupational therapists offer their patients help in accomplishing activities to go about daily living. This can include grooming and dressing themselves.

Haley is the daughter of Greg and Amy Haverkamp. She graduated from Lindsay High School in 2010. Some of the things Haley enjoys besides work are being outdoors, attending sports events, and shopping and eating out with friends.

Donna Hertel served as caterer for the event and the group enjoyed Dave Alexander's Big Texas Western Swing Band for their entertainment.

Monetary donations to ABBA Gainesville or ABBA Lewisville may be mailed to PO Box 256 Gainesville, Texas 76241 or by visiting ABBA Women's Center at 214 N. Taylor St. on Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Donations of diapers, baby wipes, infant clothing, formula, and baby food may be donated at the Center during office hours.

United Way moves to new location

Cooke County United Way hosted the Gainesville Chamber After Hours Mixer on Thursday, March 20 starting at 5:30 p.m. The mixer served as an open house at the Agency's new location at 114 E. Main Street.

The United Way was able to purchase the building through a charitable gift from the estate of J. W. Winger, in memory of his son Tommy Winger. To truly honor the gift, the new offices will be named the Tommy Winger Building. Charitable giving covered all costs for both the building and furnishings. No campaign funds were used.

Executive Director Angie Hare commented, "It is truly a blessing that families have remembered Cooke County United Way in their estate planning. We are honored to be the benefactor of these community builders. Currently, the community is benefitting through the Winger Trust and the Scott Trust, which has allowed United Way to make an impact on the community beyond the campaign. Cooke County United Way's Charitable Giving program matches the wishes of the donor to the needs of the community. It is very exciting to see how their legacy is making a difference today."

Moving the dream to reality took a charitable gift, the vision of Brent Reed/2013 CCUW Board president, and the courage of the Board to make the move. It is a convenient location for those needing information and referral and provides opportunities to expand service.

to cover all required topics in the field of professional ethics for psychologists, social workers, marriage and family counselors, counselors, and rehabilitation counselors in a format that has elicited such comments as "most fun training event I've had ever," "creative, thorough, thought-provoking, excellent," and "laughter feels good!" Three ethics CEs are available to Texas LPCs and SWs.

The event, which holds many surprises for participants, will begin at 8:45 a.m. with registration along with coffee and donuts. The program begins at 9:30 and ends at 12:30 with a short break around 11. The fee for this entire program, including CEUs, is $15/person if registration is completed prior to March 31; the fee is $20 after that date. A box lunch is available for $10 and must be preordered no later than April 8.

Additional info may be received or registration may be completed by contacting Home Hospice of Grayson County at (903) 868-9315 or sherry.little@homehospice.org. Online registration is

The Children's Advocacy Center (CAC) of Grayson County is a child friendly environment for children after they have suffered abuse and neglect. Here they can feel safe telling their experiences while finding the support they need for healing to begin. The CAC offers a coordinated, multi-disciplinary intervention system that involves Child Protective Services, Law Enforcement, the Grayson County Attorneys Office, therapists, and medical personnel working as a team to break the cycle of abuse in Grayson County.

These two agencies have joined to present a cost effective option for professionals in this area to acquire some of their required ethics continuing education locally.

BUILDING BRIDGES

SHCS sophomores explore properties of triangles

The 10th grade Geometry class at Sacred Heart Catholic High School has been investigating the properties of triangles. To extend these lessons, they explored how engineers use triangles to construct strong, stable structures, and then they applied these concepts to design and build bridges.

Students worked either alone or with a partner to construct a bridge out of exactly 15 sticks of balsa wood and one small bottle of glue. Each bridge had to meet strict specifications for length, width, and height, so that they could participate in a contest to see whose bridge had the highest engineering efficiency rating. This was determined by adding weights to a bucket suspended from the road bed of the bridge. Once the bridges collapsed, the students calculated the efficiency rating by dividing the mass of the load by the mass of the bridge. The first place winners were Katie Davidson and Grant Springer with a rating of 900, while Jared Dangelmayr was a close second with a 812.5 rating. Roscoe Sprouse's bridge came in third at 625. "The sophomores really enjoyed working on this assignment," said their teacher Barbara LaChance. The materials and resources for this project were provided by North Central Texas College (NCTC) through a grant from the Texas Regional Collaboratives. The Texas Regional Collaboratives for Excellence in Science and Mathematics Teaching (TRC) is an award-winning network of P-16 partnerships that provide sustained, high intensity professional development to P-12 teachers of science and mathematics. Through this partnership, North Central Texas College provides training to north Texas schools, through hands-on and interactive training. Most trainings are after school hours to accommodate teacher schedules and all are free of charge. Sacred Heart teachers who are members of this collaborative include Michele Knauf (4th grade), Marilen Juntado (high school science), and Barbara LaChance (junior high and high school math).

