

Ira Ott named Pioneer of Year

Pioneer of the Year

Ira Ott, left, accepts an award as Pioneer of the Year from KPAN Station Manager Buddy Peeler. Ott was recognized as a pioneer farmer in Deaf Smith County and for his contributions to the local American Legion Post and as a volunteer with over 3,000 hours logged at the Veterans' Hospital.

World War I veteran Ira Ott was honored as the 21st recipient of the Pioneer of the Year award at the annual Pioneer Day held on Saturday.

Born Sept. 13, 1895, in Potosi, Wis., Ott is quoted as saying he has two regrets, that he was not born in Texas and that he was not born in a log cabin. His parents moved out of a log home just a few days before he was born.

Ott came to Hale County, Texas, in 1910 with his parents and to Deaf Smith County in 1921. He was a pioneer farmer along the eastern edge of the county in the "deep water belt."

Diversified farming interests helped the family survive the depression years. Selling eggs, cream, chickens and butter to city folks during hard times provided the family with essentials.

Ott said, "We couldn't go to town until the cream can was full."

He married Pet Finch in 1930 and they continued to pioneer in the young county. The letter nominating Ott for the honor awarded by KPAN Radio said, "He knows what it is like to plant crops with a one-row planter drawn with four mules, also harvesting the crop by hand, cutting one head at a time and tossing it into a wagon."

When others gave up and moved on during the dust bowl days, Ott said they didn't because God hates a quitter."

Ott is credited as one of the earliest county citizens to gain an interest in aviation. He served as a mechanic with the LaFayette Escadrille Squadron of American fliers in World War I. The squadron was stationed in France and is credited with many exploits which proved the value of wartime aviation.

Ott was named as the first Life Member of the Hereford Post of the American Legion and served as Post Commander for two years, 1958 and 1959, and as Zone Commander in 1960.

While his health permitted, he served as a volunteer at the Veteran's Hospital, earning a certificate for over 3,000 donated hours.

The Otts sold the family farm in 1967 and moved into Hereford where they are members of the Presbyterian Church and where he has served on the board of deacons.

KPAN's station manager Buddy Peeler presented the award to Ott during the 64th Mid-Plains Pioneer Celebration at the Bull Barn.

Officers for 1987-88 were also elected during the meeting. Serving are Jerry Jackson, president; Sona Schulz, vice-president; Inez Witherspoon, secretary-treasurer; and Doris Bryant, reporter.

J.W. Schultz was presented a plaque in appreciation for his donation covering the 1987-88 dues of all present. Schultz made the contribution in honor of his family who pioneered in Deaf Smith County.

Ky Lawrence, 91; and Mollie Davis of Amarillo, 93, were recognized for being the oldest man and woman to attend the celebration.

Beverly VandeVoorde and Clarence Beaufort, traveled the farthest distance. The two members of the Class of '47 came from Seattle, Wash., an estimated 2,000 miles.

Showers, thunderstorms escort tornadoes across West Texas

By The Associated Press

Tornado funnels dipped out stormy West Texas skies, primarily in the Panhandle and in the Trans Pecos region where a twister virtually wiped out the town of Saragosa only three days earlier.

More than a dozen funnel clouds were reported Sunday evening after the National Weather Service issued a tornado watch for a vast area of West Texas.

Damage was limited to some roofs, outbuildings, a mobile home and an airplane hangar, authorities said. There were no reports of injuries.

One funnel cloud was sighted near Pecos, not far from the tornado-devastated town of Saragosa, where a twister roared out of a heavy thunderstorm Friday night, killing 29 people and injuring more than 120.

The National Weather Service said severe thunderstorms struck the region as a mass of moist unstable air met a line of dry air, presenting conditions favorable for tornado formation.

A tornado watch was posted for most of the Panhandle and other counties, including Reeves County, where Saragosa is located. Numerous funnel clouds were sighted amid severe thunderstorms and at least one tornado touched down in neighboring Ward County but no damage was reported.

The watch expired early today. "There are several funnel clouds out there tonight," NWS meteorologist Brad Fujii in Fort Worth, said.

A funnel cloud was reported near the Panhandle city of Amarillo. A tornado reported touched down five miles southwest of the town of Hart and was moving to the northwest about 7:30 p.m., but "our officers never saw a tornado near Hart," the Castro County sheriff's dispatcher said. He said a funnel cloud was sighted elsewhere in the county but went back into the sky.

A tornado was seen dipping down from the clouds in Armstrong County, and then going back up, but the storm dissipated, said Tom Henry Miller, who takes calls at night for the sheriff's office.

