Energy conservation plan nets HISD savings

Checking the temperature

Shirley Intermediate School principal David Fanning, right, and school district energy manager David Morris check out the settings on an electronic thermostat recently installed at the school. The thermostat -- and ones like it put in to control boilers at schools throughout the district -- is part of an overall HISD plan aimed at cutting utility costs.

City leaders asking input from citizens on priorities

By GEORGIA TYLER
Staff Writer

All residents of Hereford are being called to service -- to help city government determine needs and priorities of the city.

Approximately 6,000 questionnaires went into the mail Friday to city utility customers, soliciting response.

And, in this edition of The Brand, an advertisement offers the opportunity to citizens who do not receive the mail-out.

Involvement of residents in the goal-setting process is critical at this time, said Mayor Bob Josserand.

"With the incoming Premium Standard Farms processing and slaughter plant, it is important that citizens let us know how they feel about new and needed improvements," said Josserand.

He pointed out that new business undoubtedly will be generated by the PSF plant and more people will come to the community.

"We truly need to know thoughts of our citizens about existing services as well as new services that will be required," Josserand added.

The questionnaire asks persons responding to rate the city's performance in the last year, on a scale of one to five.

And, residents are requested to choose three most important areas the city should address from six choices.

streets, drainage, garbage, parks, utilities, public safety and airport.

Searching for a way to encourage response to the questionnaire, the City Commission decided to sweeten the pot -- create some competition among those participating.

One question asks for a suggestion for a single, most important item for the city to accomplish.

The three best ideas will win $50 Hereford bucks each for their contributors.

And, for everyone who turns in a reply, there will be a chance to win 25 Hereford bucks. A drawing will be held from all responses and five residents will receive the 25 shopping dollars.

Participants in the survey may return the questionnaires through the drive-in window at City Hall or by mail. A "voice mail" will be open after 5 p.m. for the benefit of those who do not wish to fill out the survey. The number is 364-2123.

Questionnaires need not be signed but a signature will be required for eligibility for prizes. Deadline for turning in the questionnaire is March 10.

Mayor Josserand is concerned that the city adopt a long-range plan for development and improvements.

Some of the projects commissioners see for the future include additional park development, suggested by Commissioners Nancy Griego and Silvana Juarez.

Water development is an objective. Commissioner Wayne Winger hopes will be a continuing goal. Economic development is a major concern of Commissioners Carey Black and Roger Eades.

Reaching goals set by the commission since June 1993 has been the job of the city staff.

The primary goal set by the commission early on was to develop a water supply for the city. A $3 million revenue bond sale provided funds for implementing the water program. New wells have been drilled and more are in the very near future.

Another objective set by the commission was park development and improvements. To that end, a series of meetings was held in neighborhoods last year to gather input from citizens about their hopes for parks.

The park department has been working on the priorities set by the commission.

An improvement program for the airport will be undertaken, with the help of funding from a federal and state grant.

Other projects also are on the drawing board for the future.

Filing periods to start Monday for elections

Filing will begin Monday for citizens who wish to run for seats on the Hereford City Commission or Hereford Independent School District board of trustees.

And, prospective candidates for seats on the Deaf Smith County Hospital District board of directors may pick up filing materials beginning Tuesday.

Elections for the three entities will be held on May 6.

Two commissioner positions and the mayor's job are on the election agenda for the city this year.

Mayor Bob Josserand and Silvana Juarez, Place 1 commissioner, have said they plan to seek re-election. Josserand is finishing his first two-year term in city government. Juarez has served four two-year terms.

A commissioner for Place 3 also will be elected. Dennis Hicks, elected in 1993, has resigned. A replacement for him will be named to fill the unexpired term.

Filing documents are available from City Secretary Terri Johnson. The last day to file for city office is March 22.

In the school trustee election, the terms of District 4 Trustee Mike Veazey and District 5 Trustee and board president Steve Wright expire this year.

Wright announced at the Jan. 23 board meeting that he will file for re-election.

However, Veazey confirmed Friday that he will not run again.

Veazey has served on the school board for four years, the first year to fill an unexpired term, the last three years in a complete term.

Filing documents will be available from Superintendent Charles W. Greenawalt's office.

The school administration building, located at 601 N. 25 Mile Avenue, will not be open Monday due to a holiday. Business will resume on Tuesday.

The last day to file for the election is March 22 and all prospective candidates are urged to check with Greenawalt's office before filing to make sure they live in the appropriate district.

This election will be the first one conducted under a new district map that was approved last year and includes some changes from the previous district plan. The new school board district map is based on 1990 census figures and reflects current ethnic breakdowns in the city.

Hospital board members whose terms expire this year are Mal Manchee, currently serving as board president; Jo Beth Shackelford and Scott Keeling. Keeling was appointed last year to fill the unexpired term of Scott Turner.

Candidates for hospital board must file a petition of candidacy, signed by 25 registered voters. The board will issue a formal call for the election at the regular meeting Tuesday evening.

Clark then pulled the blue cap from its sack.

"That also appears to be the blue knit stocking cap that I observed near the glove," Lange said.

It was the first display of physical evidence since the trial began, and legal analysts said its timing Friday was intended to leave jurors with something to think about over the three-day holiday weekend.

By GARRY WESNER
Managing Editor

It's 7:20 p.m. on Valentine's Day and David Morris is all alone, prowling the halls of Hereford High School.

Armed with a four-part energy audit form and a pen, Morris looks for evidence of energy waste -- a light left on, a thermostat turned up too high, even a dripping faucet.

This time, his report was fairly clear -- compliance throughout the building except for lights left on in one restroom and two thermostats set at something other than the 60 degree nighttime temperature. One was set at 64 degrees.

The walk-through is all part of the job for Morris, who holds the dual title of transportation manager and energy manager for the Hereford Independent School District.

Morris was hired two years ago as energy manager after school trustees, concerned about what they were spending for electricity, gas and water, embarked upon an energy management program designed to save money and conserve energy.

His mission, he said, was a simple one -- "save dollars for the schools" -- by finding ways to cut expenses during the hours of the day -- nights, weekends and holidays -- when school was not in session.

In March 1993, Morris said, the district had just completed a 12-month period in which costs just for utilities totalled $469,431 -- nearly as much as the entire budget for the transportation department, including purchase of new buses.

As energy manager, it has been Morris' responsibility to bring those costs down.

His attack has been multi-pronged.

First, using a software package designed for energy management, he developed a base of information about district energy uses.

For this Morris took the 12 months from March 1992 through February 1993. He entered into the computer the amount spent on utilities at each school building during that time period.

Then he added weather conditions for the year, as well as such variables as when meters were read and length of billing periods.

By creating an information base that included weather and other variables, Morris said he ensured that future energy use and cost comparisons were accurate and not skewed by the variables.

At the same time, the district implemented several procedures aimed at saving energy.

Morris said energy-efficient programmable thermostats were installed at campuses where heat was controlled by a boiler.

In the past, he said, heaters would have to be kept running all night in cold weather to keep pipes from freezing, but with the thermostats, the boilers could be set to keep the buildings warm enough to protect the pipes, but cool enough to save money.

"We spent about $2,000 doing that and it's resulted in thousands of dollars in savings in gas consumption," Morris said.

Heaters are now set at 60 degrees at 4 p.m., as soon as the students leave the building.

A new roof at the Stanton Special Populations Center also helped, Morris said, because insulation was put in under the metal roof, cutting heating and air conditioning bills.

At the high school, a new heating/air conditioning system was installed and is controlled by a computer program that saves more money. Tinted windows make air conditioners work less hard in the summer, saving still more money.

Upcoming is a project this summer to replace the roof, windows and doors at Shirley Intermediate School.

Having large windows replaced with solid panels and tinted glass, plus extra insulation in that building will add to the savings.

After that, trustees are looking at heating systems at West Central and Tierra Blanca schools.

Morris said those are all electric systems, which are very expensive to operate.

Adding to energy problems there, the schools were originally built on an "open" concept with no walls between classrooms. Over the years, those classrooms have been enclosed, creating air-flow problems in the current system, resulting in hot spots and cold spots where there is too much or not enough heat movement.

As the district moves through its energy management program, Morris updates his computer with monthly information on costs.

Because weather and other factors are considered, he gets an accurate reading on how much is spent and how much is saved.

For example, he said, "this January of 1995 was a lot milder weatherwise than January 1993," he said.

"We spent in that month $68,076 -- that's our total district utilities, water, electricity, gas," he said.

Because of the milder weather last (See ENERGY, Page 2A)

Simpson murder trial finishes week with look at bloody glove

By LINDA DEUTSCH
AP Special Correspondent

LOS ANGELES (AP) - After days of drab police testimony, O.J. Simpson's prosecutor ended the week with a cinematic moment befitting a true murder mystery, dramatically unveiling a ski cap and bloody glove found at the crime scene.

With plastic gloves covering her hands, Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark gingerly extracted the two key pieces of evidence, first from a cardboard box, then from crumpled brown paper bags.

She laid the glove on the witness stand in front of Detective Tom Lange.

"It appears to be the glove that I observed at the foot of Mr. Goldman," testified Lange, referring to slaying victim Ronald Goldman.

Clark then pulled the blue cap from its sack.

"That also appears to be the blue knit stocking cap that I observed near the glove," Lange said.

Simpson, watching closely, turned and appeared to tell his lawyer, Robert Shapiro, "That looks too small for me."

It was the first display of physical evidence since the trial began, and legal analysts said its timing Friday was intended to leave jurors with something to think about over the three-day holiday weekend.

Other projects also are on the drawing board for the future.

Loyola University law professor Laurie Levenson, "Testimony from police witnesses tends to be rather dry. A hat and a glove, without saying a word, are much more interesting."

Simpson is charged with murdering ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman on June 12.

Prosecutors say fibers found on the hat match carpets in Simpson's Bronco, and hairs on the hat are similar to his. The glove matches another blood-stained glove found at Simpson's estate two miles away, police say.

The defense says a police detective may have planted the glove to frame Simpson.

Local Roundup

Sunday dancing on agenda

Hereford City Commission will conduct a hearing, beginning at 7 p.m., Monday on a request by a citizens' group to change a city ordinance banning Sunday dancing except under certain conditions. The commission also will recognize persons who have served the city, hear requests for water extension outside the city limits and discuss, in executive session, a replacement for Dennis Hicks in the Place 3 position on the commission.

Taking a holiday

County, state and federal offices will observe Presidents Day Monday, closing for the day. Financial institutions also will be closed and no mail deliveries will be made. Hereford schools have a holiday, also. Bluebonnet School students will get an extra day off when teachers spend Tuesday in a staff development program. City of Hereford offices will be open.

Blood bank here Wednesday

Coffee Memorial Blood Bank will be at Hereford Community Center Wednesday to accept blood donations from 4 to 7 p.m. The blood donor campaign is sponsored by the Women's Division of Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce.

Fund set for Claude victims

A fund has been established in Amarillo to accept contributions to offset funeral expenses for five Claude residents killed last week in a car accident. One of the victims, Cheryl Renea Campbell, 16, was born in Hereford. Her father, Jerry Campbell, and grandmother, Eddie Campbell, live here. Donations to the fund will be accepted at any Amarillo location of Boatmen's First National Bank. The account is being handled through the bank's Grand Street location.

Researcher says future murder rates will soar

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

ATLANTA (AP) - The U.S. murder rate, already described by some as an epidemic, will increase sharply and lead to a "blood bath" within the next decade as the number of teen-agers grows, a researcher says.

Murders committed by children aged 14 to 17 have increased by 165 percent since 1985, said James Alan Fox, dean of the College of Criminal Justice at Northeastern University.

That will surge even more as some 40 million young children mature into their teens, Fox said.

"Unless we act today, I truly believe we'll have a blood bath in 10 years when all these kids grow up," Fox said Friday at the national meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. "I'm not optimistic."

Alfred Blumstein of Carnegie Mellon University called Fox's description "excessive," but agreed that America should brace for a spurt in the national murder rate.

"I do expect that as there are more people in the high crime ages, of 14 to 24, then the rates will go up," he said. "It will be a shift upward on the order of 10 percent."

Murder rates among teens actually dipped in the 1970s, but surged suddenly in the mid-1980s when crack cocaine - and the guns that came with it - became common on the streets.

"With the introduction of crack, there were far more drug transactions and the number of sellers expanded," Blumstein said. "If you're in the drug business, you have to carry a gun."

"The more guns there were, the greater the incentive for a kid to get one," he said. "Teen-age fights, which are inevitable, escalated into shootings."

Blumstein and Fox were on a panel scientists presenting research into American homicides.

Another panelist, Douglas Lee Eckberg of Winthrop University, said that the United States has endured violent eras in the past. The current rate - about 50 murders per 100,000 people - is similar to those from the 1920s and 1930s, he said. Estimates put the homicide rates in 1800s even higher.

Despite billions of dollars spent by the government on social programs, the solution to widespread violence in America is still unknown, even by the experts, Blumstein and Fox said.

Fox said the government's concentration on correcting teen-agers may be too little, too late.

"We need to invest in kids at age 6 or 7," he said. "If we wait until high school, then there is little we can do to reach them."

Justice probe focuses on Brown's ex-partner

By MARCY GORDON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Ron Brown's daughter and his Commerce Department counselor received money from Brown's ex-business partner, whose financial links with the commerce secretary are being examined by congressional investigators and the Justice Department.

The payments by Brown's partner, Washington businesswoman Nolanda Hill, were in addition to $403,000 that Brown received from selling his stake in a company to Hill, attorneys for Hill and Brown confirmed Friday.

Hill paid $12,000 to the commerce secretary's daughter, Tracey Brown, in five checks issued on the same day in August 1991, U.S. News & World Report says in next week's issue.

Tracey Brown, now a prosecutor with the Los Angeles district attorney's office, didn't immediately return a telephone call seeking comment. At the time of the payments, she was in law school in New York City and had provided Hill with a mailing address there, according to U.S. News.

In addition, the magazine reported, documents show that a company owned by Hill paid $15,000 to James Hackney on Jan. 19, 1993, the day before President Clinton's inauguration. Brown assumed office as commerce secretary and Hackney as his counselor in the department the next day.

Also, according to U.S. News, Brown's daughter-in-law, Tamara Brown, was on the payroll of Corridor Broadcasting Corp., the Hill-owned company that paid $15,000 to Hackney and $12,000 to Tracey Brown.