Thirteen Muenster youth show at Houston

From across the U.S. and Texas, exhibitors come to the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo each spring to vie for a championship title. Houston held their first show in 1932. It was known for years as the Houston Fat Stock Show.

The Houston Show draws thousands of Texas 4-H and FFA exhibitors to compete at the world's largest livestock show. These students bring various species of livestock from rabbits and poultry to goats and steers, each hoping to take home the coveted title of Houston Champion. Each exhibitor works several months to prepare for competition among the finest junior livestock the state of Texas has to offer. Participants between the ages of nine and 18 are Texas residents and are members of a Texas 4-H Club or FFA Chapter.

Last week, Muenster had 13 of their youth at the Junior Market Show, with their goats and lambs.

Entering the goat competition were Hannah Bayer, Darrell Hermes, Kassie Dangelmayr, Natalie Dangelmayr, Travis Dangelmayr, Curtis Haverkamp, Dane Huchton, Blair Waneck, Stephen Dangelmayr, Dyan Huchton, and Alexa Waneck. Hermes placed 13th in his division and his animal went to sale.

was donated by his grandson Brad Dennison.

A photo on display is of cowboys at Red River Station. "Those are the real cowboys," proclaimed Janis. "It's not like you see in the movies. Saint Jo was a day's ride from Red River Station and we had water and good grass, so it was a perfect place to bed down (outside of town where the springs are) before you left. When the Chisholm Trail was coming through, possibly six million head of cattle crossed Red River Station. That was a crossing north of Nocona.

"There are people who would loan us things once we get enough room," said Janis. They added on to the back, put restrooms in, and added an inside staircase. They plan to add an elevator when sufficient funds are available. The upstairs is a work in progress and not yet open to the public. Funding is also what is holding up that restoration. Eventually, it will be used as an exhibit area.

"It is so important to the town. It's who Saint Jo is," Janis stated. "Saint Jo was the social economic hub of the area. Oldest town - there wasn't anything else around. Until the railroad came, there wasn't a Nocona or Bowie. It was Saint Jo and Montague. We have pictures of the square throughout time that shows the evolution of the town. We have pictures that show tons of cars on the square. There were two drugstores, multiple grocery stores, doctor's office, dentist office, millenary shops, general stores, dry goods stores. It was where it was."

Janis said that Saint Jo was featured in Texas Highways last year. There are a significant number of people making day trips to enjoy what Saint Jo has to offer. Janis said, "We're really working at trying to get retail on the square of Saint Jo."

Janis explained that the Museum is open on weekends, staffed by volunteers. She noted it is interesting to visit with patrons. They might mention a relative who once lived in the area and tell a history story that the relative had shared with them. Many memories and stories are shared at the Museum and those present at the right time can be entertained by some colorful tales.

In 2012, about 2,000 people visited the Stonewall Saloon Museum. Names of the visitors and their residences are recorded in a book. Janis told of four young ladies from France who were traveling across the United States this summer. They stopped at the Museum in Saint Jo on their way to spend the night in Paris, Texas. Janis remembers that they were sitting there and two cowboys came in the door dressed in cowboy hats, boots, big belt buckles, and wearing mustaches. Their hearts went to beating faster. They had group pictures made with them and exchanged Facebook addresses. "It made their day," said Janis. She's not sure if they made it to Paris that night since they spent a long time in the Museum.

All workers at the Museum are volunteers and they have a passion for preserving Saint Jo's history. They welcome visitors and will do all they can to make your visit to Saint Jo a memorable and informative experience.

Stonewall Saloon Museum hours are: Saturday 10 a.m. - 5 p.m.; Sunday 1 p.m. - 5 p.m., or by appointment. To schedule an appointment, contact Janis at (940) 995-7193.

Texas Game Warden Field Reports

Neighborhood watch

A warden received a call from Bell County dispatch from a witness who saw someone in a vehicle shoot a deer in a new subdivision in Temple, load it up, and leave the scene. As soon as the operator said the street names, the warden recognized the location as his neighborhood. In fact, he jogs there at night.

