There is so much local interest in the prospects of the Donald Oil Company of Hereford and Amarillo, that The Brand Thursday asked A. M. Jones, secretary of the company, to give some details of the present status of the company's affairs. Mr. Jones answered as

"The Donald Oil Company has its rig up, tools are being moved on the location, contract is signon the location, contract is at a turnkey test to pay sand in the Hutchinson county area. According to recent developments in the vicinity of the acreage, it looks as though this would be another Block Y oil production.

"The oil in this area is forty two gravity, and the other pool west is thirty-three gravity, which proves a new pool, and accounts for the development in this locali-ty. Barring accidents, the Donald Oil Company No. 1 should reach the pay within sixty days."

Her friend nodded.

Long experience as a newspaper porter and editor in New York city gave Elizabeth Jordan a strong sense of romantic a n-d dramatic values. When she began writing novels she had many ready - made plots stored up in her experience and observations of actual life. Confronted as she was accustomed to be with mysteries and thrilling events in the daily news, it was natural that she should turn to the class of otton strong in mystery, love and dyenture elements.

Few novelists can equal her in raming amaning and pussiing mysters and she is almost alone in or ability to tell a pleasing story, it reduce strong and well-drawn haracters and make all the incients of plot and characterization ovestail perfectly into the central systery theme. Also, she does not ind it necessary to use crime, crimmals and morbid elements to the extent that most other writers do a producing this type of fiction. The people in her stories are generally of the agreeable sort, and for mysteries, intense and baffing, hough they may be, are of the happy kind.

Here is a story so logical that it might happen in any city. Here are people who pass and rapass each other every day in American communities and who live the average lives of such places. Yet, here is a record of love and romance, of splendid, even heroic, efforts by a young man to rescue his loved one from impending, tragic dangers; brave encounters, thrilling fights and other adventures, and above all, a mystery, the outcome of which is so surprising that any reader not gifted with second sight will be unable to solve it. It requires the reading of almost the last page to gain the solution.

CHAPTER I

Barbara's Wedding THE little city of Devondale, Ohio, had shaken off for one night at least the air of aristocratic calm that normally distinguished it from the busy mill towns on its right and left. Elm avenue, its esented at this hour only an efct of watchful trees, dark shrubbery, shaded lamps, and remote domestic peace. Now, however, it had blossomed into a brilliant thoroughfare, full of light, color and movement, on all of which the December stars winked down as if in intimate understanding.

Automobiles poured through the wide gates of its various homes and joined a ceaseless procession of vehicles. Pedestrians, representing every class of the city's so-of vehicles. Pedestrians, representing every class of the city's so-cial life, jostled one another on the sidewalks as they hurried onward, following this vanguard. For the time, indeed, there seemed to be but one destination which a self-respecting citizen of Devondale might properly have in mind; and already many of the elect had already many of the elect had reached this objective and had com-fortably passed through its wide doors, down its aisles, and into its doors, down its aisles, and into its chloned pews.

It was an interested, good-humored and highly observant crowd, pressing forward as each automode approached, to watch with unhamed curiosity the guests who lighted and made their way along of strip of carpet stretching from earnstone to church. Devondale's leading citizens were here, and the exectators knew them all, from those high personages who were presidents of local banks down to ittle Jimmy Harrigan, who was rbara Devon's favorite caddle at the Country club.

Unlike most of his fellow guests, Jimmy arrived on foot; but the crowd saw his unostentatious advest and greeted him with envious badinage.

"Hi, dere, Chimmie, where's yer

"Hi, dere, Chimmie, where's yer evenin' soot?" one acquaintance desired to know. And a second femarked solicitously, "De c'rect ting, Chimmie, is t' hold yer hat to yer heart as y' goes in!"

Jimmy made no reply to these pleasantries. The occasion was too big and too novel for that. He merely grinned, presented his card of admission in a paw washed clean only in spots, and accepted with equal equanimity the piercing gaze of the usher and the rear seat to which that outraged youth seat to which that outraged youth austerely conducted him. There, round-eyed, Jimmy stared about him. He had never been in-side of St. Giles' before. It was possible that he would never himself inside of it again. He took in the beauty of the great church; its blaze of lights; its

He and Barbara were to live in different parts of the city, to be ignorant of each other's addresses, and to see each other only twice."