Revelation of the previously undisclosed payments follows the Justice Department's decision Wednesday to conduct a preliminary criminal investigation into the financial relationship between Ron Brown and Hill.

In addition, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. is investigating a $23 million loan default by Corridor Broadcasting. Hill also was Brown's partner in First International Communications Corp.

Brown and Hill, through their attorneys, have denied any wrongdoing. Brown's attorney on Friday confirmed the $12,000 payment by Corridor to his daughter and said it was for "a legitimate business purpose." Hill's lawyer declined comment on the report, saying it was based on documents stolen from his client.

Whitman's notebooks found 50 years after they were taken

By CATHERINE CROCKER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Notebooks containing Walt Whitman's scratched-out poems and philosophical musings have been rediscovered more than 50 years after they were stolen from the Library of Congress.

The four notebooks were found by an unidentified man in his father's estate and turned over to Sotheby's auction house for evaluation. The books had been a gift to the man's father, said Selby Kiffer, a vice president in Sotheby's books and manuscripts department.

Kiffer contacted the Library of Congress after finding evidence linking it with one of the notebooks. The auction house also determined that a paper butterfly included with the manuscripts, which Whitman used as a prop in a photograph, was from the library.

The notebooks and butterfly will be returned to the library.

"We are grateful to Sotheby's for its alertness and its public spirit, and to the person who found the four Walt Whitman notebooks," James Billington, the librarian of Congress, said Friday. "They are a priceless part of our national heritage."

The Library of Congress said Whitman's literary executor deposited 24 Whitman manuscripts at the library in 1918. They were moved in 1942 to a secret repository in Ohio for safekeeping during World War II.

When the container with the poems was returned in 1944, it was missing 10 notebooks and the butterfly, the library said. The whereabouts of the other six are still a mystery.

Kiffer said the earliest of the four notebooks he examined was from 1847, and included about 47 small pages densely written in pencil.

The book, 3 inches by 5 inches, includes essays on philosophical subjects, on-the-spot observations, pages of revised poetry (including corrections), and early drafts of Whitman's "Song of Myself."

The largest of the notebooks, which was 5 inches by 7 inches and bound in purple leather with Whitman's name in gold on it, was written in 1862.

It includes notes about wounded Civil War soldiers that Whitman was nursing: "bed 15 - wants an orange ... bed 59 wants some liquorice ... 27 wants some figs and a book."

Judge's ruling makes it possible for millions to join tobacco suit

By JANET McCONAUGHEY
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Anyone who has ever ignored a doctor's advice to quit smoking can join a class-action lawsuit that accuses tobacco companies of manipulating nicotine levels to hook smokers, a federal judge says.

The ruling Friday by U.S. District Judge Okla Jones II means that as many as 50 million people would be eligible to join the lawsuit, according to the judge and lawyers.

The suit was filed by a smoker's widow and three current smokers who say they're unable to shake their addiction. They claim the tobacco companies covered up knowledge that nicotine was addictive.

It now applies to anyone who has failed to quit despite a doctor's warning, "which is pretty much everybody," said John P. Coale, one of the plaintiffs' lawyers.

No doctor's note is required.

The tobacco companies want lawsuits against them tried separately. But plaintiffs' lawyers argue that very few people can afford to sue on their own.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. said it will appeal Jones' ruling.

"This is an unprecedented application of the class-action rules," the company said in a statement.

Other defendants - including tobacco giants The American Tobacco Co.; Lorillard Tobacco Co.; Philip Morris Companies Inc.; and Liggett Group Inc. - either said they could not comment because they had not read the ruling or did not immediately return calls.

It will be months before the 60 law firms that joined to file the suit start signing up plaintiffs, said Richard Heimann of San Francisco, whose firm is among those pledging $100,000 each toward the suit.

The lawyers must first give Jones a proposal for notifying potential plaintiffs. Then the tobacco companies get to respond. Then Jones decides what makes sense.

The lawsuit was filed by Dianne Castano, whose husband died of lung cancer, and smokers Ernest Richard Perry Sr., T. George Solomon and Gloria Scott, all of New Orleans.

They got ammunition during congressional hearings last spring, when witnesses testified that tobacco company officials knew nicotine was addictive and hid that information from the public.

"It is this deception that is fueling the case," Mrs. Castano said. "How can anyone make a responsible choice if facts are deliberately kept from them?"

Jones did not set a trial date for the lawsuit, which seeks at least $50,000 in damages for each plaintiff.

He said many issues, including claims of actual damage, must be tried individually, and that he may reconsider the class certification.

-- Officers issued 24 traffic citations.

month, Morris went on, the computer program estimated that, even without an energy management plan in place, the district's energy cost would have been $58,561.

Instead, the district only paid $39,049.

"That's an actual hard dollar difference between the two years of $29,027," he said. The energy program is credited with saving the district $19,511 of that total because of the differences in weather the two years.

The first year of being on the energy plan, Morris said, the district saved $74,000 in comparison with the amount spent during the base 12 months.

The second year of the plan will end on Feb. 28, so Morris does not have figures ready on the progress of the plan in its second year.

However, he said, "we're at $104,460 savings for the year" based on projections.

Actually money saved through the first 11 months -- March 1994 through January 1995 -- show the district has saved $96,858.71 from the base year.

If the 1994-95 projection holds true, the district will have spent $364,971 on energy for those 12 months.

Morris stressed that the success of the energy management program has been in the cooperation among all involved.

"It's a group effort, not a one-man show," he said. "The custodians are really the key people, maintenance, who help us" make sure buildings are shut down tight at the end of the day.

Morris' building walk-throughs are part of that group effort.

He said he passes through every building in the district during off-hours -- sometimes weekends, sometimes at night, sometimes on holidays -- looking for areas where energy is being wasted.

The district, he said, has energy use guidelines in all areas, including lights, heating and air conditioning and plumbing.

If a violation is found -- such as the bathroom lights left on last week at Hereford High School -- he makes a note of it on his audit form.

Copies of that form go to the school principal and head custodian and Assistant Superintendent Don Cumpton. Morris keeps another one.

The forms help target energy conservation efforts and give Morris a place to make notes if there are repairs that need to be made, such as to a leaky faucet.

To help remind employees of the need to conserve energy, Morris has created "friendly reminders" that he sometimes leaves behind.

One, simply called "OOPS" notices, tell a teacher or other employee that his walk-through uncovered something left on.

The note has a blue sad face stamped in one corner and places to mark off if the violation was a light left on, a heater or air conditioner on, or a computer or office equipment left on.

It ends with a little positive reinforcement -- "Your contribution to our energy conservation efforts can help us reach our goals. THANKS!"

At the same time, Morris can leave a congratulatory message in a room that meets compliance.

It thanks employees for turning off lights, air conditioners and office equipment, and for turning heaters down and shutting doors.

That note has a red happy face on it and thanks for helping conserve energy.

The school district deserves the credit for having the foresight to look ahead and see there are a lot of dollars to be saved," Morris said.

Salamander postponement asked

WASHINGTON (AP) - Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt is weighing requests by Texas Gov. George W. Bush and Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison to delay a decision whether to list the Barton Springs salamander as an endangered species.

The decision was due Friday, but a Babbitt spokesman said the secretary "was not in a position" to reach a conclusion.

Bush and Mrs. Hutchison wrote Babbitt separately this week, seeking a six-month delay. The governor said he was "deeply concerned" about the listing proposal and was seeking the delay to develop a state solution.

"As you are aware, endangered species issues have sparked a controversy in Texas that demands a thorough investigation of any proposed action by the federal government that has even the potential to impact the use of private property," Bush wrote.

Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service first proposed last Feb. 17 to list as endangered the tiny aquatic salamander found in Barton Springs in Austin, triggering a one-year period of public comment and scientific review.

By law, the service had exactly one year - with the deadline occurring Friday - to determine whether endangered status was warranted.

"At this point, the secretary is reviewing all available information and has not made a decision with regard to listing," Interior spokesman Jay Ziegler said Friday.

"Secretary Babbitt has assured the governor that he will take this matter under serious consideration and respond to him expeditiously," he added.

"We are not in a position to make a formal decision today," Ziegler acknowledged.

The primary threat to the salamander comes from contamination of the waters feeding Barton Springs.

Cattle herds small, but are increasing

By TOM SEERY
AP Business Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) - The nation's cattle herd remains smaller than a year ago but farmers are building up supplies despite continued pressure on beef prices, a new report shows.

There were 8.87 million cattle being fattened on feedlots in the nation's top seven cattle states on Feb. 1, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's monthly report. That is down 4 percent from a year earlier.

But farmers added 1.73 million cattle to feedlots in January, up 12 percent from a year earlier. Sales of cattle from feedlots totaled 1.64 million, down 2 percent from a year earlier.

The expansion comes as industry analysts predict record supplies of beef and pork in 1995.

"We've got for all practical purposes a record meat supply," said Lee Huntridt, operations manager for the Farm Bureau's BIC feeder cattle procurement service. "Consumers have shown they can probably handle this amount of meat. Hopefully that will be at a price that will be profitable for the producer."

Model loses custody of husband

HOUSTON (AP) - Anna Nicole Smith hardly looked like a former Guess? model and Playboy centerfold during a court hearing to fend off a guardianship move won by her ailing billionaire husband's son.

Dressed in conservative garb and little, if any makeup, the 26-year-old blonde went to court in Houston Thursday to represent her ailing 90-year-old husband J. Howard Marshall at a guardianship hearing in probate court.

Money's not the issue - and there's a reported $550 million at stake - because Smith's husband signed over his estate to son Pierce Marshall last year.

On Thursday, Pierce Marshall won a 60-day temporary guardianship of his father, who was released from Spring Branch Memorial hospital this week following a bout of pneumonia.

The fortune has been put in trust and Smith largely has been cut off from any of the money.

She went on a tabloid television show Wednesday and Thursday to complain of her financial woes and insist she is in love with Marshall and has performed her "wife duties."

Smith did receive visitation rights to Marshall, who is mentally incapacitated, according to doctors' reports. Dr. Stephen Rosenblatt reported that Marshall answers all

THE BEST TIME TO BUY A HOUSE IS NOW!

Purchasing a home is one of the best personal investments anyone can make. We see renters' almost everyday and hear about how they spend up to half of their incomes on rent receipts. Purchasing a home can make a real difference in the quality life, because it will grow in value, provide tax deductions and best of all, it is theirs! Each monthly payment made means they own more and more of the home, while its value is increasing. This increase in value belongs to them, not a landlord! They can borrow against it or use it to increase their net worth. As the home increases in value, they will never have to pay taxes on its appreciation. If they put the same amount of money in a savings account, they would have to pay taxes on the interest. In fact owning a home can save them money, the property tax and mortgage interest are tax deductible. If you have any questions about home ownership, please give us a call!

EVERY TAX SEASON?

An individual Retirement Account at Hereford State Bank might make the prospect of keeping more of your earned income a little less...what's a good word...taxing!

An IRA is a personal savings plan that provides a substantial retirement fund and allows you to defer taxes on the principal as well as the accrued interest each year.

Because your earnings on an IRA investment are tax-deferred, the accumulated earnings build much faster than other comparable taxed investments.

We invite you to stop by Hereford State Bank today and get all the details. You can even save on your '95 taxes if you start an IRA before April 15th of this year!

Tax reform means: Don't tax me; don't tax thee; tax that guy behind the tree.--Russell Long oo

A glimmer of hope finally exists about the repeal of the 55 mph speed limit.

With Republicans in control of the House of Representatives, perhaps our congressman, Larry Combest, finally has a chance with the bill he's introduced every year to allow the states to determine their own speed limits.

If you recall, Congress hit the panic button during the Arab oil embargo of the '70s, and decreed that all states had to comply with conservation measure of saving fuel by limiting the speed limit to 55.

And, like most Washington mandates, the order threatened to withhold federal highway funds from any state that refused to comply with the "double nickel" speed limit. As a conservation measure, it was as ineffectual as has been the Department of Energy.

Setting a standard of 55 mph limit for all states is about as stupid as declaring a poverty level for all citizens. The terrain, design of highways, amount and kind of traffic, habits of drivers and types of vehicles are too varied, too unequal for one speed limit to apply to all.

I've driven in many places in the northeast where driving at 55 mph would be considered reckless, dangerous and almost impossible. And on certain roads in the southwest, holding your speed down to 55 makes it seem as though you're just creeping along.

Texas highways are among the best in the nation. When you're on a divided four-lane highway, can see for several miles ahead and have light traffic, it seems absurd to confine the speed to a federal mandate.

Now that Washington is seeing the wisdom of shifting welfare and other social programs back to the states, perhaps it's time to let the states set their own speed limits as they're supposed to do.

Speaking of politics, there was a story going around about the president learning there were 100,000 cattle guards in Colorado. Since he was upset with the ranchers' protests about his revised grazing policies, he directed the Secretary of Interior to immediately fire half of the guards.

Before the secretary could proceed, a legislator from Colorado intervened, instead pleading for six months of retraining of the cattle guards!

Now comes another story about a chicken farmer in East Texas who noticed some of his chickens were ailing. He decided to get some assistance from the government, so he wrung the neck of one chicken and mailed it to the agriculture department. About two weeks passed when he received a reply to his inquiry.

"Our analysis shows that your chicken died of a broken neck."

Measles, mumps, chickenpox, roseola come to mind when children and diseases are lumped together.

Today's kids, if their parents have taken time to have been vaccinated, may go through life without suffering the discomfort of swollen jaws and splotchy itch.

Modern science has taken care of protecting children from most of those so-called childhood diseases.

Don't today's kids miss a lot by getting shots instead of sick? No, emphatically, they don't. But they do miss out on some of the perks of those illnesses.

In olden days, one thing certain about having one of the ailments was the sick child got to stay home from school.

My mother was of the old school. If a kid was sick, from whatever malady, the rule was: Do not get out of bed for any but one reason.

But, she was sympathetic to our misery. A special dish might ease things. Or, a new comic book would distract from the itch or soreness.

Of course, in those days a case of the chickenpox was treated with some calamine lotion and discipline (Don't you dare scratch that itch!).

My turn with that disease began one night -- I woke up with those watery bumps all over my body. Sometime during the night, I scratched one right in the middle of my forehead. My mother knew I was scared for life, but it went away after about 40 years, or was hidden by wrinkles.