When he responded, the warden met with the person who made the complaint and was given a license plate number for a vehicle registered in Williamson County. The plates also matched with a hunting license held by someone living around the corner from where the deer was shot. The warden went to the house, located the subject, and found a doe in a shed in his yard. The man confessed that he and his uncle had shot the deer. During the interview, the man said, "Yeah, I hope we didn't get you out of bed! I knew you lived around the corner and me and my uncle had the conversation before we left that it might not be a good idea because the game warden lives right around the corner!" Several deer and weapons seized, and multiple citations issued.

You can run, but you can't hide

A Gillespie County game warden received a call from a landowner who had a photo of two unknown hunters standing over a dead deer under his game feeder. The warden found drag marks and blood evidence leading through two other properties. After spending the day knocking on doors and meeting with other landowners, the warden found the subject's residence, or former residence. The warden spoke to the suspect's mother and found out that the suspects had moved back to Alabama two days after the deer was shot.

The warden then contacted the Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources for assistance. Alabama wardens interviewed the suspects and secured the evidence. The meat will be donated to a needy family in Baldwin County, Ala. Cases pending.

Ruger's nose, knows

Two game wardens received a call in southern

Travis County regarding possible hunting without landowner consent. When the wardens arrived, they found a truck pulled off the road near a construction site and decided to wait until the owner returned. Hours later, the subject had someone drop him off at his vehicle. When confronted, he admitted digging for artifacts and fishing without landowner's consent.

The subject had numerous prior drug charges and seemed to be very nervous during the interview. One of the wardens ran police dog Ruger around the truck and he alerted outside the driver's door. Ruger then searched inside the vehicle and reacted to the sunglass compartment where less than two ounces of marijuana was found. Numerous citations issued. Cases pending.

Therapeutic rampage

Three Sabine County game wardens were dispatched to FM 330, where they met with U.S. Forest Service officers who had detained a man for various violations. The subject shot three white-tailed does, all un-tagged. The wardens seized the deer, and numerous charges are pending. The man said he was not happy with the way his archery season went and he took his frustrations out on anything he saw that morning.

Rules and regulations

A Jasper County game warden was patrolling the national forest and saw a man riding an ATV on an adjacent deer lease with two eight-point bucks on the back. After contacting the individual, the warden found that the deer antlers were less than 13 inches wide. The man said he had been hunting his whole life, and for a decade or more years on this lease. He wasn't aware that he couldn't take two eight-point bucks. Regulations were discussed. Cases pending.

Too little, too late

An Angela County game warden who pulled into a deer camp to check hunters came across a man from Lufkin who had killed a 14-inch, six-point buck on opening day. As he continued to check the camp, the warden saw that a deer had been freshly dressed at the skinning rack. The man told the warden that his girlfriend had killed her first buck, but neither the deer nor the hunter was at the camp. The warden asked the man if he had a picture of the 17-inch, nine-point deer, and then he showed him a photo from his phone of a big deer hanging from the skinning rack by the antlers. The game warden asked if he had a photo of his girlfriend with her first deer and the man said no. After further investigation, the warden found that the Lufkin man killed the buck, then called his girlfriend and asked her to purchase a hunting license and tag the deer. Citations were issued.

Consumers begin returning to typical meat buying habits

When purchasing meat and poultry products, trends indicate consumers are shifting their focus from lower prices to value, quality, and variety, according to the Power of Meat survey published by the American Meat Institute and Food Marketing Institute.

tion are growing in overall importance. Value cuts, which offer bolder flavors at lower prices, are answering consumer demand.

Organic and natural purchases are expected to grow in 2014, with 34% of participants indicating purchasing these products in the last three months. This is up 26% from last year's survey results.

The report shows that 36% plan to spend more on meat and poultry in 2014 compared to the 9% change last year. This could be the first indication of a return to the pre-recession "normal," according to Feedstuffs FoodLink.

Price is still the ultimate deciding factor, but knowledge, convenience, and nutri-

Vilsack says U.S. meat safety not hurt by cut in funding

Funding cuts for the U.S. meat and poultry inspections in the Obama administration's 2015 budget proposal will not compromise food safety, according to U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack.

The budget for USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service (FSIS) was trimmed by about $9.3 million for fiscal year 2015 from the enacted level of 2014 to just over $1 billion, according to Drovers CattleNetwork.

The budget proposal also included a plan to implement a new user fee for plants that have sample failures or require additional inspections due to non-compliance with regulations.

FSIS is responsible for ensuring the safety of meat, poultry, and egg products produced in the U.S.