Several tornadoes touched down near Gruver, in the extreme northern Panhandle, damaging a trailer home, an airstip hangar and blowing the roof off at least one barn, Hansford County Sheriff's officers said.

Officials said there was some minor structural damage to some homes near the town of Waka in neighboring Ochiltree County.

Widely scattered showers were reported early today over parts of the Texas Panhandle and South Plains.

City nets 1.65 inches on weekend

A heavy thunderstorm dumped .54 of an inch of rain in downtown Hereford between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m. today and another cloudburst of rain and hail between 9 a.m. and 11:30 rained for a total of .8 of an inch and brought the weekend total to 1.65 for the city.

Rain readings from KPAN on Sunday morning measured .51 of an inch and Saturday's log was .04 of an inch from downtown.

Today the heaviest report was from Easter Grain where 1.4 inches were measured early this morning, and only sprinkles later.

At Dawn it rained so hard that water was running over the road, and no gauge had been read.

West of Six-Mile Corner, .45 of an inch fell through early this morning.

The Honfeld farm in the far northwest part of the county had clearing skies by 11 a.m.

Saturday's high was the coolest of the holiday weekend at 69. Sunday's low and high were 55 and 78, and Memorial Day started with a low of 53 and reached to 85. Tuesday's early morning was 58.

OUTLOOK: Partly cloudy tonight with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, some likely severe. Low in mid 50s. South wind 10 to 20 mph, except strong and gusty near thunderstorms. Wednesday, partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms; a few possibly severe. High near 80.

For top school job

Board starts interviews

The Hereford Independent School District board of trustees has narrowed its search for a new superintendent to a field of six candidates, it was announced Sunday by board president John Fuston.

Dr. John Townley, consultant for the board, recommended the six from a field of 25 applicants, reported Fuston. The board interviewed one candidate Monday and had scheduled another for this afternoon, but today's interview has been postponed. The board hopes to complete the interviews next week and make a decision by June 15, said Fuston.

The six candidates, all currently holding superintendent positions, are: Dr. Bobby J. Bain, Bowie; Charles W. Greenawalt, Joshua; Dr. Albert D. Thomas, Jacksboro; Dr.

Don Hooper, Gainesville; Charlie Uselton, Colorado City; and Dr. Walter E. Williams, Atlanta.

The candidates range in age from 38 to 50. Fuston said before a contract is offered to the final selection, the board plans to visit the city of a candidate's residence to check references.

In a special meeting Monday afternoon, the board accepted a bid from Brownlow Brothers for $105,070 for construction of the new agriculture building.

The board had set a cap on the expense at $85,000, but $21,520 of Brownlow's split bid was for a separate hog and sheep building. Fuston said he didn't think the district could get a lower bid on the hog and sheep building if it were to be let separately. After discussion, board members voted unanimously to accept the bid.

Twelve more classrooms will be needed at the high school, the board decided. Building plans were considered for 12 or eight more rooms to prepare for moving ninth grade onto the high school campus.

Secondary school principals said they could handle a revised dress code policy, but two board members voted against the addition which allowed shorts.

Local policy formerly banned all shorts. The new policy allows jams or long shorts at intermediate and secondary schools, but prohibits short shorts, tennis shorts, athletic or gym shorts for those students. Kindergarten through third grade pupils may wear shorts.

Added to the dress code is notice that skirts and dresses are not to be shorter than the jams or long shorts.

Board member Shirley Wilson said she did not feel that miniskirts, jams, or walking shorts were appropriate for school. Dennis Newton agreed and the two voted against the measure.

The 1987-88 teacher salary schedule was approved as the same as last year's.

County announces agenda

Deaf Smith County Commissioner's Court will meet Wednesday at 10 a.m. in the Commissioner's Courtroom of the county courthouse.

Items on the agenda include relocation of various offices in the courthouse, seal coating Precinct Roads, advertising for bids for a pickup for Precincts 1 and 2, permission to cross the county road with a water line, purchase of county maps, and discussion related to a computer system for the county.

Employee matters the commissioners will view include a discussion of the maintenance supervisor's salary, replacement of two employees in the county clerk's office and a new salary schedule for that office. Clarification of employees' military leave benefits will also be discussed.

Also on the agenda are discussions related to voting machines, service agreements, equipment for the county jail and Sheriff's department, a railroad crossing project, a project to restore the state capitol, permission for David Ruland to attend a conference and matters related to the WDIC council.

Sheriff's report

Two persons during the weekend were arrested for driving while intoxicated and one was charged also with possession of marijuana.