The same thing happened with mumps. I awoke one morning with one side of my face bigger than the other. The difference was barely noticeable, but my mother with the eagle eye saw immediately. Interestingly, my sister slept in the same bed with me that night and never took the mumps. As it turned out, I never had one side infected.

Both diseases kept me indisposed for several days, but I felt well enough to read. Hence, the continuing supply of new comic books.

Now, measles was another matter.

Lying in a darkened room, with no entertainment of any kind, was not my idea of a way to live.

Doctors of the day believed, rightly or wrongly, I don't know, that during a measles illness, eyes could be damaged if exposed to light.

No reading. (No new comic books, obviously.)

If there had been television, I'm sure we couldn't have watched favorite shows. Too much light.

One solution, apparently, was to have someone else read to the patient. My mother had a younger kid, too, and could hardly take a lot of time to read to the sick one.

Looking back, measles probably was the most onerous of the childhood diseases. Just because I could not read or play games. Tossing and turning in the bed was not much exercise. And, even for me, there were only so many hours in a day that I could sleep.

But, I found a distraction that, to put it mildly, I might have been killed for indulging.

On the wall next to my bed was a little nick in the wallpaper. A place that didn't get stuck down properly, or something. I discovered that with a little fingernail, I could tear small pieces loose.

Now, once I began this project, what was I to do with my ill-gotten gains (the tiny pieces of paper)? Well, I scattered them all over the floor under the bed. (Remember, I was just sick, not incapacitated. I could reach down and put the paper just under the bed frame.)

In retrospect, I really can't say what pleasure I derived from this little exercise. Maybe it was a release of frustration. Maybe it was just being able to do something with my hands.

Anyhow, all good things must come to an end and as the measles abated, my confinement did also. But, what to do about the wide strip of missing wallpaper?

Probably what I did was pray my mother wouldn't see it. But, in my heart of hearts, I knew she would. She never missed anything.

I'd like to conclude by saying that all's well that ends well. But, you know, I really can't.

I just don't remember what my mother did or said.

Maybe it was so horrible that I hid in the deepest recesses of my brain. More likely is my mother forgave me, after a good talking to. Mothers are like that.

Out of the Blue

By Garry Wesner

A loyal reader the other day (at least I HOPE she was loyal!) brought up something that was a concern to her.

Seems a funeral procession was heading north out of Hereford last week, en route to a burial service at Rest Lawn Memorial Park.

The procession was following the standard procedure -- traveling in a single-file line behind the hearse and family car, with headlights burning to indicate they were part of a funeral.

But while driving along, my informant said, some ignorant person was zipping along in the adjacent lane, taking advantage of the police escort and stopped traffic, focusing more on getting to his destination than on the solemnity of the occasion.

Now I was always taught that, when you see a funeral procession approaching, common courtesy calls for you to pull off to the side of the road and wait until it has passed before continuing.

Drivers traveling the same direction as a procession should stop and wait, as should those on a cross-street of a funeral procession.

This is done as a sign of respect and to honor the deceased person and show sympathy and support for his or her survivors. It is, I was told recently, the way we do things in West Texas.

Not long ago I saw an example that really impressed me.

I was traveling east on Park Avenue when a funeral procession was passing going the other direction. I pulled over to the side to wait and noticed two cars in a church parking lot across the street.

From these cars came two older men, who had pulled completely off the street as the procession approached.

They stood next to their vehicles with their caps over the hearts until the procession passed.

Likewise, when a friend's son was killed in a car crash years ago in New Mexico, I was impressed when three law enforcement officials blocking traffic at the cemetery entrance stood at attention, saluting the hearse and family car as they passed. This wasn't the funeral of an officer, but of a young man who actually had been in a little trouble with the law during his brief time on this earth.

I don't know why people feel they can ignore the sorrow of others simply for their own convenience. As far as I'm concerned, there is very little that is so important that would call for such rudeness.

Besides, if you're in that much of a hurry, there are alternate routes that you could take that would circumvent the funeral procession.

One note, however. As bad as it is to pace a funeral procession, it's worse here if you actually enter the procession as a means of getting where you're going.

There is a city ordinance on the books that makes it illegal to pull into the middle of the procession and flip on your headlights to take advantage of the situation.

Anyway, next time you're "stuck" waiting out a funeral procession, instead of thinking about how inconvenient it is for you, think about the family of that dead person and the sorrow they feel at losing a loved one.

You might even say a quick prayer for them in their time of sorrow.

Anyway, it's something to think about.

While we're on the subject of traffic (sort of), it's time for another seat belt reminder.

I see so many people driving around town who don't see anything wrong with letting their children run loose in the car.

In addition to it being illegal to leave your kids unrestrained, it seems to me parents would seat belt their children simply because they love them.

Your kid may throw a fit and scream and cry because you make him wear seat belts, but that's better than him lying dead in the street after going through the windshield at 40 miles an hour.

Well, that's it for this week.

Have a good week and remember, showing your kids you love them involves more than words -- it takes action.

Editorials from around the state

By The Associated Press

Here is a sampling of editorial opinion from Texas newspapers:

Feb. 13

The Dallas Morning News on TexPool investments:

TexPool, the state-run investment fund for Texas municipalities, has had a hard winter. First, there was the mid-December panic that ended only after the state intervened at a cost to taxpayers of roughly $55 million. Then, there were the inevitable recriminations about whether TexPool had invited its problems by investing in derivatives. Now, Texas legislators are drafting bills to eliminate it.

A good case could be made that TexPool deserves the ax. After all, it did bumble (though a certain national financial newspaper bore blame also for hyping the derivatives connection). Moreover, TexPool's job may be better left to the private sector.

But TexPool shouldn't be led to the chopping block. Not yet, anyway.

The central justification for TexPool remains. By pooling their money in a not-for-profit fund, Texas municipalities can pay lower fees, earn higher returns and withdraw their money whenever they want.

Recently, TexPool's board of directors has taken aggressive steps to bolster investor confidence and to reduce the likelihood that the state would have to intervene again. . .

Ultimately, legislators may decide that they dislike Texas being in the investment fund business and the state's implicit guarantee of TexPool assets.

Fair enough. But they should give the changes a chance. If operated soundly, TexPool can still be a worthwhile service to Texans.

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on prison inmates' access to public records:

Texas prison inmates apparently don't have enough to do, as the Department of Criminal Justice is being deluged by requests from prisoners for information under the Open Records Act.

About 70 percent of more than 800 requests last year to the TDCJ for open records, according to a report by The Dallas Morning News, came from inside prison walls. State officials estimate that taxpayers paid more than $193,000 in 1994 to process such frivolous petitions, and an expanding prison population will only accelerate that cost in years to come if the practice continues.

The merits of the requests aside - they are almost invariably exercises in harassment and intimidation of prison employees - prisoners should have no right to abuse the law, which was designed to assist the public in holding government accountable.

Those who have chosen to violate the laws of society necessarily and properly surrender certain liberties. Some prisoner advocates have bizarrely suggested that denying them the privilege of further frivolous mockery of society somehow renders them "nonpersons."

Rubbish. Felons remain-persons who forever abdicate their right to vote as a consequence of their illicit behavior. While they are behind bars, they also relinquish many freedoms, and among them should be the opportunity to further abuse the public with ludicrous petitions.

If necessary, the Legislature should amend the Open Records Act to specify that "persons" in prison forfeit this "right" while they are under lock and key.

In the meantime, prison officials should see to it that their charges have less idle time on their hands.

Feb. 7

The Brazosport Facts on Endangered Species Act:

The new Congress must bring two things to light about the 22-year-old Endangered Species Act - and one relates to the other. First, legally, the law expired two years ago so anything enforced under its context since 1993 is essentially a non-law, and, second, it must be updated and clarified if it is expected to be continued. . .

The act was meant to protect from "harm" any species threatened with extinction. It came at a time when certain animal populations were being killed either for sport or commerce. It brings to mind old film footage of Alaskan bears being shot down, or baby seals being clubbed for their fur. The law banned this unscrupulous practice.

But then, through more government regulations or stronger lobbying efforts from environmental groups, or both, the original intention was clouded and distorted. . .

Hereford's hot first quarter buries Randall

District playoff set for Tuesday

Hereford and Canyon will meet Tuesday to see which boys' basketball team goes into the state playoffs as the runner-up from District 1-4A.

They'll play at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Cal Farley Coliseum in the Amarillo Civic Center. Admission for the game will be $4 for adults and $2 for students.

Hereford will be the visiting team in the game, but it hasn't been determined yet on which side of the Coliseum Hereford fans should sit.

Hereford and Canyon both finished district play at 9-3 and tied for second behind Pampa (10-2). The two teams split their games in the regular season. Hereford won 79-78 in overtime Jan. 3 in Hereford, then Canyon won 63-49 Jan. 27 in Canyon.

By JAY PEDEN
Sports Editor

The Hereford boys basketball team shot lights out in the first quarter, then turned out the lights on Randall with its defense in the final three quarters.

The timely combination of offense and defense gave Hereford a 59-44 win Friday night at Randall High School.

The win was the 20th of the season for the Herd, which will play Canyon Tuesday for the right to advance to the playoffs. Hereford finished the regular season at 20-9 overall and 9-3 in District 1-4A.

"We're happy to be in this position," coach Randy Dean said. "We've had to really work to stay in this position. The last three games have all been must-wins. Now we're one step away from our original goal of making the playoffs."

The Whitefaces outscored Randall 21-12 in the first quarter on 8-of-12 shooting, including 4-of-6 from three point range. Michael Brown and Benton Buckley each had a pair of treys in the quarter. They combined for back-to-back treys for a 14-7 lead with 3:37 left in the first, and Randall never got closer than six points the rest of the way.

"We came out focused to play the game," said Dean, who in his second season has the Herd on the brink of the playoffs.

"When your concentration level is that high, a lot of times you'll shoot the ball well," he said. "They (the Raiders) were playing a zone defense, and the skip pass was open. We made the passes, and our guards did a good job of knocking the shots down."

Isaac Walker scored the last seven Hereford points of the quarter, including a spectacular layup then a three-point play to close the scoring. Randall switched defenses in the second quarter, which slowed up Hereford's offense, but the Herd defense never let Randall back into the game.

"Our defensive pressure was outstanding the whole game," Dean said. "They (Randall) switched up and started going with a box-and-one. We struggled against that for a little while, but after we hit a couple of threes, they switched to a man-to-man for the rest of the game. We were a little impatient in our man offense, but we got enough points off turnovers and offensive execution to maintain the lead."

Randall scored the first three points of the second quarter to pull within 21-15, but that was as close as the Raiders would get.

Brown responded with two more three-pointers in the second quarter; he hit five in all—and Hereford led 31-21 at halftime.

Hereford led 44-33 after three quarters and stayed well ahead early in fourth as Todd Dudley hit 4-of-4 free throws and Brown added two free throws. Michael High had a layup, then two more free throws to cap an 8-2 run in the middle of the fourth for a 56-40 lead.

Hereford was 11-of-12 from the free throw line with 2:13 left, but Whitefaces missed the front end of one-and-ones three times in the final two minutes.

Brown hit his fifth trey of the game in the final ten seconds, providing the final score and giving him a game-high 19 points. Buckley with 14 and Walker with 11 both reached double figures.

Michael High had nine points and unofficially reached double figures in rebounds—Dean determines official figures later from video tape.

Rounding out the scoring were Dudley with four points and Ashley Noland with two.

The Herd junior varsity finished its season with a 71-53 loss to Randall. Dustin Hill led Hereford with 11 points, while Bryant McNutt and Brian Torres each added 10.

Harvey Haddix of Pittsburgh pitched 12 perfect innings against Milwaukee in a 1959 game but lost in the 13th.

Jimmy Piersall once circled the bases running backwards after hitting a home run.

Going up strong

Hereford's Michael High goes up for a layup attempt against tough Randall defense during the Whitefaces' 59-44 win Friday night at Randall High School. It was the final game of the regular season.

Warriors get first win for Lanier

By The Associated Press
It was quite a week for Bob Lanier. It began at Olean, N.Y., last weekend, when he and his 1970 college teammates celebrated the 25th anniversary of St. Bonaventure's only trip to the NCAA tournament's Final Four.

It was capped on Friday night by Golden State's 139-128 overtime victory over the Phoenix Suns, Lanier's first victory as an NBA coach.

It took Lanier three tries to get to the Final Four and three games to get his first coaching victory, too. At that, it was hardly easy.

Latrell Sprewell hit two free throws for a 121-118 Golden State lead with 16 seconds left in regulation, only to have Wesley Person make a 3-pointer in the final second to force overtime.

"My whole inside started to cave for a minute when they made that 3," Lanier said. "So I came back to the bench and said, 'Guys, nobody said it would be easy. So let's just go out there and kick some butt.'"

Sprewell finished with 33 points and Tim Hardaway added 30 points and 19 assists as Golden State broke a 19-game losing streak at Phoenix dating to 1987.

Elsewhere on Friday, it was

— YOUR EYES —

CROSSED EYES

A very young infant's eyes may "wander" independently, but by about a year, binocular vision should be well established; both eyes should work together. In some children, however, the eyes do not point in the same direction. This condition—strabismus, or "crossed eyes," will not be outgrown and must be corrected as early as possible.

The problem is not how the child looks, but how he or she sees. If the strabismus is not corrected, the child's brain—in order to avoid seeing a double image—will suppress vision in the weaker eye which will, in time, become unused.

Early corrective treatment, started well before the child is six years old, can be permanent. Conservative yet effective methods include vision training, teaching the youngster to coordinate eye muscles. Glasses may be utilized, too, to improve the chance of success. In most cases, every conservative treatment will be attempted before surgery is suggested.

Clippers 127, Boston 121 in double overtime.

Charles Barkley had a season-high 38 points, but it wasn't enough to prevent the Suns' fourth home loss in 25 games.

Hardaway had five points as the Warriors went on a 9-2 run at the start of overtime, and this time Phoenix had no answer.

Rockets 109, Bullets 92

Hakeem Olajuwon scored 16 of his 30 points in the first quarter and Pete Chilcutt posted season highs with 18 points and 14 rebounds for Houston at Washington.

Clyde Drexler had nine points and nine assists as Houston won for the eighth time in 10 games.

at Miami and did not play.

Even without him, the Knicks led by 22 in the second quarter and finished the third up 86-62 after hitting five 3-pointers, three by Davis and two by Derek Harper.

Magic 129, 76ers 83

Anfernee Hardaway scored 31 points and Shaquille O'Neal outscored Shawn Bradley 30-3 for Orlando against visiting Philadelphia.