The stopped for breath. Her friend drove an urgent elbow into her side.

"Go on!" she pleaded. "What

"Go on!" she pleaded. "What happened?"

"Something very unexpected," chuckled Mrs. Lytton. (For some reason, Barbara's friends always chuckled at this point in the story). Barbara, who is so clever," she went on, "almost starved to death. And Laurie, the black sheep, after various struggles and failures, fell in with some theatrical people and finally collaborated with a successful playwright in writing a play. Perhaps it was partly luck. But the play made a tremendous hit, Laurie kept his pledges, and Barbara has had to pay him a small fortune to had to pay him a small fortune to meet her bargain, The hearer smiled sympathet-

"That's splendid," she said, "for Laurie! But is the cure permanent, do you think? The boy's so young, and so awfully good look-

"I know," Mrs. Lytton looked ominous. "He is straight as a string so far, and absorbed in his new work. But of course his future is on the knees of the gods, for Barbara is going to Japan on her honeymoon, and Laurie will be alone in New York the rest of the winter. Barbara found her husband in New York," she added.
"He's a broker there, Robert Warren. That's what she got out of the experiment! She met him while she was working in the mailing department of some business bouse for seven dollars a week—
Mrs. Lytton stopped speaking and craned her head backward. They're coming!" she whispered excitedly, "Oh, dear, I hope shan't cry! I always do cry at

The mill people adore Barbara," whispered Mrs. Lytton. "She built a big elubhouse for them two years age, and she's the president of most of their clubs."

In his sent beside her. Jimmy Harrigan, who had given his attention to the conversation, sniffed contemptuously. If the dame in front was goin' to talk about Miss.
Devon, why didn't she tell somethin' worth while? Why didn't she tell, for ins'ance, that Miss Devon played the best golf of any woman in the club, and had beaten Mrs.
Lytton to a frazzle in a match last Lytton to a frazzle in a match last month? An' why didn't she may somethin' about how generous Miss Devon was to caddles in the and clothes. And why didn't she say what a prince Laurie Devon was, instead of all dat stale stuff what everybody knew?

The excitement in the street had communicated itself to the digni-fled assemblage in the church. The occupants of the pews were turning in their seats. The first notes of the great pipe-organ rolled forth. Friends who had known and loved Barbara Devon since she was a little girl, and many who had known her father and mother before her, looked now at the radiant figure she presented as she walked slowly up the aisle on her brother's arm, and saw that figure through an unexpected mist.

"What a pair!" whispered Mrs.
Renway, who had a pagan love of "They ought to be put in one of their own parks and kept there as a permanent exhibit for the delight of the public. It's almost criminal negligence to leave that young man at large," she darkly predicted. "Something will happen if they do!"

Mrs. Lytton absently agreed. "The bridegroom is very hand-some, too," she murmured. "That stunning, insolent creature who is acting as matron of honor, and looking bored to death by it, is his sister, Mrs. Ordway of New York. The first bridesmaid is another New York friend, a Russian girl named Sonya Orlenest, that Barbara met in some lodging house. And will you look at the

An expression of acute strain settled over the features of Mrs. Renway. She hurriedly adjusted her eyeglames.

"The what?" she whispered excitedly. "Where? I don't see any infant!" Mrs. Lytton laughed.

"Of course you don't! It's too small and too near the floor. It's a thirty-months-old youngster Barbara picked up in a New York tenement. She calls him the Infrat Samuel, and she has brought h'm here with his mother, to live on her estate. He's carrying her train and he's dressed as a page, in tiny and he's dressed as a page, in tiny white satin breeches and lace ruffles. Oh, don't miss him!"

A little ripple stirred the as semblage. Three figures in the cob Epstein, the New York mana-ger who put on their play."

At the same moment Epstein was whispering to his companion, as the two watched Barbara and her husband start down the aisle in the first little journey of their married life.

