Caution: lengthy wait ahead

Construction on U.S. Hwy. 385 (25 Mile Avenue) continues to snarl traffic, bringing longer lines and more waiting for motorists who want to cross or drive on the major thoroughfare. Travelers can expect more of the same in coming months. This phase of the project is nearing the mid-way point, but a completion date of Spring 1998 has been targeted for all construction.

"Not only does the public think members of Congress should have their pay cut, they only get angrier when raises occur through ... maneuvers."

- Pete Sepp,
National Taxpayers Union

Pay increase drawing fire

WASHINGTON (AP) - Without debate - or vote - House lawmakers placed themselves on a glidepath to a pay hike of $3,072 next year.

And critics of the automatic cost-of-living increase that would boost the current $133,600 congressional salary are none too pleased.

"Not only does the public think members of Congress should have their pay cut, they only get angrier when raises occur through parliamentary maneuvers or, as in the past, during the middle of the night," Pete Sepp of the National Taxpayers Union said Thursday.

A day earlier, in speedy fashion, the House passed a spending bill denuded of a provision seen in each of the last four years: One blocking pay hikes for lawmakers. So in the absence of that blocking amendment - and with no word of a salary increase mentioned - legislators positioned themselves for a 2.3 percent pay raise next year.

Not all of the politicians themselves were pleased with how the issue was handled.

"It was wrong for the House to vote itself a pay raise," said Rep. Kevin Brady, R-The Woodlands, vowing not to accept the extra money. "We need to set an example for the rest of the federal government, especially since we are asking everyone else to hold the line and to do more with less."

But Brady, a freshman, was equally upset about how Republican leaders "ramrodded" the $25 billion spending bill through. The legislation was "hastily pulled out of order, with limited debate and no opportunity for members to vote cleanly against the pay raise," he fumed.

During separate closed-door caucuses Wednesday, rank-and-file members of both parties discussed the issue that had been quietly worked on for weeks by Republican and Democratic leaders.

One, House Majority Leader Dick Army, denied any precipitous action.

"There has been nobody ... that has come up to me and said 'Dick, I'd like to put an amendment on the floor that addresses members' compensation,'" the Irving Republican said Thursday.

Asked if he expects any public outcry, Army said: "We passed an appropriations bill yesterday. I voted for it. That bill addresses members' compensation not at all. That's the story and I don't know why or how I should expect any flak over that."

Social Security: Lawmakers look to others for aid

WASHINGTON (AP) - In Chile, a public pension does not exist anymore, but workers must invest 10 percent of their wages with a private pension company.

In Sweden, people will have to choose between working longer or lowering state retirement benefits as life expectancy rises.

In the United States, lawmakers challenged by President Clinton's recent pledge to fix Social Security are looking to these and other countries for ideas and advice.

"We should listen carefully to their reasons for change and closely consider the aspects of their reforms that could shed light on possible reforms of our own Social Security program," said Rep. Jim Bunning, R-Ky., chairman of the House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security, which questioned foreign pension experts Thursday.

Financial disaster looms for America's retirement program as more than 70 million baby boomers age. President Clinton said earlier this month he wants to head it off before the end of his second term.

Although an advisory council has suggested retirement funds could be increased if they were invested on booming Wall Street, neither that nor any other ideas under consideration have been endorsed by congressional leaders or the White House.

Foreign experts have been invited this month to testify at several hearings on Capitol Hill and give private briefings to members of Congress of both parties and their staffs. They also have met with lobbyists and political strategists.

"There are some important lessons to be learned from ... these countries. Some of these lessons are both positive and cautionary," said Rep. Barbara Kennelly, D-Conn., at Thursday's hearing.

In Britain, for example, everyone gets a standard public pension when they retire. But since 1985 workers have had a choice of whether to supplement that by keeping a portion of their payroll taxes in a government-run and guaranteed program like Social Security or investing it privately.

The 5.7 million who chose private investment have earned as much as three times the government-guaranteed rate of return, according to Daniel Finkelstein, director of research for the Conservative Party of Britain.