Hardaway, bouncing back from missing the last shot in a one-point overtime loss at Cleveland on Wednesday, was 7-for-8 in the second quarter when he scored 15 of his 21 first-half points.

Knicks 100, Heat 91

At New York, Hubert Davis, subbing for injured John Starks, scored 13 of his 21 points in the third quarter as the Knicks beat Miami for the second night in a row.

Starks, the Knicks' No. 2 scorer, averaging 15.4 points, partially separated his left shoulder Thursday club-record 423 receptions and 56 touchdowns.

"Andre has been a great player for the Falcons and for me, and his performance over the years is probably one of the reasons I have this job," Jones said.

Meggett, the New York Giants' running back and kick returner, became a free agent after his agent and the team could not come to terms on a new contract.

Meggett reportedly wants $8 million for four years, with a $3 million signing bonus. He would have used about $4.5 million of the Giants' salary cap money in 1995.

"I think we'll get it done quickly," one of Meggett's agents, Howard Shatsky, said. "Once we get the deal we're looking for, we'll take it."

Unlike Rison, however, the door apparently was not locked behind Meggett. Although New England, coached by Bill Parcells, was a likely candidate to grab the fleet-footed Meggett, the Giants were still in the chase.

"If I were the Giants, I would have gotten it done," Shatsky said. "They still have an equal opportunity with every other team to sign David. What they lost was an advantage over those other teams."

Last year, Meggett totaled 1,462 yards and six touchdowns running, receiving and returning.

The NBA was formed in 1949 in a merger of the National Basketball League and the Basketball Association of America.

NFL teams can shop around for free agents

By The Associated Press

More than two-thirds of the 481 NFL free agents are unrestricted, providing a long shopping list for teams looking for players like Andre Rison and Dave Meggett.

"He's certainly the most gifted player I have ever coached, but Andre needs to make the money he deserves," Atlanta Falcons coach June Jones said of Rison. "And we have to go in a different direction and take some of that money to help improve our defense."

Of the 481 free agents whose names were released Friday, 328 are unrestricted, players who have four or more seasons of service whose contracts have expired. There is no compensation to their former teams for signing them.

Besides Rison and Meggett, among the unrestricted free agents are quarterbacks Frank Reich of Buffalo and Mark Rypien of Cleveland, defensive end Jim Jeffcoat of Dallas, kicker Matt Bahr of New England, defensive back Ronnie Lott of the New York Jets and running back Ricky Ervin of Washington.

Although teams are allowed to try to re-sign their own free agents, Rison's career at Atlanta apparently is over.

Jones told the four-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Thursday that he did not fit under the team's salary cap. Jones also told running back Erric Pegram that the Falcons won't attempt to re-sign him.

"I've talked with both of them and explained our situation and the direction we want to go in right now," Jones said.

Rison, a six-year veteran, has a

New Rangers GM doesn't like to waste time

By KEVIN SHERRINGTON

The Dallas Morning News

ARLINGTON, Texas - Doug Melvin probably was the fastest pitcher Buck Showalter ever saw. He didn't rile any radar guns, nothing like that. He was just fast. Gimme the ball, and get out of the way. His best pitch was a strike. On get-away day, Showalter said, Doug Melvin was everybody's favorite pitcher.

Nobody worked harder or faster, friends said, then or now.

"I don't like to stand around and waste time," Melvin said, a smile peeking from underneath his moustache.

Melvin's resume supports his impatient stance. At age 42, he walked into the office of Rangers president Tom Schieffer with a three-ring binder stuffed with budgets and an analysis of the past four Rangers drafts. He immediately won Schieffer's heart, not to mention the job of general manager.

To give the accomplishment some perspective, it came a dozen or so years after he spent one off-season picking apples to make ends meet. The apple orchard came in 1981, three years after he was Showalter's teammate at West Haven, a farm club of the Yankees.

Melvin's teammates called him "Transactions" or "Scoop." He'd get up at 6 a.m. most days and buy all the newspapers he could find. He'd pore over the box scores and player transactions, the same way he had studied The Sporting News while growing up in Chatham, Ontario.

On West Haven's bus trips, no one else bothered to buy a newspaper.

"Hey, Scoop, who got called up today?"

Scoop would even speculate on the ripple effect each of the transactions would have, said Showalter, now manager of the Yankees. Melvin came to realize they never would have any effect on him, a point driven home in a 1979 conversation with the late Jack Butterfield, then the Yankees' director of player development.

Melvin: "Before I decide to get out of baseball, I want to make sure I'm doing the right thing. In my eyes, I don't think I'm a prospect."

Butterfield: "I'll confirm that."

True to form, Melvin didn't waste any time feeling sorry for himself. He went back home to Chatham, where he had been the best athlete in town, the star quarterback, the top goalie and a point-a-minute small forward. He still holds the Chatham Kent Secondary School record for points in a game (55). Said Mike Warren, a friend and former teammate at Kent: "He never led the team in assists."

But he was anything but selfish, Warren said. His upbringing wouldn't have allowed it. He came up under a mother who was a nurse and a father who has worked 41 years as a diesel mechanic, a man who might be called out of bed at 3 a.m. to go out in the snow and repair some broken-down truck. Doug's older brother became a mechanic, too, which is how most people make a living in Chatham, a factory town 50 miles north of Detroit. For a hundred miles in any direction, they either build cars or fix them.

An overwhelming 89 percent of the sheriffs said that programs promoting safe driving have a positive effect on motorists' driving habits.

Hard work never fazed Doug Melvin. He just couldn't picture himself spending the rest of his life in Chatham's auto factories or the tool and die or any of the other places he had worked when he wasn't playing games. He'd told his brother, Andy, the same thing after the Pirates gave up on him in 1974, when he went home the first time. After that setback, Andy had given him $200, and Doug had driven his Vega back to Florida in the spring of 1975 for one more shot.

And three years later, when that chance also was spent, he still wouldn't give up on baseball. The work didn't matter, as long as it was baseball. When the call came, it wasn't much. The Yankees offered him a job as a batting practice pitcher.

He took it. And he worked hard at it.

He always did.

His high school basketball and football coach, Ron Coristine, who still calls Melvin "Dougie," said he was "a great athlete and a great citizen." Nothing was too big for him. Not even when Kent played a team that had two 7-footers, and Coristine put Melvin on one of them. Though he gave up 11 inches, Melvin held the player to 11 points. "He just worked the guy to death," Coristine said.

Warren never saw anyone who was so good who worked so hard at it. He spent so much time in sports he didn't have much time for anything else. At one point in high school, he would get up at 5 a.m. for hockey practice, go home for breakfast, return for school and then stay afterward for football and basketball practice.

"I had to quit one of them because of my grades," he said, "and my parents wouldn't let me quit school."

So he gave up hockey. He didn't play baseball in high school, because it wasn't offered. But baseball's legacy in Chatham still was rich, mostly because of Ferguson Jenkins, who grew up there and was Melvin's inspiration.

He had others. Andy Melvin, three years older than Doug, also played some baseball with Jenkins. He did this despite the effects of polio he suffered as an infant. When he could, he simply ripped off his braces and played.

The image of his brother, who still wears braces, never left Doug. Neither could he put aside how hard everyone around him worked. His father, Art, officially retired a couple of years ago, though it didn't take. Last week, he was working the 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. shift.

"I can't seem to be content sitting around," Art said. "This is all I've ever done."

Melvin has no hobbies. For entertainment, the Melvins used to pack up the car with Andy and sister Chris and drive to see Doug play hockey or baseball or basketball or football. Some weekends, he'd play two or more.

He played hockey with Gordie Howe's sons, Mark and Marty. He can spin the names of his beloved Red Wings for several generations. But baseball was always his favorite. He played shortstop or third base, which is how a natural lefthander became a right-handed pitcher. You can't play shortstop or third base and throw left-handed, so he learned to throw with his right.

The Pirates signed him to a $1,000 bonus only two years after his coaches turned him into a pitcher. He likely would have been a much better prospect had he been a lefthander, which he said he never attempted, even though he writes with his left hand and was a left-handed goalie.

The Pirates gave up on the right-handed Doug Melvin after two seasons.

By that time, he figured he wasn't really a prospect. He sat out the 1974 season after he was released and then broke his ankle in a pick-up basketball game. But he took Andy's loan and got another chance when Pat Gillick, then with the Yankees' system, gave him a workout. He didn't have the velocity scouts wanted, but he threw strikes and was sent.

His last two years at West Haven, he was a combined 16-4. He was 29-19 with a 3.43 earned-run average for his six-season minor league career. "But I was a middle reliever at best," he said, shrugging.

He had qualities baseball noticed, though. When Gillick left the Yankees to become Toronto's general manager, he told New York owner George Steinbrenner he should let him hang around. "Doug was always asking people why managers did this or that," Gillick said.

He never really hung out with players all that much, although he was always sociable. He spent most of his time with the Yankees' coaches, men like Yogi Berra and Mickey Vernon. He loved their stories. They reminded him of the ones he reads even now, in the old copies of Baseball Digest he keeps in his office or in the attic of his Southlake home. "Learning by storytelling," he called it. Most young players didn't have the patience for it.

"Doug did a lot of listening," said Vernon, who remains close to Melvin.

He impressed his New York bosses so much with his energy and enthusiasm that they increased his work load. He was put in charge of coordinating reports from advance scouts. The difference with Melvin was that he used a computer at a time when only a handful of other clubs did.

When Johnny Oates met Melvin, Oates came under the impression that Melvin wanted to become a manager. Oates, a catcher for the Yankees at the time, said Melvin gave up on managing when he was told he'd never manage for George Steinbrenner with a name that didn't end with "Lemon" or "Martin."

Melvin became the Yankees' scouting director instead in 1985. He earned a reputation as a man who attended to every detail, and two years later became Baltimore's director of player personnel.

In Baltimore, he would be reunited with Oates, who described the man who once again is his boss "as knowledgeable on recall as anybody I've ever talked with." Mention a prospect's name from any organization, Oates said, and Melvin generally knows his contract situation, when he becomes a free agent, whether he's right-handed, left-handed, blond, blue-eyed, Catholic, whatever. "He'd pull it all out of his hat," Oates said.

Oates expects him to be able to do the same for the Rangers. One of the new specialties of general managers in an era where owners are increasingly concerned about spending less money will be finding more creative ways to add players to rosters, Gillick said. Because of Melvin's background in player development and his workaholic's attention to detail, baseball officials said they expect him to be at the top of the game in that aspect.

He was so respected by club officials and the Baltimore media that it generally was assumed he would become the Orioles' next general manager. He had just two problems: Hall of Famer Frank Robinson also wants the job, and Roland Hemond won't give it up.

Hemond remains one of Melvin's biggest fans.

"He's an early-riser and a late-retiree," Hemond said of Melvin, who came in second in a bid to become Boston's general manager last year. "And the day doesn't end with him leaving the office. He's still digging up things. He reminds me of (Oakland manager) Tony La Russa. He has a great capacity to work long hours.

"You put in those kind of hours, you're bound to be ahead of other people."

The Rangers expect Melvin to know what is available. Hemond always challenged him to come up with a hundred ideas a day. Though he never came close, the ideas generally would include possible moves to make when other clubs concluded deals. Contact those teams, he would tell Hemond, and see if they have anyone who fits into their new plans.

His experience in baseball's history also taught Melvin what not to worry about. He doesn't fret about finding a fifth starter. "If he could win any games, he'd be one of your first three," Melvin said. He tells his coaches and manager to worry about coaching the first three starters, and they'll find someone to fill in every fifth day.

Back-up catcher is another sore point. He frowned and picked up a 1959 copy of Baseball Digest. One by one, he went over the rosters, ticking off names of backup catchers.

"Never heard of him," he said after each one.

Melvin has learned two basic tenets about baseball: have a healthy respect for history and a willingness to embrace something new. The problem with the Rangers in their past four drafts, he said, was that they were too heavy on hitters and light on pitching and defense. History shows that the teams that have won were better in the latter, and Melvin likely will take a larger role in that area than did Tom Grieve, the club's previous general manager.

The quality of entertaining something different likely comes from Hemond. He is always quick to give credit, Melvin said, and he encouraged freethinking, perhaps a by-product of coming up under the legendary Bill Veeck.

Melvin also learned to treat his subordinates the same way. When Oates walked into Melvin's office in Baltimore, he knew he'd get an audience, not a lecture.

The only rule Melvin had was that, if you have a point, you had better be able to back it up.

You also better have a fairly good jump shot. Every day in spring training, Melvin takes his coaches to a court for a couple games of basketball. "He likes to mix it up," Oates said.

Melvin also likes to observe his coaches playing hoops.

"I like to see their reaction to winning and losing," he said, "whether they applaud a teammate for a good play; if one guy takes all the shots; see who has fun with what they're doing."

The exercise is more than one of curiosity. A coach who takes all the shots in a pick-up game might have an ego problem, Melvin figures. If he's a minor league manager, he might be more interested in his future than in developing players.

Asked if his coaches knew they were under observation, Melvin smiled. "I don't think so," he said.

Oates has had a few of what he called "battles" with Melvin over the years. Asked what the battles constituted, he was quick to note they always were low-key.

"Doug is very good at keeping his cool," Oates said. "So, when I'm around him, I keep my cool, too, because I'm not going to let him outdo me."

It would seem to be difficult. As he talked pleasantly in his office last week with a reporter, Melvin sat with arms crossed, his monogrammed cuffs exposed. The Canadian in him is evident in words like "scout," which comes out "scoot." He'd seem almost aloof at times if it weren't for the occasional burst of laughter, which turns him from a CEO to Beaver Cleaver.

The fun side is not always easy to see.

"At first, my sister thought he was a snotty and conceited jock," said Melvin's wife, Ellen, who has had two children, Ashley, 11, and Cory, 8, by him. "Now she loves him."

The business-like approach is sometimes misleading, Andy Melvin said. He called his brother an emotional man. He recalled a telephone call he got from Doug when he was working with the Yankees. As Doug told his brother of two players he had to release, he began to cry.

Baseball occupies almost all of Melvin's waking hours, Ellen said. He's up at 5 most mornings and doesn't return until after dark. When he's home, he'll read an occasional John Grisham novel. But mostly his reading material comes with box scores. If he's watching television, it's ESPN. The time he spends with his children almost always is playing sports. "He never walks away from it completely," Ellen said.