"Say, Bangs, if we could put this vedding into a play, just like they done it here, we could vake up Broadway a little—ain't lt?"

Bangs nodded vaguely. His brown

Bangs nodded vaguely. His brown eyes were alternately on the bride and on his chum and partner, her brother. He was conscious of an odd depression, of an emotion, new and poignant, that made him understand the tears of Barbara's women friends. Under the influence of this, he spoke oracularly: "Weddings are beastly depressing things. What the public wants to see is something cheerful!"

Epstein nodded in his turn. His thoughts, too, were busy. Like many of those around him, he was mentally reducing the spectacle he was watching to terms that he could understand. A wedding conducted on this scale, he estimated, probably represented a total cost of about ten thousand dollars. But what was that to a bride of thirty or forty millions? It was strange her family had left them all to her and none to the boy, even if the boy had been a little wild. But the boy was all right now. He'd make his own fortune if life and woman and the devil would let him alone. He had made a good start already. He had made a good start already. A few more successes like "The Man Above" would make Epstein forget several failures he had aiready and unwisely produced this season. If he could get Bangs and Devon to start work at once, on another good play-

A little later, in the automobile that whirled him and Epstein out to the wedding-reception at Devan house, Rodney Bangs briefly developed the wedding theme.

"I suppose the reason why women cry at weddings and men feel glum is that they know what the bride's in for," he remarked gloom-

Epstein grunted. "You an' me is bachelors," he reminded the momentarily cynical youth. "What I'm worrying about Laurie," Bangs admitted. Epstein turned to him with awakened interest.

"Vell." he demanded," what about Laurie? He's all right, ain't he?" "His sister has always kept a collar and leash on Laurie," Bangs reminded him, "and Laurie has needed them both. Now she's off for Japan on a four-months' honey-moon. The leash and collar are off, too. It's going to be mighty interesting and rather anxious business for us to see what a chap like Laurie does with his new freedom. His nature hasn't changed in a year, you see, though his circumstances have," he added, slowly. "And all his promises to Barbara are off. His year of probation is Epstein grunted again. He was and Laurie as if they were the sons he had never had; but he was not given to analysis of himself or others, and he had little patience with it. His reply showed a tolerance unusual in him.

"Vell, ve keep an eye on him, don't ve?" he predicted.

"We'll have to do it mighty carefully," he muttered. "If Devon catches us at it, he won't leave us an eye to keep on anything!"

Epstein grunted again.

"Ve keep him busy," he suggested, eagerly. "Start him right avay on another play, eh? That's the Bangs shook his head. "That's it," he conceded. "But Laurie has decided that he won't work again, just yet. He says be's tired and wants a few months' rest. Besides, he thinks America will declare war before the winter's over. He's going to volunteer as soon as It does, and he doesn't want any loose ends dragging here, any halffinished plays, for example.'

Epstein looked worried. This was serious news. Without allowing him time to recover from it, Bangs administered a second jolt. "And of course, in that case," he

"And of course, in that case," he added simply, "I'd volunteer, too."

Under the double blow Epstein's head and shoulders went down. He knew in that moment what even he himself had sometimes doubted, that his boasted love for the boys was deep and sincere.

"Oh, vell," he said vaguely, "I guess ve meet all that if it comes, eh? Ve needn't go to it today."

At Devon house they found the congestion characteristic of wedding-receptions. A certain line had been drawn at the church. Seemngly no line at all had been drawn nours passed.

As Bangs and Epstein entered the main hall Laurie Devon saw the main hall Laurie Devon saw them over the heads of the crowd and hurried to meet them, throw-ing an arm across the shoulder of each. He was in a mood both men loved and harred, a mood of high and reckfess exhilaration. He liked and approved of his new brother-in-law. The memory of his own New York triumph was still fresh enough to give him a thrill. He was devoted to his partners, and proud of his association with them and their work. But most of all, and this he himself would loyally have denied, deep in his heart he was exulting flercely over his coming Laurie loved his sister, but he was weary of the leading strings. Henceforth he could live his own life. It should be a life worth while, on that he had decided, and it should continue free from the vices of gambling and drinking, of which he was sure he had cured himself in the past year. He had come into a full realization of the folly of these and of the glory of the work one loves. He hadn't the least notion what he was going to do with his independence, but a boundless delight filled him in the prospect of it. Whatever life held prospect of it. Whatever life held he was convinced would be good. Looking down from his stender height on the plump Epstein and the stocky Bangs, he smiled into the sober face of each, and under the influence of that smile their momentary solemnity fell from them like dropped vells.