Deputies are investigating reports of burglary of a habitation, a suspicious person, theft of tires and wheels from two trucks and a wallet that was found.

Suit filed against county

Local attorney Rex Easterwood has filed a lawsuit against Deaf Smith County in 22nd District Court. Easterwood represents Michael Jackson who was injured as the result of a fall in the county jail.

Jackson was arrested on July 26, 1986, for failure to appear and for bond forfeiture. Later that day while taking a shower in the county jail, Jackson fell and was injured. Initially treated by Dr. Tim Revell, Jackson was referred to Dr. James Herbertson for treatment of a ruptured disc. Eventually Jackson underwent surgery for the condition.

Easterwood said the county's liability insurance paid initial medical expenses for Jackson but have not covered for the continued care.

He said the company offered a small settlement but are unwilling to cover more of the expenses because it claims the injury was received as a result of defective design and construction of the shower area.

Jackson was one of two prisoners who received injuries as a result of falls in the shower area. One case, involving less injury, has already been settled.

DOE meeting Wednesday

The Department of Energy Deputy Manager Robert Wunderlich will be available Wednesday morning, at 7, in the Community Center to report on the progress of staff relocations from the Columbus, Ohio, office; staff buildings locally; project staff moves for the summer and contractor activities in the area.

Wunderlich will begin conducting weekly sessions to report on the status of the Salt Repository Project. The sessions are open to the public.

Nursing home staff threatens walkout

The staff at Golden Plains Care Center have threatened to walk out if they do not receive a pay increase they claim they were promised.

Administrator Joeline Swanner confirms rumors of a threatened walkout. "They all came to me yesterday and asked for a raise. They said they would give me 24 hours to come up with the increase or they would walk out."

She says a full crew is standing by to provide continuous care for the residents of the nursing home should a walkout occur and adds, "I told them I would check with the owner.

They work real hard and I think they deserve a raise. I don't think there will be any problem."

Swanner today is awaiting a call from owner, Dennis Barringer. Barringer resides in Tennessee and is expected to be in Hereford Wednesday.

The 80-bed care center opened its doors in Hereford two years ago and employees claim that because of short staffing and increasing resident census they are unable to continue to working without and increase in salary and better staff-resident ratio.

In Texas

Hispanic students have high dropout rate

EDITOR'S NOTE — Almost 1 million of the state's 3.1 million students are Hispanic, and studies show that about 45 percent of Texas Hispanic students drop out before graduation. In the second installment of a six-part series, The Associated Press examines that problem.

By KEN HERMAN Associated Press Writer

ELGIN, Texas (AP) — His new classmates went about the sometimes-noisy business of being first graders, but Cirilo Sanchez sat quietly, isolated by barriers likely to hamper his progress toward high school graduation in 1988.

It was Cirilo's first week at Elgin Elementary School, where Chenocho Flores' job is to teach the 8-year-old boy, just up from Mexico, how to learn and to speak English.

"He's almost old enough to be in the second grade," Flores said. "As far as academics, he probably belongs in kindergarten."

As a bilingual teacher, Flores is a front-line warrior against a Hispanic dropout rate called "America's Time Bomb" in a Southwestern Bell film about the problem.

Studies show about 45 percent of Hispanic students in Texas drop out before graduation, and about one-third do not make it through ninth grade.

Almost 1 million of the state's 3.1 million students are Hispanic. The Texas Education Agency predicts Hispanic enrollment will increase 16 percent by 1990, making it the fastest growing ethnic group in the schools.

Flores, a bilingual teacher for 11 years, does not have to see the numbers to see the problem.

"It's like laundry and it's like washing dishes. You've always got a new one when you think you've got everything going," he said.

There was a time when Texas made little effort to help students who spoke no English. A 1918 state law, born of wartime anti-German sentiment, made English the only legal in-class language.

For decades, that law prevented hundreds of thousands of Hispanics from getting an education but in 1969, the law was changed with the approval of a bilingual education bill.

It was not until 1974, after a healthy nudge from a federal judge, that Texas required bilingual education in early grades.

"We had an 80 percent dropout rate when I first came down here in 1968," said Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, the padre of bilingual education law in Texas.

Without bilingual education, it was sink or swim for Spanish-speaking students.

"Mostly they sank. We lost a lot of kids that way," said Delia Pompa, the TEA's assistant commissioner for program development. Ms. Pompa, 36, saw the education fallout firsthand: Only six of her first-grade classmates in San Antonio graduated from high school.