He walked away once and didn't last more than a year. He went back to Chatham, and that was all he needed. Most of his high school friends still live there. Had he not made it in baseball, he said he'd likely still be there, too.

His old friend, Mike Warren, teaches at the high school they both attended. He said Melvin's success in baseball surprised him.

"I'm not showing any lack of confidence in him," he said. "It's just that we were always taught that the road to success was through an education, and Doug didn't get that because he played baseball. To get where he is really phenomenal. And he was a self-made man. He did it all the hard way."

The funny thing is, Doug Melvin seems to know it could have been harder.

"I've always felt fortunate," he said. "Very fortunate."

Rude basketball crowds becoming problem

By PETE HERRERA

AP Sports Writer

Racial slurs at El Paso. Tossed tortillas in California. Fanatical fans everywhere with mouth to match.

With increasing frequency, college basketball crowds are testing the limits of decency - hurling insults at officials, baiting opposing players and giving a new meaning for homecourt advantage.

"What you see in basketball crowds is, in a sense, a microcosm of society at whole," says Dr. Alvin Sallee, a social work professor at New Mexico State and member of the school's Athletic Council.

"Society, political campaigns, the kind of rhetoric coming out of Washington, is mean, it's racial a lot of times," said Sallee.

Racial and mean apply to incidents this season at El Paso and Fort Collins, Colo.

Wyoming coach Joby Wright, who is black, said he heard a Texas-El Paso fan call him a "nigger," three times during the Cowboys' game with the Miners in early January.

A week later, in the final seconds of a game at Colorado State, a fan walked down to the Brigham Young bench and allegedly yelled at Cougars' coach Roger Reid, "(expletive) Mormon, get the hell out of here."

The incidents prompted Western Athletic Conference Commissioner Karl Benson to ask the league's 10 schools to tighten security for visiting teams.

"Fans have a right to yell and scream, but they don't have a right to direct profanity and abusive language at an individual," Benson said in a memo to the schools.

Just how much leeway does the price of a ticket give fans?

Not much at a school like Wyoming. Considerably more at places like New Mexico State's Pan American Center and UC Santa Barbara's Thunderdome.

"If it's profanity, like the 'F' word, they're out of there," says Wyoming sports information director Kevin McKinney.

Wyoming's biggest problem used to be objects tossed on the playing floor when fans didn't like an official's call. The Cowboys increased security and the tougher approach now also applies to what fans are allowed to wear and say inside the school's Arena-Auditorium.

"If a fan has a T-shirt that's offensive, we ask them to turn it inside out. If they refuse they're gone," McKinney said. "We have too many kids, too many older people who are terribly offended by it."

New Mexico State and UC Santa Barbara draw great support from their students. At New Mexico State they are seated in the end zones behind each basket. From there, they can literally touch opposing players and can create an island of intimidation with an in-your-face barrage of obscenities.

At Santa Barbara - with a capacity seating of 6,000 - the students take up an entire side of The Thunderdome and create the type of noise level that gives the arena its nickname.

In the past, Santa Barbara students threw tissue paper on the court after the Gauchos' first points. Now, the object of choice during nationally televised games is tortillas, a traditional Spanish food.

"They do it only at ESPN games," says Bill Mahoney, the school's director of sports information. "It's specifically tied to television."

Big West Commissioner Dennis Farrell agrees with Mahoney that television has contributed to the problem.

"With the increased television exposure that college basketball has received in the past 10 to 15 years, it has led to the students getting more creative in their cheering. It's a potential powderkeg at any of our arenas. You want enthusiasm, but you don't want to end up with a violent situation."

For the past five seasons, NMSU students have chanted in unison a phrase containing an obscene anatomical term after each free throw made by an opposing player.

"It used to drive (former NMSU President James) Halligan nuts," says

Athletic Director Al Gonzales. "Sometimes it was going over national TV."

Gonzales said the school has tried to discourage such behavior, with virtually no success.

"We got the band to play a couple of notes right after the other team made a free throw, but the students would just wait until the band was finished," he said. "It got to be a game."

Gonzales says the crude behavior isn't limited to students.

"I've seen people in their 40s and 50s exhibit the same type of behavior," he said. "I hate to use the term mob mentality, but people seem to change when they get into large groups. It's like the Los Angeles riots - if you're in a large group, nobody can see you."

Gonzales and David Oakeley, assistant athletic director for marketing, agree that New Mexico State has lost a number of former season ticket holders specifically because of the language they've heard in the Pan American Center. The number, they say, is not significant - somewhere in the area of 20 to 30 tickets over the last four or five years, he said.

"They'll call me and say they want to come to the games and bring their kids with them. But they don't want to sit there and have all these people screaming (the obscene). They don't want to expose their children to that," Gonzales said.

Gonzales says the problem is a national one.

"Other schools say they're losing season ticket-holders," said Gonzales. "I travel to many arenas and there isn't a whole hell of a lot of difference," Gonzales said. "I can't say that I recall going to one that stands out for sportsmanship."

Gonzales, an Hispanic, was personally offended by his first encounter with the students at UC Santa Barbara.

Gonzales said UC Santa Barbara officials assured him the tortilla tossing was not an ethnic act and had occurred when the Gauchos played teams from states with a much smaller Hispanic population than New Mexico.

Apparently tortillas have the aerodynamics that lend themselves to flight better than pita bread or hamburger buns," Gonzales said.

Gonzales said the unruly crowds has been a frequent issue at NCAA meetings, but the NCAA leaves it up to the host schools to deal with crowd control.

"The NCAA national office does not get involved in the monitoring of crowd behavior at the local level," said NCAA staff member Gregg Summers.

Game officials can assess the home team a technical if play is disrupted by debris being thrown on the floor. That occurred twice at UC Santa Barbara last year when the Gauchos played Old Dominion and New Mexico State on ESPN and again this year in the UC Santa Barbara-DePaul game.

Schools are reluctant to search fans or to move students further away from the playing court. Officials also say it's difficult if not impossible to control the verbal abuse.

"In terms of crowd behavior, it's probably one of the least damaging things to do, to yell like that," Sallee said.

"It's a problem that quite frankly, we don't know what to do," said Oakeley. "Do we eliminate the students? No way. They have every right to be there."

Big West Conference schools are required to set aside a block of 40 seats behind the visiting team's bench. Those seats are used by the visiting team's fans or left empty.

Coaches like Wright and Reid say it's time for schools to take tougher action.

"I've had Cokes dumped on me, beer dumped on me, crude and ruthless things said to me," Reid said after the incident at Colorado State. "But when someone is two feet away from you yelling obscenities at you, anywhere - BYU or New Mexico or any other place - then game management should take action."

"They no longer treat you as a guest in their building," said Wright. "They treat you as an enemy."

Bluebonnet bee

Bluebonnet Intermediate School recently determined entrants for the Deaf Smith County Spelling Bee, set for March 2-3. Jimmy Gilliam, 6th grader, will go to the Senior Bee. Winners in the 4th and 5th grades, who will compete in the Junior Bee, are Erica Mendoza, Coral Perez, Diego Hernandez and Telina Jackson.

Nominees for service awards sought by Women's Forum

The Amarillo Women's Forum is seeking nominations for its annual Distinguished Service Awards.

The purpose of the Distinguished Service Award is to honor outstanding women, who have helped shape the development of the Texas Panhandle through their contributions of talent and skill. The award recognizes and publicizes the visible examples set by these women that pave the way for others to follow. Since 1975 awardees have been selected from the arts, business, finance, education, health care, law, science, volunteerism and other fields.

Nominees must be Texas women who are legal residents of the top 26 counties of the Texas Panhandle and have NOT previously received this award. Re-entries are encouraged.

Winners of the Distinguished Service Award will be chosen on the basis of an individual's significant impact on the Panhandle of Texas through their local communities. An anonymous panel of judges, representative of the Panhandle area, will select recipients on the basis of their lasting contributions and achievements.

Deadline for nominations is noon March 6. Presentations of the Distinguished Service Awards will be made during a luncheon at the Amarillo Club on April 8.

For nomination forms, or additional information, contact Millie Bingham at 806/378-3162.

AMANDA KING, SHAWN MINSON

Wedding planned

Amanda D'Shawn King and Shawn Earl Minson, both of Hereford, plan to marry March 18 at the Fellowship of Believers.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Bobby and Toni Jones and the prospective bridegroom is the son of Tracy and Glenda Minson.

Miss King is a 1993 graduate of Hereford High School.

Minson is a graduate of Hereford High School and is employed by Park Avenue Bowl.

Ann Landers

Housing authority plans to rid projects of pit bulls, big dogs

DEAR ANN LANDERS: What is this country coming to when people are ordered by the government to "get rid of your dog or lose your home"? I am not making this up, Ann. I received such a letter in the mail yesterday.

This incredible notice was sent by the New York Housing Authority to 600,000 people who live in the city's housing projects. I am quoting from this letter verbatim. It says, "Do not jeopardize the roof over your head. If you have a dog, get rid of it."

That's not all. New Yorkers were advised that their family pets can be put to sleep at the city pound. I can't believe people can be so cold-hearted. Don't the authorities who make these decisions realize how important a pet can be to children who live in the projects? These kids don't have much they can call their own. Their pets have a humanizing effect on their lives. Many of the children have lost a parent or close family member to the violence that surrounds them. A pet is something to hold and love and talk to when times are rough.

Please, Ann, say something that might help. I am really heartsick about this.—A Daily Reader in N.Y.

DEAR N.Y.: According to Kathryn Freed, New York City

councilwoman, the Housing Authority intended this regulation to keep pit bulls and other big dogs (often used by drug dealers) from intimidating the residents.

Some distinction should be made, and I do hope the New York Housing Authority will find a way to let the children in the projects keep their pets.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I recently purchased my first home—a condominium on a lake—and am quite pleased with it.

I have not had an opportunity to meet my neighbors yet. Most of them are so quiet that one never knows if they are at home. The occupants of the unit above mine are quite another story.

I am not so much concerned with the fact that they walk like elephants as I am with their nocturnal and early morning habits, which often disturb my sleep. Their bed, situated directly above mine, squeaks—a lot. Needless to say, I know when, how often and how long, if you get my drift. Sometimes, there are other muffled sound effects as well.

I am not a prude, Ann, but if I were in their place, I would be embarrassed to death and would appreciate being told.

Is there any delicate way of letting my neighbors know that I can hear them without coming off as a killjoy and alienating them? Or would it be better to keep my mouth shut and be glad they don't fight?—Unwilling Party in Washington State

DEAR PARTY: You can (and should) approach your neighbors about the problem without getting too graphic. Simply say your bedroom ceiling, which is their floor, is made of such flimsy material that you can hear every word they utter and every step they take. Unless they are morons, they will realize that you can also hear a few other things.

You might suggest that they consider thicker carpeting. (It sounds to me as if they have NO carpeting, but you shouldn't assume this.)

A less expensive solution would be to suggest they get the bed fixed—or you can buy a set of earplugs.

HJH Roundup

By CAROLYN WATERS

Pollsters are observing an increase in the number of parents favoring a return to more traditional parenting. When you join a return to more traditional parenting, when you join this with education's return to more traditional teaching, it seems your mothers may have been right all along!

Twenty-one participants have begun practice for the annual spelling bee. The HJH representatives will be chosen February 21. There can be four from each grade, but presently there are only three eighth grade students competing. These students are studying and practicing each morning during advisory with their coach, Mrs. Cortez.

My seventh grade history classes are completing a unit on frontier life in Texas. Reports from groups as a result of study and research include charts, graphs, pictures, comparisons and even a skit. Several students have gradually overcome being extremely shy and can now "perform" before the class!

Daniel Carnahan and Bryan Cagle are learning to use a lathe, under the direction of Mr. Zimmerman. They are working on the Capitol dome. The "Build the Capitol" committee will begin actual construction of the Capitol this week. We've had a time deciding just how to handle the dozens of windows in the building, but these young people have some good ideas.

Junior Historians completed their scrapbook and annual report and have mailed it to Austin for competition with schools of all sizes across the state. Josh Rowe and Mark Shakocius have worked overtime to get the job done. Thanks to their coaches for allowing them to miss athletics several days to complete the job.

History Day is suffering from a drought. We have only four students participating this year. Carey Lyles and Matt Irish are entering the group project category, while Jenny Artho and Emily Curtis are trying their hand at a group performance. They will enter the area fair February 25. Deidra Drake will sponsor them to Canyon as I will be in Fort Worth attending the Middle School Conference.

Ten to twelve Junior Historians will attend the annual meeting in Dallas in late March. Delegates will be chosen from those who have exhibited the most interest through participation in activities and actual work on projects. At the present time, we plan to enter the Lyles/Irish project in the competition there.

Sally Squires, staff writer for The Washington Post, lists three child-rearing strategies that always ring true: Lay the foundation for strong family rituals; discipline makes children feel secure and instill a sense of spirituality in children.

Auxiliary to meet

The King's Manor Auxiliary will meet Feb. 21 at 9:30 a.m. in the Lamar Garden room.

Members will report their volunteer hours given to the home.

Tickets will be on sale for the hand-crafted porcelain dolls that will be given away at the St. Patrick's day party in March.

Wilma Goetsch, program chairman, will introduce Bobby Boyd who will speak on his volunteer ministry in the Clemson prison in Amarillo where he leads singing, makes friends and talks to the lifers about making the best of their life.

OKBG seeks oldest overall

The company that started its life making bib overalls for railroad workers and farmers wants families to search their attics and trunks to find the oldest pair of its adult or children's overalls in existence.

OshKosh B'Gosh, now one of the top producers of children's wear, was founded in 1895 as the Grove Manufacturing Company and produced a "J&C" brand (after the owners, J. Howard Jenkins and James G. Clark) overalls. The company assumed its current name in 1911.

Design clues to early models are buttons or fabric striping with the "J&C" lettering, buttons with steam engines, or shoulder straps with slim, W-shaped hooks, says Heidi Hansen, researcher at the Oshkosh Public Museum in Oshkosh, Wis.

When found, the oldest overalls will be on loan for one-year exhibit at the museum. The owner will get cash or merchandise in return for the loan.

Deadline for the search is May 31. For more information, contact OshKosh B'Gosh Public Relations, 112 Otter Avenue, Oshkosh, Wis. 54901.