Private property rights resurface in Washington

Legislation to strengthen private property rights was approved in the House of Representatives by a vote of 365-65.

Supported by the American Farm Bureau Federation (AFBF), the legislation does not allow states that receive federal economic development funding from exercising eminent domain for private economic development. The bill, Private Property Rights Protection Act of 2013 (HR 1944), also prohibits the use of eminent domain for economic development by the federal government.

If a state uses eminent domain for private economic development, it would lose all federal economic development funding for two years.

The issue is not expected to be addressed in the Senate this year.

New campaign highlights milk protein

"Milk Life," the new $60 million cross-platform campaign, focuses on the protein power of milk, aiming to reinforce milk's nutritional benefit to consumers. Appetite and show the important health benefits provided by dairy protein.

While emphasizing the importance of consuming milk, the new campaign also features everyday moments of accomplishment, achievement, and enjoyment, according to Feedstuffs FoodLink. The campaign will be delivered through an integrated array of media outlets, along with print advertisements.

Keep accurate records

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Farm Service Agency (FSA) urges farmers and ranchers affected by natural disasters, such as drought, to keep accurate records of livestock and feed losses, along with any additional expenses that are a result of losses to purchased forage or feed stuff.

Dates of death supported by birth recordings or purchase receipts, evidence of damaged farm land, and costs of transporting livestock to safer grounds or to move animals to new pastures should be recorded.

Farmers are Old. So What?

Each census of farmers throws out the same red flag—as a group, they're getting older. But Carl Zulauf, a professor at Ohio State University's College of Food, Agriculture and Environmental Sciences, says we should stop freaking out about aging farmers. He conducted his own study and found farmers are getting older, but not at a greater rate than the rest of the American labor force. Further, he says, farmers have been older than everyone else since the 1980s.

Then, he throws out a tidbit of common sense, mostly overlooked by the economists who have tried to scare us with their aging data, which is the fact that the recent trend shows more young farmers entering the business. Why? Profits and the recent prosperity of agriculture. "You have to realize that the longer you have above-average returns, the more likely you are to pull people in," says Zulauf.

Change Our Eating Habits? Fuhgidabowdit

When the feds tell food companies to overhaul food labels, it's big news, and those new labels could have a dramatic effect on what Americans eat and help reduce obesity. Only they won't. Sure, there's some common sense in this label redo, such as the updates to serving sizes, which make calorie counting easier. But like any government project, implementation is never easy. There's the 90-day comment period, then if approved, companies will have about two years to comply with the changes—at an estimated cost of $2 billion. Once all that's done, the feds expect consumers to change their eating habits. We're not buying it. If you like Twinkies, for instance, we suspect you'll still eat Twinkies, regardless of what the label says. Read the labels?

The United Steaks of America

L.V. Anderson is outraged that only four states—Louisiana, Maryland, Oklahoma, and Texas—name meaty dishes among their official state foods. "And Maryland doesn't really count—its state food is the blue crab, which is more like an edible bug than a meat."

In an attempt to right this injustice, Anderson set out to assign a meat to every state—and not just any meat. "Red meat is what makes Americans red-blooded. Chicken, fish, and turkey? Off the table." So Anderson's map links a red meat dish to each state with this ground rule: The food must come from hair-growing, milk-producing, four-legged animals. Anderson, however, breaks this rule by linking Florida with alligator meat using this rationale: "Is the alligator a mammal? No, it is not. But is Florida a normal state? No, it is not." Case closed.

Don't Mess with Texas - Or Private Property Rights

By Gene Hall

Private property rights are worth fighting for. There have been wars over that principle. People have laid down their lives. Texans believed that 178 years ago this week, when a few dozen of them signed a Declaration of Independence. Texans will still raise a fuss if you mess with their property rights.

Private property rights have been the cornerstone of Texas freedom since Stephen F. Austin brought the first settlers here. They came for the right to own their own land. They established farms and families, built communities, and set the direction for a new Texas. When Santa Anna threatened all that, they fought, bled, and died for what they believed.

Driven by the incentive of land ownership and the right to use that property to fulfill their dreams, they transformed a wild, inhospitable land into a haven of opportunity. It wasn't easy. They persisted because private property was the key to their future. It still is.

More than 90% of Texas is privately owned. Partly because of that, we are one of the most prosperous states in the nation.

Yet, some have not absorbed the lesson. Private property rights are under attack. The mothers and fathers of Texas fought a war over it. We will fight, too—in court, in Austin and Washington, and at the ballot box. It's still worth the fight.