"Come and see Barbara," Laurie "Come and see Barbara," Lauris buoyantly suggested. "She wants to say good-by to you, and to tell you how to tuck me into my crib every night. She's going to slip away pretty soon, you know. Bob and I have got her off in an alcove to get a few minutes' rest."

He led them to this haven, of He led them to this haven, of which only fifty or sixty other guests seemed aware, for the room was but comfortsbly filled. They found Barbara sitting in a high-backed Spanish chair, against which, in her bridal array and her extraordinary beauty, she made a picture that unaccountably deepened the new depression in Rodney's soul. On her train by the side of the chair, the Infant Samuel of the chair, the Infant Samuel slumbered in peace, like an exhausted puppy.

Warren, hovering near his wife, shook hands with the newcomers and responded to their congratulations. Then, stipping his arm through Laurie's, he drew him acros the room to where his sister, ing to several of the bride's old friends. He knew that Barbara wanted a final and serious word with her brother's partners. Laurie knew it, too, and winked at the pair like an impish child as he per-mitted himself to be led away.

Young Mrs. Warren, whose title was still so new that she looked startled when they addressed her by it, greeted them warmly and indicated the sleeping Samuel with dicated the sleeping Samuel with an apologetic smile.

"His mother is lost somewhere in the crowd," she explained. "He has had two glasses of milk, four fat cakes and three plates of ice cream; and he's either asleep or unconscious, I'm not sure which." Her manner sobered. "I'm so glad to have a moment with you two," she said gently. "You know what I want to talk about."

"We can guess it," By ags smiled at her with the odd wittuiness his smile always took on when he spoke to Barbara. To Bangs, Barbara had become a temple at whose portal he removed his earth-stained shoes. "You want us to look after Laurie," he added quietly. "Well, you bet we're going to do it."

She smiled again, this time the rare smile that warmed her face like a light from within.

"Then I shall go away happy,"

"Then I shall go away happy," she told them. "And there's nothing more to be said; for of course you both understand that I don't distrust Laurie. How could I, after he has been so wonderful all this year. It's only," she hesitated—"I suppose it's life I'm afraid of," she confessed. "I never used to be. But—well, I learned in New York how helpless we are, sometimes."

well, I learned in New York how helpless we are, sometimes."
Rodney's nod was understanding.
"I know," he robustly agreed.
"But it's going to be absolutely all right. Be sure of that."
Epstein added his well-meaning but none too happily chosen bit. "Laurie can't get into no scrape ve can't get him out of," he earnestly assured Laurie's sister.

Barbara laughed. A circle of newcomers was forming around "Well, let it go at that," she said, and extended a hand to each man. "Good-by. I won't try to thank you. But God bless you both!"

THERE IS NO SATURATION POINT FOR HONEST VALUE

Build a product that the world needs, better than the world expects, and mounting sales will answer those who are constantly predicting a saturated market.

During the first six months of this year, for instance, Dodge Brothers sold 207,115 motor cars and trucks. This represents a gain of 49.3 per cent over the first six months of 1925. and continues Dodge Brothers in the enviable position of THIRD IN THE INDUSTRY.

For the three weeks ending July 17th, 23,862 motor cars and trucks were delivered to customers-an increase of 62.4 per cent over the same period last year, and impressive evidence that Dodge Brothers great sales gain is continuing through the quiet weeks of mid-summer.

There may be a saturation point for mediocrity, but honest value will always command a great and ever expanding market.