Combest urges senior citizens to apply for study program

WASHINGTON, D.C.--U.S. Representative Larry Combest (R-Texas) is encouraging senior citizens to apply for a one-week government study program May 20-27 in Washington, D.C. Throughout the past seven years, seniors from the 19th Congressional District have traveled to the nation's capital to participate in discussions with members of Congress and administration officials.

"As citizens, this is likely to be their first opportunity to experience firsthand, the legislative process," said Combest. "I especially enjoy having them as guests in my office, which gives them an in-depth look at how a congressional office operates. It is my wish that when they return home, they will share what they learned about representative government while in Washington."

In addition to discussing legislation with Congressman Combest, seniors will participate in on-site study visits to the U.S. Capitol, the Supreme Court, and the Library of Congress. Time will also be allowed for visits to many of Washington D.C.'s historical sites.

The congressman notes that seniors interested in applying for an internship must be at least 60 years of age, in good health, active in local senior citizen projects, a resident of the 19th District, and willing to share what they learn with others back home. Since the program is privately funded without taxpayer money, interns are responsible for their own roundtrip transportation to Washington, D.C. Interns also pay a $958 fee that covers hotels, meals, transportation to events, and other miscellaneous costs. This fee is based on double-occupancy accommodations; single-occupancy accommodations

Between the Covers

By Joe Weaver

Get your calendar out now and mark March 30. That's the day the Friends of the Library hold open house. Our guess this year is Bob Wylie, professor of English at Amarillo College, but probably better known as the author of the Word for Word column in the Amarillo Sunday Globe News. His column is humorous, informative, and entertaining, and those who have heard him speak assure me that he is an entertaining speaker as well. The Library Family of the Year will be recognized with thousands of dollars in prizes going to the lucky recipients. Just kidding. Receiving the honor is prize enough, but the library family of the year, selected by the library staff, will get to wear a flower and have their name put on a plaque for library display.

Would Abraham Lincoln be jealous because Washington's picture is on the dollar bill? That's one of the questions I fielded this week as Mr. Lincoln. I always hope that I'll get questions like "Mr. Lincoln, why did you free the slaves," or "Could you have prevented the Civil War?" But, no...

Earlier this week on "This Day in History" on KPAN, Chip and Captain Billy were discussing Oscar Wilde and the 100th anniversary of the opening of his best known play The Importance of Being Ernest. I was introduced to this play ??? years ago in Mrs. Tipp's English Class. I was never much impressed by a play that I had to read, but this one caught a little of my interest. I have seen the play several times since then. Once on PBS, once on stage at Borger High School, and once on a video from Deaf Smith County Library! I really enjoy a stage play, but the video has one overpowering recommendation...if you miss some of the nuances of the humor, you can back it up and hear it again.

We are slowly, but surely getting out the word that we have videos.

Don't look for Forrest Gump or Pulp Fiction here. Our chief goal is to provide materials that you can't get at the local video stores. We have a number of old movies and made-for-TV items, as well as how-to, travel, cartoons, and other stuff. Our videos check out for two days, and there is a fine for $1.50 a day for overdue items, and a $1 processing fee if they are not rewound.

Unfinished business... A few weeks ago in this column I mentioned that the museum had a picture of an outlaw--either Cole Younger or one of the Daltons. The mystery was solved by a glance through the Jubilee Edition of the Hereford Brand, published for Hereford's Diamond Jubilee in 1973. It turns out that it was Younger, who was apparently in Hereford in 1908, though I could not discover why. The photo identifies him with a group of prospective land buyers so maybe he was looking to settle here? To heighten the mystery, the picture owned by the museum has an arrow pointing to Younger, but the identifying label has been cut off. Can any readers shed some light on this?

We will be closed Monday for President's Day, back to normal hours on Tuesday. See you at the library.

Thank You

The family of Joe Rogers wishes to thank our friends for the love extended to us upon his death. We are grateful for the prayers, cards, flowers, food and memorials.

May God bless each of you.

Coronary bypass surgery leads to radical changes in lifestyle

By JOYCE TURNER

Tyler Courier-Times-Telegraph
TYLER, Texas - Vicki Morgan moved around the equipment at the Mother Frances Regional Wellness Center with an ease that comes with experience.

The gleaming fitness machines, with their unusual shapes and motorized parts, obviously didn't intimidate her. She smiled, laughed and chatted with other members, offering to help when she could.

No surprise. She's an auxiliary volunteer, and that's what volunteers do.

But Mrs. Morgan has a unique perspective which she brings to her volunteer work. She knows what it's like to be forced by circumstances into radical lifestyle changes. She's a volunteer who truly understands when heart patients come to the center with a less-than-exuberant attitude toward using equipment that makes them feel uncomfortable.

Mrs. Morgan understands because she's been there.

At 34, she's already had triple bypass surgery. She's gone through the rehabilitation program herself and is repeating the program because she has another blockage in a coronary artery.

But Mrs. Morgan is not discouraged because her prognosis is "very good," she said.

"I feel that through diet and exercise, heart disease can be reversed. I firmly believe in that," she said.

Nevertheless, the issues surrounding her health have revolutionized her lifestyle and shifted her priorities so that all her activities are planned around her hospital workouts, she said.

Yet, two years ago, Mrs. Morgan didn't have a clue that her life would change so dramatically. She had no reason to suspect that she had heart problems. Although her father has a pacemaker, it's for a heart rhythm problem, and her mother has no blockages, she said.

However, at age 7, Mrs. Morgan was diagnosed with diabetes, which her doctors believe is the root of her problem. Poor control of her diet in her early years probably caused the damage to her body, she said.

Because she was so young, medical professionals were reluctant to listen to her complaints. But at age 30, she was hospitalized for a series of tests, which didn't reveal any medical problem.

On the one hand, Mrs. Morgan was glad her test results proved normal; on the other hand, she began to doubt herself and wonder if the symptoms - shortness of breath, tightness and pressure in her chest - were imaginary, she said.

A few months later, Mrs. Morgan was working with her husband, Jamie, hauling bricks to where they were rebuilding their driveway.

"I began to feel really uncomfortable," she said.

As a result, she called her physician, endocrinologist Dr. Larry Wiertz, who, in turn, contacted a cardiologist, Dr. Randall Powell, who ordered a heart catheterization.

The result was a good news, bad news situation.

"He said, 'The good news is you're not crazy. The bad news is you do have blockages,'" Mrs. Morgan said.

Her physicians decided on a conservative treatment for her problem, using medication and diet changes to see how she would respond. But after a year, her angina doubled, and she underwent another heart catheterization in April 1992. Results revealed new blockages and a worsening in the blockages she already had.

Her best option, doctors said, was coronary bypass surgery. Although Mrs. Morgan wanted to wait until school was out, she wasn't given that option, she said.

"I had mixed emotions. I had prayed about it and felt that whatever happened was God's will. And I trusted the doctors," she said.

Without surgery, she could have a heart attack which might cause irreversible heart damage, she said.

In May 1992, Mrs. Morgan had coronary bypass surgery and started her long road to recovery, which was "not a piece of cake," she said.

"I'm very active in my community and church, but you learn to prioritize," Mrs. Morgan said.

Putting God and family first - including her 10-year-old daughter Maegan and 7-year-old son Bailey - Mrs. Morgan has learned to take care of her physical wellbeing.

"They eat what I eat. We bake, broil, boil and grill and eat a lot of chicken ... We splurge occasionally, but seldom."

Although Mrs. Morgan does all that she can to maintain her health, she faces what is a harsh reality: She may have to undergo surgery again some day.

"I've never had a 'heart attack,' and that's what I want to prevent," she said.

And if she does?

"My mom says I'm too hardheaded to be down too long," Mrs. Morgan said.

Rene Hernandez of Hereford, daughter of Ygnacio and O'Dilia Hernandez, recently enlisted in the United States Navy for guaranteed training in the Navy's Radioman program.

Hernandez enlisted under the Delayed Entry Program, and will report to Recruit Training Command, Great Lakes, Illinois in February 1995 for active duty, where she will undergo basic training.

Upon completion of basic training, Hernandez will begin 11 weeks of schooling at San Diego, California in the Radioman field. Radiomen operate radiotelephones and radioteletypes, prepare messages for international and domestic commercial telegraph, in addition to sending and receiving messages via the Navy system. After successfully completing school, she could be assigned to any one of the Navy's duty stations around the world.

Hernandez is a 1994 graduate of Hereford High School.

Cantu completed a variety of training which included classroom study, practical hands-on instruction, and an emphasis on physical fitness. In particular, Cantu learned naval customs, first aid, fire fighting, water safety and survival, and a variety of safety skills required for working around ships and aircraft.

He is a 1989 graduate of Hereford High School.

Extension News

By Beverly Harder

County Extension Agent-H.E.

You read the label and notice that there's ascorbic acid -- vitamin C -- in that jar of peanut butter. Has the manufacturer decided to help supplement your vitamin intake by adding vitamin C to their product?

Actually, vitamin C is added as an antioxidant, added to peanut butter to prevent off-odor, off-colors and off-flavors. But don't let that turn you off.

Many fruits and vegetables, including apples, bananas, peaches, pears, potatoes and lettuce turn brown when exposed to the oxygen in the air. This browning of processed fruits may be slowed down by an antioxdant vitamin like vitamin C. Ascorbic acid which is vitamin C, is the primary ingredient in commercial powders and liquids that keep fruit turning brown.

Ascorbic acid and its cousins, ascorbyl palmitate and calcium ascorbate, also can be used in soft drinks, fruit drinks and beer. Vitamin C in soft drinks is often used to prevent the drink from corroding the interior of the can. Added to wines, vitamin C protects taste and clarity.

Vitamin C also is used in peanut butter, potato chips and fish to keep the oil in fat in the product from turning rancid.

Vitamin C also helps other antioxidants, such as BHA, BHT and vitamin E, so it is often used with them.

Vitamin C helps fix meat color in cured meats and helps to prevent the formation of cancer-causing nitrosamine. It also can help bread rise and hold its texture.

The various forms of vitamin E (tocopherol) are the principle antioxidants in vegetable oils. They are fat soluble and occur in nature. Processors use forms of vitamin E to protect lard, tallow, bacon, baked goods, butter, margarine and vegetable oils.

Vitamins also are used to color food. Precursors of vitamin A, known as carotenoid, can turn foods yellow, orange or red. One vitamin A precursor, beta carotene, gives a golden cast to butter, cheese, ice cream, soups, juice and macaroni. Another cousin (beta-8-carotene) gives a redder color to fruit drinks, soups, gelatine, jams, jellies, processed cheeses and salad dressings.

Don't let the fact that all of these vitamins are being used as additives keep you from eating plenty of fruits and vegetables. The amounts of vitamin C, A, or E that are added for food preservation are very small. Educational programs of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service are open to all citizens without regard to race, color, sex, disability, religion, age or national origin.

Harassment allegations greatly impact family's lives

EDITOR'S NOTE - In 1988 he was a brash teen-ager living in an upscale suburb of Hartford, Conn. Then a neighbor, a 35-year-old woman with local political connections, began complaining that he was calling her on the phone and making obscene sexual threats. Now, after a long ordeal and time behind bars, Christopher Reichardt has been compensated. Has justice been served?

By STRAT DOUTHAT

Associated Press Writer

COLCHESTER, Conn. (AP) - Sometimes, late at night, Christopher Reichardt wakes up in a cold sweat and stares wildly about his darkened cell. Then he realizes he's been dreaming again.

"I have these nightmares. I think I'm back in jail," says the husky young man, the son of a purchasing agent for a large aircraft manufacturing firm.

He runs a hand through his dark, close-cropped hair and drags deeply from his cigarette.

"Usually, when that happens, I get up and take a shower," he says. "I know I won't be going back to sleep. I've even left the house at 6 a.m. and gone to work at my landscaping business, just so I'll have something to occupy my mind."

George and Elizabeth Reichardt nod knowingly as they listen to their 25-year-old son talk. They know all about his dreams, and about the lingering effects of the two-year nightmare back in the Hartford suburb of Manchester, in an upscale neighborhood of designer homes.

It began in the fall of 1988 when a woman across the street accused Christopher - then a brash, immature 19-year-old - of calling her on the telephone and making obscene sexual threats.

Within weeks there were more complaints, and police cruisers were rolling past the house on a regular basis. Sometimes, the cruisers would stop and the neighbors would gather and watch as a handcuffed Christopher was led away on yet another charge.

Soon, a petition was circulated in the neighborhood. Its aim was to drive the Reichardts from their home.

Although the family has since moved to this small town, "my heart still stops every time I look out the window and see a police car coming down the street," Elizabeth Reichardt said recently, placing her hands over her heart for emphasis.

Father, mother and son were seated around their kitchen table, recalling what it was like to be treated as social outcasts by former friends.

"The neighbors were convinced I was a monster," Christopher said in an interview after he recently won a settlement from his accuser.

Christopher's story began on the morning of Oct. 18, 1988, six days after his 19th birthday. It started with a telephone call from Manchester Police Lt. Paul Lombardo. The policeman wanted Christopher to come down to the station that afternoon, but wouldn't say why. Christopher was something of a problem kid back then. He drove too fast in his souped-up yellow Dodge, a cause for concern in a fancy neighborhood full of children. On top of that, he'd become involved with a married woman down the block. There had been an ugly scene with the woman's husband.

He called his attorney, who advised him not to go to the police station.

But what Christopher didn't know was that a third person was listening in to his conversation with Lombardo: Nancy Kelley, a slender, 35-year-old woman who was a partner in a local insurance company and was politically connected in Manchester.

Kelley, a reclusive woman with prematurely white hair and pale blue eyes, lived across the street from the Reichardts. She was at the police station that morning to discuss a series of obscene calls she had begun reporting a month earlier.

Lombardo immediately thought of the troubled youth who lived across the street from Kelley.

As the detective spoke with Christopher, the eavesdropping Kelley confirmed his suspicions: "That's him," she said.

A few days later, Lombardo and another detective showed up at the Reichardts' front door.

"They said, 'You're under arrest and you're coming with us.' That's all they said," Christopher recalled.

He was charged with making a harassing telephone call, a misdemeanor. The next day Christopher met with his attorney.

"My lawyer told me I had been accused of making obscene calls to Nancy Kelley. My reaction was, 'Who's Nancy Kelley?'"

But he got to know that name all too well in the coming months.

Kelley called police repeatedly to complain about Christopher's behavior. She accused him of coming into her yard and waving a chain saw at her. She also said he tried to run her down with his car.