Still, Finkelstein said "in Great Britain, as in the United States, pensions are an extraordinarily sensitive subject," and leaving people with the choice of staying in the old program was necessary to ease fears of change.

Some of those fears have proved well-founded, said Teresa Ghilarducci, a professor of economics at the University of Notre Dame.

Ghilarducci told lawmakers that besides the vagaries of the stock markets, workers in Britain and Chile are at the mercy of investment companies that charge fees eating up as much as 20 cents of every dollar of people's retirement savings.

"Wall Street will gain a lot from privatization here," said Ghilarducci.

Senate takes first 'small step' to cut back on use of deceptive language

By CALVIN WOODWARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - Being a Most Favored Nation trading partner with the United States is like buying a large drink in a shop that sells extra large and jumbo - not as big a deal as it sounds.

It is like one of those childhood competitions where everyone gets a ribbon. Where almost everyone you know is your very best friend.

Or where, as radio storyteller Garrison Keillor describes his Lake Wobegon, "the women are strong, the men are good-looking and all of the children are above average."

Striking a small blow for truth in legislative advertising, the Senate is moving to send the term Most Favored Nation into the dustbin and replace it with "normal trade relations."

"Lexicographers and trade negotiators will thank us," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., a stickler for words.

Rutgers English Prof. William Lutz, author of "The New Doublespeak" and chronicler of such linguistic distortions as "revenue enhancements" for tax increases, is mildly grateful.

"A small step," he said. "The deceptive language is backfiring."

The name-changing bill, as passed by the Senate Finance Committee and expected to be approved by both houses of Congress, would not affect the conditions under which the United States trades with the world.

Nor would it change the substance of the yearly debate about whether China should continue to enjoy MFN, or normal tariffs, in its $51.5 billion worth of exports to America.

But it would remove one public relations thorn - a term that suggests China and other countries considered repressive are being treated like buddies for the sake of U.S. commercial interests.

The Clinton administration is making its own move to the mundane, opting for "traditional trading authority" instead of "fast track" to describe the process of negotiating trade agreements that Congress accepts or rejects without amendment.

"Fast track" has had the connotation of ramming something through Congress and it has let opponents seize on phrases like: "Fast track is the wrong track."

As for MFN, all but eight countries get that status or better.

Some developing countries get the extra large - the General System of Preferences. Canada and Mexico get the jumbo - the North American Free Trade Agreement eliminating most duties over 15 years.

Altogether, it is like the party in the children's book where everyone gets invited except "Hooper Humperdink...? - Not Him!"

("All my good friends from A to Z!
The biggest gang you'll ever see!
The biggest gang there'll ever be!")

Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Cambodia, Cuba, Laos, Mongolia, North Korea and Vietnam are the Hooper Humperdinks of the trading world.

They are the non-MFN countries where disagreements with the United States are so deep or rooted in history that Washington tries to choke off trade with them.

("Nobody wants to play with Hooper Humperdink's a party pooper!")

Cuba gets the toughest medicine, a U.S. trade embargo coupled with an effort resented by Cuba's trading partners to clamp down on certain investments in the country by other nations.

("That Humperdink! I don't know why, but somehow I don't like that guy.")

But Washington is working out normal trade relations with Vietnam, and the Finance Committee voted last week to bring Mongolia and Laos into the very big club.

("A party big and good as this is too good for anyone to miss. And so, you know, I sort of think, I WILL ask Hooper Humperdink!")

Army's top EM faces trial on sex charges

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene McKinney should face court martial on 22 charges of sexual misconduct, a military hearing officer has recommended after reviewing allegations by six women who said he made improper advances toward them.

In the report he submitted to the Army on Wednesday, Col. Robert Jarvis rejected a request by the chief prosecutor to add rape to the list of charges against McKinney.

Two sources familiar with the case told The Associated Press today that Jarvis recommended

McKinney be court-martialed on 22 counts of indecent assault, adultery and obstruction of justice.