REFORE, BE IT ORDAINED BY THE CITY COMMIS-SION OF THE CITY OF HEREFORD, TEXAS, That the report Montgomery and Ward, City Engineers, having been examined,

BE IT FURTHER ORDAINED, that a full and fair hearing be had, as provided herein, that part of the cost of said improvements shall be assessed against the abutting property upon the streets so improved, and the owners thereof and that the total cost of said improvements shall be apportioned and paid as follows:

(a) The City of Hereford shall pay one-third (1-3) of the whole cost of said improvements exclusive of curb.

(b) The owners of property abutting upon said street named to be improved shall pay the whole cost of the installing of curbs in front of their saidpropertyand shall pay the remainder of said cost of improvement of said streets after there has been deducted the amount payable by the City of Hereford under Section "A" above provided however, that in no event shall more than three fourths of the vided, however, that in no event shall more than three-fourths of the entire cost of such improvements exclusive of curbs be assessed against such property owners and their property.

(c) That the portion of the said cost to be paid by the City of Hereford shall be payable upon estimates made by the City Engineers during the construction of said work on the first day of each month after the beginning thereof, ten per cent (10%) of said estimate being held back and reserved and payable to the Contractor upon the completion of same and acceptance by the City. The manner of the payment of the cost of the improvement payable by the owners of the abutting property shall be payable in ten equal installments, one payable within thirty (30) days after the completion of the work in each District, and its acceptance by the City. completion of the work in each District, and its acceptance by the City, one payable within one year, onepayable in two years, one payable in five years, one payable in five years, one payable in five years, one payable in six years, onepayable in seven years, one payable in one payable in one payable in nine years after said date of completion and acceptance by said City of said improvements, and to bear interest from the date of acceptance at the rate of seven (7) per cent per annum, payable annually, provided, that said owners shall have the option to discharge any installment before the maturity thereof by paying the same with accrued interest.

A Permanent Institution

This bank is a permanent institution—a fixed part of the community.

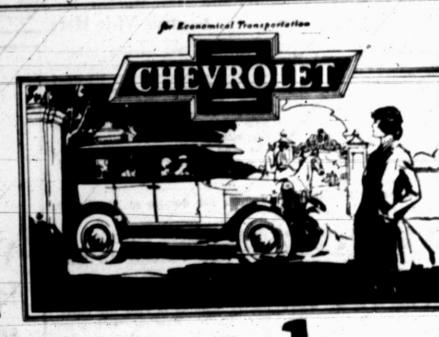

A banking institution has been likened to a tree gaining strength and usefulness with each advancing year. It is a deep-rooted part of the community which it serves.

This bank looks forward to many years of community-service, helping as we go, and adding strength and resources as our customers prosper, but we will never grow so big or so strong that the interests of our own section and people will not have the first interest of this bank and its officers.

Fly Over North Pole At Star Next Week!

will be unfolded.

When the giant Fokker skims over the icy wastes in the proximity of the North Pole there is a thrill for the spectators the like of which has never been brought to the silver sheet. It portrays man's crowning effort of conquest, eclipsing in interest the journey over the vast oceans and wide reaches of the air, the lure of gold that has taken men into a million dangers, the trails that have led into fever-infested jungles. infested jungles.

The trials and tribulations of Mrs. Roy Gough, of Sulphur the daring party before the ma-Park, has as her guest her mother, chine rose on its final flight, the journey on and above the glim-mering landscape, the return flight and welcome back from the land where death ever lurked are recounted in film episodes that once seen never will be forgotten. Soclety and jazz films, pictures dealing in morals and mannerisms fade into insignificance before this masterpiece that depicts dauntless courage, pluck and perseverance. Mrs. D. N. Cox returned last Fri-paint and Kleig lights have no day from a visit with relatives in place where nature's "props" have endured for an eternity. The plots Mrs. Clarence Smith, of Eureka Springs, Ark., is visiting her sons, Leslie, Will and Ralph Smith and their families.

The North Pole has been conquered by airplane and the true and vivid story has been brought and vivid story has been brought to our own doors. Peary brought back the written word of his tireiess struggles and final success, but Byrd has, figuratively speaking, brought back the North Pole, the goal of the aces of adventure.