But the telephone calls to Kelley's home had stopped. They ceased after police offered to put a tap on her phone line, a suggestion she did not act on.

In April 1989, six months after he was first arrested, Christopher pleaded no contest to one count of harassment and criminal trespass. He did so on the advice of his attorney and parents, who now say they just wanted to put the mess behind them and avoid the expense of a trial.

Christopher got three years' probation and was ordered to have no contact with Nancy Kelley.

"We thought that would be the end of it. But we weren't even close to the end," recalls George Reichardt, a Pratt & Whitney executive in Southington.

Three weeks after Christopher's sentencing, the elder Reichardt, a large, red-faced man, was in jail himself, accused of cursing at Kelley.

"The case never went anywhere, but I still remember what it was like going to jail," he says. "I'd never been arrested before."

A few days later Kelley reported that Christopher was violating his probation and she was afraid he might hurt her. She said he had squealed his tires as he drove past her house, spat at her and tried to talk to her.

A police officer pulled him over as he nosed his yellow Dodge through traffic in downtown Manchester.

"I thought it was just some traffic thing, but the next thing I knew the officer had put a 9 mm pistol to the side of my head and told me to get out of the car," Christopher recalls.

He was being charged with violation of probation.

Christopher's probation hearing began June 21. The very next day, Kelley reported she had begun receiving threatening notes in her mailbox. She said their content was similar to the earlier telephone threats.

Christopher was charged with six counts of tampering with a witness. Then came the worst part.

He was ordered held on $500,000 bond and sent to a maximum-security jail in Hartford.

"During my hearing I kept telling the prosecutor that I had never made any phone calls to Nancy Kelley and had never written her any notes," he says. "Until that hearing, I had never even actually seen her, face to face."

"To make a long story short, the judge didn't believe me."

Christopher was returned to jail on a reduced bond of $50,000.

He was locked in a windowless cell for all but 10 minutes of each day. He was let out only to take a quick shower and make a telephone call.

"I sat and wondered why everybody thought I was a liar," he says. "Here I was, a 19-year-old kid up against a 35-year-old woman who owned a business and knew all the politicians in town. I have to admit it, I thought about killing myself."

Christopher's mother, who works as a visiting nurse in the Manchester area, became frantic when her son was placed on a 24-hour suicide watch.

In early July, a prison psychologist called Elizabeth Reichardt and told her he was worried about Christopher, who had lost more than 20 pounds and was distraught.

The Reichardts went back to court and the judge agreed to let the family send their son to a private psychiatric hospital.

After two months of treatment, Christopher was released and placed on probation. The judge ordered him not to go within three miles of his old neighborhood for the next three years.

Christopher went to live with an aunt in a nearby town and his parents put their house up for sale. They started looking for a new home where their son could live with them.

But Nancy Kelley was not done. She said she had begun to receive yet another series of threatening, handwritten notes.

This time, though, the Manchester police started watching her movements.

Lombardo, the police lieutenant, finally began to get suspicious. He decided the notes contained information Christopher had no way of knowing and also didn't match his handwriting, although the police earlier had said that the samples did match.

But the Manchester police decided to make one more effort to connect Christopher with the notes. They got a search warrant and paid the Reichardts a visit.

"The raid came in early November," Christopher recalls. "My parents had only been in the house a couple of days when they showed up."

Christopher was on pins and needles during the next three weeks.

"I was sure that, at any minute, a cruiser would pull up and I'd be hauled off to jail again."

The dreaded cruiser never appeared. Instead, Christopher received a telephone call from police, who wanted to see him.

"When I got to the police station, Detective Lombardo took me into a private room and told me that the police knew for certain that I had not written those notes," he says. "I just looked at him. I couldn't believe what I was hearing."

In January 1990, Nancy Kelley admitted that she had written the second batch of notes. She said she did it because Christopher had been released from the hospital and she was terrified. But she denied writing the first batch.

She was arrested and charged with 16 counts of fabricating evidence and 16 counts of falsely reporting an incident, one count for each note.

In August 1991, a Manchester Superior Court judge found her innocent by reason of insanity on nine of the counts and ordered her sent to the state mental hospital for treatment. The seven other counts were dropped.

She was released after three months and was placed under court supervision for 15 months.

The charges of witness tampering against Christopher were dropped, and the record of probation violation was stricken.

When Christopher demanded an apology from the police, the department spokesman issued this statement:

"We didn't do anything wrong to apologize for. We regret that he was put in an unfortunate situation for a crime committed by another person, the accused, Nancy Kelley."

In May 1990, the Reichardts sued Kelley for damages.

A few weeks ago, Kelley's insurance company agreed to pay Christopher Reichardt $500,000 for the trauma he experienced. The agreement includes establishment of a $50,000 trust fund to pay for any further psychiatric treatment he may require.

Christopher remains bitter. He says he thinks Kelley was given preferential treatment by the police.

Local 4-H members awarded scholarship

Two Deaf Smith County 4-H members were awarded the W.W. "Woody" Wilson Agricultural Scholarship during the evening performance of the Southwestern International Livestock Show Rodeo in El Paso, Texas. Caleb Brumley and Karon Harder each received a $1000 scholarship from the Livestock Show. Caleb and Karon were selected from 4-H and FFA members from around the state through an application process. The students were required to be in the 10th-12th grade, in the upper 1/2 of their class, and entered in the 1995 Southwestern International Livestock Show. They were evaluated on academic achievements, leadership activities, community involvement, and ability to relate with fellow students. Applicants were required to submit written applications and narratives.

Caleb and Karon were selected from all of the applicants to be two of the twenty to be interviewed by the scholarship committee during the Stock Show. Scholarships were then awarded to nine of the twenty applicants that were selected for the interview process.

Mr. Brumley plans to attend Clarendon Community College in the fall, and enroll in Ranching and Feedlot Program.

Ms. Harder will enrol in Texas Tech and plans to pursue a degree in Food and Nutrition - Dietetics.

Cotton Council President cautions against unwise program changes

WASHINGTON (Special) -- National Cotton Council President Bruce Brumfield praised the U.S. cotton industry for producing and selling the largest crop in history last year, but he warned that such prosperity could be jeopardized by unwise changes in farm programs.

Speaking to delegates here today attending the National Cotton Council's Annual Meeting at the JW Marriott Hotel, Brumfield said the contentious debate on every budget measure and appropriations bill should "serve as a reminder that government support for agriculture is diminishing."

The Council president, a cotton producer from Inverness MS, said the industry favors maintaining the principles of the current program in 1995 farm law. He also said it is critical that agriculture be allowed to operate under "sensible government regulations which do not put us at a further disadvantage with our foreign competitors."

Brumfield said the industry has an important story to tell Congress and the public regarding its environmental stewardship, productivity, increased market share and price competitiveness.

"think about it," said the Council president. "If we were operating today with the same technology we used in 1937, we would need to plant an additional 20 million acres to produce the crop we just harvested."

Brumfield said this figure alone proves that cotton production is highly efficient -- utilizing less acreage for a large crop while making significant contributions to the preservation of the environment.

The Council president said policymakers and everyone who is concerned about preserving the environment should take note of how this efficient use of the land is positively affecting wildlife habitat and soil conservation at a time when agriculture has endured its share of criticism.

Brumfield noted the government-industry partnership that has contributed to cotton's current success must continue if U.S. cotton is to remain competitive had been the missing link in U.S. cotton's marketing package," said Brumfield. "The marketing loan gave us a globally competitive price, which coupled with income protection for growers, armed U.S. cotton for the battle in every dimension of competitiveness."

Brumfield further stated that it is no coincidence that the industry has a market for the largest cotton crop in history. "We have the market because this industry has carefully crafted a program to build markets and service them," he said.

He cited Cotton Incorporated's highly successful research and promotion program, which has given cotton record levels of domestic market share in the past five years. He also credited Cotton Council International's overseas promotion program for helping to increase U.S. cotton exports to record levels this year.

While noting that GATT and NAFTA will increase export opportunities for U.S. agriculture -- and particularly cotton -- Brumfield warned that "we'll continue to be confronted with a system of foreign subsidies which undermine our comparative advantage in production and marketing."

"Sound farm programs are essential if U.S. agriculture is to remain viable in world markets where its comparative advantage has been countered by foreign subsidies," he said. The Council president said the cotton industry agrees with House Speaker Newt Gingrich who called unilateral disarmament in the industrial policy arena just as illogical as unilateral military disarmament.

Brumfield said one of the major challenges for the cotton industry in the '95 farm bill debate will be communicating agriculture's positive message to newcomers in both the House and Senate.

The Council president said two-thirds of the House members were elected since 1990 when the last farm bill was written, while only 11 current members of the House Agriculture Committee were present.

Brumfield said he has no problem with critics who want to review all farm program spending.

"There's nothing wrong with government requiring justification for federal spending," he said. "But there's no basis for singling out agriculture to start with a 'blank page' in 1995 unless the same protocol is used for all federal spending."

Brumfield said Congress has interpreted the results of the November elections as a mandate for smaller government and fiscal responsibility. The challenge, he noted, is convincing skeptics that a workable cotton program is compatible with those objectives.

Radio station gears topics toward farm-related issues

By JEAN PAGEL
Associated Press Writer
PLAINVIEW, Texas (AP) -

Radio listeners who call AgriTalk get animated when it comes to some spots like fertilizer prices or slumps in the hog market.

They complain, ask questions and propose ideas on the Kansas City, Mo.-based talk radio show geared for America's countryside.

"It's interesting to see the problems other farmers have," said John Carter, who grows corn and cotton in northwest Hale County. "Sometimes you get to thinking, 'Well, I'm the only one with problems.'"

Carter, 66, tunes in to AgriTalk on KKYN-AM in Plainview. Three other Texas stations - KCTX-AM in Childress, KSEY-AM in Seymour and KLLF-AM in Wichita Falls - also count themselves among the 108 affiliates in 28 states.

AgriTalk host Ken Root said the hour-long morning show attracts as many as 750,000 listeners each weekday.

"There hasn't been any means for people to express their opinion directly on a show that was targeted toward agriculture and rural issues," Root said. "We make it intelligent, conversational."

Guests since the program was launched Aug. 1 have included economists, psychologists and Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry.

Today brought the third installment of AgriTalk's "Farm Bill Friday," devoted to the politics of government farm policy. Transcripts are sent to members of the agriculture committee in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Farmers discussed crop insurance, loan rates, erodible land and drought during the previous shows. Calves were heard bawling as one cattleman called from the barn to give his opinion on the filibuster.

Consider what Brad from Nebraska had to say last week: "In the last couple years there's a lot more paperwork and a lot more what you might call crap going on that should never be in farming."

And on Feb. 3, David went on the air as he rode his tractor somewhere in Texas.

"All due to respect, sir," David greeted guest U.S. Rep. Tom Latham, "when will the farm program be written for the farmer instead of the shipper, instead of the food stamp recipient, and the school lunch programs?"

Latham, R-Iowa, responded by predicting lawmakers would write a farm bill that lifts regulations and mandates "off the farmer's back."

"It's a way they can directly get their point across to the Congress without being edited or filtered in any way," Root said. "Some who call in are mad. Many are thoughtful, knowledgeable and articulate."

Some segments of the show cover meaty issues: safe drinking water, divorce, access to health care. Other stray into the folksy-like the solicitation of recipes. Commercials tend to promote insecticides and implement dealers.

AgriTalk reaches a unique audience, Root said, in providing "a deeper appreciation of the complexities of agriculture and the attractiveness of rural America."

AgriTalk, aired from 10-11 a.m. CST Monday through Friday, can be reached at 800-794-8255.

Ag commissioner unveils plan charting new course

AUSTIN -- Agriculture commissioner Rick Perry today unveiled a plan charting a new course for Texas agriculture to bolster job growth and economic development for the state's second-largest industry.

"Agriculture is the 21st frontier for Texas," Perry said, "Texas agriculture is a modern, high-tech industry, providing research, business and investment opportunities for those with the vision to see beyond the horizon to the new frontier of progress and change."

Perry unveiled his plan at the Perryman Consultant's 11th Annual Economic Outlook Conference her in Austin.

The commissioner said that some people, including those in government, have written agriculture off as an industry of the past.

"Those folks are still wearing the blinders of outdated beliefs and ideas. It's time to take those blinders off," Perry said.

Perry's vision for the future includes four goals to prepare the agribusiness industry for the 21st century. However, Perry added that the goals apply to all economic sectors and should be objectives for the entire state.

* By the turn of the century, Texas must be the most competitive place in the world to do business.

Saying the state should not enact laws and regulations without first measuring their impact on Texas' global competitiveness, Perry challenged every citizen and every elected official to put each piece of legislation and regulation to a litmus test. Will it help or hinder business? Will it create or eliminate jobs? Will it make Texas more globally competitive or will it impede opportunity?

The third initiative will create a Business Structure and Finance Training Program to forge innovative business and finance arrangements.

Texas farmers and ranchers face intense global competition, and old business structures and relationships may not be profitable today. This initiative will help identify sources of private sector financing and capital for creating and expanding agriculture-related enterprises and alliances.

Perry will promote the agricultural industry to financiers, investors and lenders who may have never considered agriculture as an option.

"It's time the investment and financial community finds out about the economic promise offered by agriculture in the 21st century," Perry said.

This initiative will be a partnership among Texas A&M and other colleges and universities, the state's Small Business Development Centers and the Texas Department of Commerce.

Perry calls the fourth initiative "Connect the Links." It is designed to connect all the links of the highly diversified agricultural marketing chains by bringing together producers, processors, shippers, retailers and others within specific market sectors.

Many producers still don't have a fundamental knowledge of the processing sector or the other elements of the delivery system, Perry said. And some producers who don't understand the volatility of the market may be producing something consumers don't want.

"We will attempt to bridge the gap of mistrust and misunderstanding and establish a team approach to address concerns, identify consumer needs and seize opportunities beneficial to all sectors," Perry said.

The fifth and final initiative will promote Texas in the global market with Perry leading "Texas Agribusiness Trade and Investment Missions" around the world.

By leading hands-on trade and investment Missions" around the world.

"There is no barbed wire fence around Texas keeping the competition out, and there is nothing fencing us out of the global market," Perry said. "Texas can and must become a more important player in the global market."

Perry said his five initiatives will be the cornerstone for Texas agriculture.

"We will build on this cornerstone for the future of Texas agriculture and Texas," Perry said. "It will be the foundation for the expansion of our domestic and global Perry said. "It will be the foundation for the expansion of our domestic and global research, business and investment opportunities as we move toward the 21st century."