The Army refused to confirm the substance or the conclusions of Jarvis' report. Details first appeared in today's edition of The Washington Times.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis Reimer, asked about the report, said he was not aware of the content of Jarvis' recommendation. "I absolutely do not know what it was," said the four-star general.

McKinney did not testify during the two-month hearing that ended late last month at Fort McNair.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: Last week, I went shopping and spent more money than I knew my husband would approve of. I decided if I could show him what I'm worth to him, he may realize how good he has it. I created a want ad and told him this was what he'd have to run in the paper if he wanted to replace me. He was a little upset but laughed about the ad and has since shared it with his friends. I'm certain it kept us from a fight that day. Please print it for others who think housewives aren't so valuable. -- C.L. in Utah

Dear C.L.: Your "want ad" is sure to appear on several dinner plates tonight and taped to numerous shaving mirrors in the morning. Thank you on behalf of all the women whose song you sang today. Here it is: Help Wanted

I need someone full time who is willing to be on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Sick leave only when hospitalization is required. Must be able to cook, clean house, do laundry, care for children, feed and clean up after dog, do yard work, mow lawn in summer, shovel snow in winter, do shopping, do menu planning, take out trash, pay bills, answer phone and run errands. Must be able to pinch pennies. Also must be a friend and a companion. Must be patient and cannot complain. If you are interested, please leave a message. I will contact you when I feel like talking. Speak only when you have something to say that might interest me. Otherwise, shut up and get to work.

Dear Ann Landers: I have been enjoying the many letters from your readers who tell you how they met and married. Here's how I met my husband, "Dick":

My girlfriend and I were working buddies. When the Christmas holidays were coming up, we decided to double-date. She fixed me up with her brother, who was home on a school break. I set her up with my brother, who was available at the time.

A year later, my friend broke the news to our families that she and my brother had eloped. All the parents were stunned and not too happy. Tensions were high until I stepped in and said, "What's the big deal? Dick and I have been married for six months." They were speechless, and there was no way they could argue with the four of us.

So my friend and I became sisters-in-law, and in the process, we exchanged last names. After nearly 48 years of marriage for both of us, no one has anything to say except congratulations. -- Rose in Milltown, N.J.

Dear Rose: Your story had a wonderful O. Henry ending. I loved it!

Dear Ann Landers: After reading the letters from the nurse and the musician who, when they go out socially, are asked to "ply their trade," I knew I had to write.

I am a licensed massage therapist. When I go to parties, people not only ask me questions, they ask me to work on them. I have been to social affairs where folks actually start taking off their clothes and ask me what I think. Recently, a woman followed me around at a party, dragging a chair with her. Whenever I stopped, she would sit in front of me and say, "You're only talking. You can work on me as well."

I have learned over the years not to say what I do for a living so I can get some peace at parties. -- Babylon, N.Y.

Dear Babylon: I see your point, but you could also say, "Sorry, the body shop is closed, and I'm taking the night off."

What is the future of children in eternity?

By REV. BONNIE DUNSWORTH
Wesley United Methodist Church

There are several reasons that Sunday School is of importance to our children and our church.

This is where we learn and grow as Christians, we develop relationships and learn about our faith. As children, in particular, they are educated five days a week, eight hours a day of secular schooling. This is necessary for their future in the work force and society.

What is their future in eternity? As children they have not reached the age of accountability, what happens when they do? Statistics show us when children reach the ages of pre-puberty, the world has already influenced them in their decisions and lifestyle.

As a Christian body, we need to reach them before the world does. This is not an easy job. It takes "sticktuitism" to accomplish this task. Christ said, "Suffer the children to come unto me." Are we denying children to come to church by not being dedicated to teach them the love of Christ?

When I was growing up as a child I was an encouragement to my teachers but like many young teens I decided to stray away from my godly life. My Sunday school teacher still prayed for me and still does today, some 30 years later, I might add. It was through the prayers of a loving Church that God could work in my life. Today I am serving God full-time as a pastor. The people in my community are amazed to say the least.

Let this be an encouragement to any teacher who may have a hard class, or a child that may have strayed from a godly life. We do not know what God's will is for any child, but we do know He loves all children. They are His.