Common ground found between activist groups

COLLEGE STATION -- Growing strain between environmentalists and agricultural or rural communities can be decreased, but only with reasonable efforts and approaches, a conservationist told members of the Texas A&M University agriculture program recently.

David Braun, state director for the Nature Conservancy of Texas, said there is plenty of common ground for both sides to work on.

"There has been a tremendous amount of tension between the environmental community, and it has been increasing over the past five years," Braun said. "I'm very concerned, but with more collaborations and more partnerships, we can make an environmental ethic normative."

Some agriculturalists are suffering from a "4-H problem" of being "hotheads and hardheads" when it comes to compromising on the environment, Braun told the audience of some 400 listeners, almost all of them members of the Texas A&M agriculture program.

Rural communities are angry partly because they're trying to keep a lifestyle that has been disappearing because of a changing world, he said, adding, "We've got to get beyond that anger."

Meanwhile, many environmentalists want a totally undegraded natural environment, Braun said.

"They're out of their minds, and they're driving a wedge between the environmental movement and the American people," he said.

Partnerships like those pioneered by the Nature Conservancy and others are among the ways agriculture and environmentalism can coexist, he said.

For instance, the conservancy's Gray Ranch project in New Mexico has set aside 315,000 acres of rangeland that can be grazed by adjacent ranchers during drought periods. In exchange, the neighboring ranchers have agreed to limit development of their lands, Braun said.

Many other projects throughout the country use similar approaches, he said.

"We feel farming and ranching are important neighbors to the conservation movement," he said.

The Nature Conservancy is the largest environmental group in the country by most measures, Braun said, including membership.

The 42-year-old organization was formed as an international wildlife conservation group and helps such agencies as the National Parks Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department acquire lands to help the conservation effort.

Braun said he was especially pleased to announce to the crowd that Dr. Barry Thompson, the Texas A&M University System chancellor, had agreed that morning to serve on the conservancy's state board.

The conservancy's approach, Braun said, is to consider the best scientific evidence available as well as the needs of people when attempting to conserve lands.

There are many reasons to care about biological diversity, he told the group, and listed some reasons.

Among those are the practical argument that destroying too many parts of an interrelated ecosystem could eventually bring down the entire system. Another is that are innumerable economically beneficial uses waiting to be discovered in endangered plants and animals.

Genetic diversity also brings strength for adaption and survival, as all plant and animal breeders know, Braun said.

In addition to those reasons, he said, there are also moral, aesthetic, educational, research, philosophical and recreational arguments. Finally, there is a "legacy" approach that considers the needs of future generations, he said.

"If you can say you don't care, then let's hope the future children of the world won't care either," he said. "They won't have a choice."

Accelerating the replacement of older electric-generating plants is the best way the power industry can contribute to environmental initiatives.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Don Taylor

I KNOW YOU CAN

(Last of two parts)

Last week in the first part of this column, I told you I'd heard an educational consultant make a sweeping statement about what we should teach our children. This self-appointed expert demanded that we teach our young people to lower their expectations, accept less and disregard the American dream.

Hogwash, I say. We must not believe this consultant's assessment of current conditions in America. There is greater opportunity today, than ever before.

I have a special message for every young person who reads this column: Don't listen to those who say you can't. I KNOW YOU CAN! I believe in you. You can overcome any circumstance, you can live a more fulfilling life and you can achieve greater success than any previous generation. The door is open and the opportunity is yours.

You can decide right now to be successful, and no consultant can stop you. Go ahead and dare to achieve greatness. Don't let occasional failures derail your train. Dr. Robert Schuller said, "Failure doesn't mean you are a failure, it just means you haven't succeeded yet."

I believe you have a wonderful opportunity to live a successful, rewarding life. I also believe you can learn from the success of others. A recipe for success

Here are several ingredients you'll need for success. Mix them carefully into your life and enjoy.

- Get as much formal education as you can, as early as you can.
- Never stop learning and remember that every new experience is a learning opportunity.
- Realize that education and learning are not substitutes for work. You may earn what you learn, and you may earn in proportion to how well you learn, but you'll never earn or learn without working.
- Focus on what you can do, instead of dwelling on what you cannot.
- Folks may doubt what you say, but you force them to believe what you do. Don't just talk about it, get it done.
- When you do talk, tell the truth. Integrity is an inner strength. No one can take it away from you.
- Seek to acquire useful, practical knowledge. (Hint: You won't find it on MTV, Beavis and Butt-head or the Simpson.)
- Surround yourself with positive, enthusiastic friends.
- The very best preparation for a successful future is to do your very best today. This is true, whatever work you are doing. Even if it is repetitive, dull or routine, do it with all your ability.

• Strive to be worth more than your employer pays you. You will find there is a great joy and satisfaction that comes with knowing that you have exceeded other's expectations.

• Avoid alcohol, drugs and tobacco. They will destroy your health and drain away valuable financial resources.

• Invest some of your early earnings for your future. Save now, enjoy later.

• Follow God's commandments. You'll never go wrong concerning yourself more with how God thinks about you than what others think about you.

• Live every day as if there were no tomorrow. We have no guarantee except the promise that we will reap what we sow.

• Don't expect to get everything. Instead, decide what is most important for you and go after it with all your heart.

• We do not measure success by what we start, but by what we finish.

• A good night's sleep is best earned by honest, productive labor.

Remember that President Lincoln said, "Always bear in mind that your own resolution to succeed is more important than any other one thing." I know you can, now you know it, too.

Spunky actress plays strong role in NBC's new miniseries

Sally Field stars as Bess Steed Garner, a self-sufficient woman in the early 20th century, and Ron Silver portrays her good friend Arthur Fineman in A Woman of Independent Means. The miniseries begins Sunday and airs Monday and Wednesday on NBC.

BY AMY HIBBERT

There is no one better to play a self-sufficient person in the early 20th century than the woman who played the spunky Gidget.

A Woman of Independent Means, a miniseries debuting Sunday, Feb. 19, on NBC, stars the spirited Sally Field in a demanding role that spans 70 years of one woman's life. The film continues Monday and Wednesday, Feb. 20 and 22.

Based on the novel by Elizabeth Forsythe Hailey, Woman features Field as Bess Steed Garner, a strong-willed and feisty woman living around the turn of the century.

"She's certainly not a perfect person," Field says. "She's very flawed, and I like that. She's really hard to deal with."

The story follows Bess through her life, from her childhood to her marriages and children. The strong-minded character faces life and death, joys and struggles, with the same determination and strength that are the hallmarks of many of Field's characters.

"From the time I knew Sally was interested, which was early on, I imagined she would be perfect," Hailey says. "I just love all the wisdom and maturity she brings to it now."

In this inspiring drama, high points of Bess' life are punctuated with letters to her family and friends. The people involved heavily in her life are highlighted in her letters to show their importance to Bess.

"It's a movie and it's a story about families, and about life, and about relationships," says actor Tony Goldwyn, who portrays Bess' first husband, Rob Steed. "It's a story about everybody, and when I watched it, I was overwhelmed by that fact and the scope of it."

Despite having a woman as the central character, executive producer/director Robert Greenwald says the film appeals to everyone — young and old, male and female.

"I just know that as a reader and as a man I responded very strongly to this piece and felt it was about all of us. And it moved me, and I laughed, and I enjoyed it, and I very much wanted to see whether these letters could be taken and turned into a screenplay," Greenwald says.

In her role, Field portrays Bess at many different ages. In the six hours of Woman, the Oscar-winning actress transforms from a young woman to a mature 80-year-old who experiences much in her lifetime. Field also recently had the job of playing an older woman as the mother in Forrest Gump.

"I found I have a love and appreciation, fascination for age," Field says. "I found it much more interesting to play the older woman than I did the younger woman."

However, she says she hopes people will look beyond herself playing different ages in the story and take in the whole picture.

"I think the most important thing is that age need not be relevant when you're telling compelling stories," Field says. "It shouldn't be relevant how you look. It should only be relevant about what stories you are telling."

An endearing tale, Woman of Independent Means focuses on a woman whose inner strength allows her to make the most of her life and those around her.

As Bess herself says in one of her letters in the novel, "I look upon my life as a staircase, with each year taking me up another step toward some unknown but enticing destination."

The Hidden Fat Caper

It's okay to eat a little fat because it gives you energy, but you don't need to eat too much. Help secret agent TAF (That's fat spelled backwards) solve the case of the hidden fat. Follow the path through the grocery store and circle the foods you think may contain hidden fat. Clue: Foods like pork chops or chicken legs have fat surrounding them that you can see and easily remove before eating. Foods that are fried, gooey or greasy have fat hidden inside of them that can't be removed.

Function Junction

Food supplies vitamins and minerals to help your body grow. Each vitamin and mineral has a special job. Since no food has all the vitamins and minerals you need, it's important to eat lots of different foods. Try to match the food that supplies either a vitamin or mineral with its job.

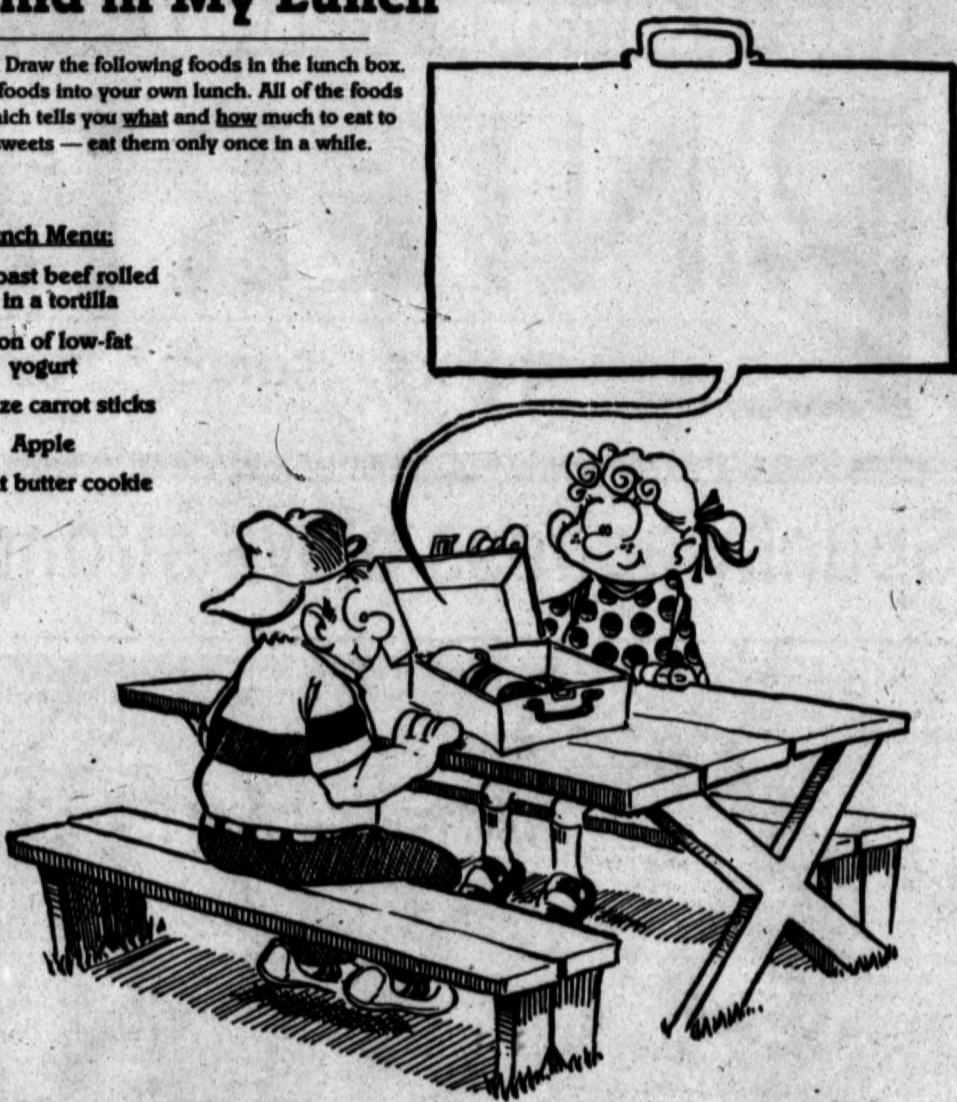

Answers: A steak has iron which helps blood, an orange has vitamin C which helps healing, milk has calcium which helps bones.

There's a Pyramid in My Lunch

You're the chef, or should we say artist? Draw the following foods in the lunch box. Then with help from an adult, pack the foods into your own lunch. All of the foods come from the Food Guide Pyramid which tells you what and how much to eat to stay healthy. The Pyramid includes sweets — eat them only once in a while.

Lunch Menu:

- Lean roast beef rolled up in a tortilla
- Carton of low-fat yogurt
- Bite-size carrot sticks
- Apple
- Peanut butter cookie

Be Healthy, Be Cool, Use the Pyramid Rule

Eat foods from all five food groups every day. Once in a while foods from the tip are okay. Learn to eat smart, do it now. Let the Food Guide Pyramid show you how. Draw a line from each food to the group where it belongs. The number of foods you find for each group is at least the number of servings you should eat every day.

Brenda Epperson Doumani, who plays Ashley on The Young and the Restless, has spent the last several months hiding behind counters, vases filled with flowers and giant purses. But all that is going to stop around the first week in March when Doumani's first child is born.

Y&R chose not to use Doumani's pregnancy in her story line. So for months she has tried to hide her expanding stomach. And it seems she has been successful.

"There were some people on the set the other day who watch the show, and they were surprised to see I am pregnant," Doumani says. "I was so surprised because I thought for sure everyone could tell. I definitely feel very pregnant."

"I was running around saying I had to do this and that and get the nursery ready. And then one day I realized that everything didn't have to be ready the day the baby arrived home. It would be months before she has to go into the nursery."

Doumani's main priority now is finding a good nanny. "I have no intention of trying to be supermom. Some people can do that, but I am not one of them. I know I am going to need help."

The actress thinks her job in daytime is great for a working mom. She says she will be able to spend more time with the baby because she does have

In 1993 Doumani made her feature film debut in her husband's film Amore. She also completed a role in the film Storybook, which is along the lines of The Neverending Story and was also directed by her husband.

"I love working with my husband," Doumani says. "He knows me better than anyone else."