Truan, who was paddled for speaking Spanish at his Kingsville elementary school, said the bilingual program has helped but suffers from a lack of support in some districts.

But gauging the program's success is difficult, Ms. Pompa said.

"It's hard to say what we've done wrong when we haven't had the ability to do it right because we've never had enough teachers to carry it out right," she said.

Texas has 179,000 public school teachers, 12.5 percent of which are Hispanic. Only 7,062 are certified to teach in bilingual programs. In 1985, 321 certificates were issued to teach in those programs. In 1986, it fell to 154.

Three hundred more per year are needed to make a dent in the shortage, TEA spokeswoman Terri Anderson said.

Elgin's bilingual teachers get an $800 annual bonus, but school officials say that isn't enough to keep the teachers from moving to bigger schools where the pay is better.

In 1972-73, the state spent $700,000 on bilingual education. Texas is spending $37 million for it this year, and the Texas Education Agency says more is needed if it is to meet its goal of cutting the statewide dropout rate for all students from the current 35 percent to 24 percent by 1990.

Rep. Pete Patterson, D-Brookston, said bilingual education might be a waste of money and could be producing, not preventing, dropouts.

"I feel like we're continuing to teach Spanish longer than we should," said Patterson, who favors "total immersion" in English before other subject matters are taught.

Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, spoke Spanish at home and learned English in school during the sink-or-swim years. It worked for him — Hinojosa is a graduate of Georgetown University's law school — but he says many students fail.

"I think they really do not understand what we're trying to accomplish through bilingual education," he said of the program's critics.

Recently, officials in the Tornillo school district near El Paso asked Hispanic parents to punish their children at home for speaking Spanish at school, as a way of helping them learn English.

The officials claimed good intentions, but backed off after TEA and U.S. Justice Department officials warned they could be violating civil rights.

While experts say bilingual education has helped, the next steps in cutting the Hispanic dropout rate will be more subtle and complex. Even without the language barrier, Hispanics face education obstacles that are a sampler of society's ills.

"When the family is at the survival level, there is not a great deal of time for the mother or the father to read to the children," said Mario Benitez, chairman of the University of Texas at Austin's department of curriculum and instruction.

"Sometimes they don't even have money for books."

"There are a lot of Hispanic adults who cannot understand how to help their children," Truan said.

Without home support, classroom education is jeopardized. Luis Cano, founder of a Houston dropout program, hits on that point in "Helping Your Child Learn," a bilingual guide offering the most basic information for Hispanic parents.

Cano tells parents what days are school days, how to get required immunizations and how to lend home support to classroom efforts.

He also offers advice that provides stark insight into the daily problems of poverty.

"If there are two to five children sleeping in the same room, then assign a small space to each of your children," he advises.

Such conditions feed the longtime bias felt in many corners of the state.

"You know the problem," a West

Texan told a state official at a recent hearing on dropout prevention. "We've got these Spanish kids. Their parents are melon-pickers and they're always going to be melon-pickers."

It is such prejudices that make solutions that much harder to achieve.

"We are a little bit ethnocentric in this country," said Benitez, a Cuban native educated in Latin America and Europe.

"This was expressed to me beautifully once by a teacher who said her children didn't have any problem with languages. They only knew one," he said.

Negotiators hope for bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The chief House negotiator on the state budget conference committee says he hopes the panel can finish work on a spending plan by Wednesday.

Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said Monday he had discussed the scenario with Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple, chief Senate negotiator.

"He and I have discussed it thoroughly, and we both want a bill out by Wednesday," Rudd said.

Asked about the comment, Jones described himself as "guardedly optimistic." He said that "as a practical matter" it would be very difficult for the Legislature to take final action on the bill by the June 1 adjournment if the committee takes any longer.

The 10-member conference committee has been meeting to try to resolve differences between the Senate's $40 billion 1988-89 budget and the $39.4 billion House spending plan.

Rudd said he and the other House conferees decided the negotiating committee should offer some bill to the House and Senate before adjournment.

Reflecting the generally more-conservative House view, Rudd said they had agreed they would yield on some spending questions "without giving away the store."

"It was decided it was real important that we get through with the (appropriations) bill and deliver something to the House floor. That's what we're going to do. Not at any cost, but at a cost of probably going a little higher than we would (otherwise) choose to go," Rudd said.

A budget bill alone won't solve the state's financial crisis, however. To meet the constitution's balanced-budget requirement, a bill to raise taxes also appears necessary, lawmakers say.

But Gov. Bill Clements has vowed to veto any tax increase greater than $2.9 billion, and he said again Monday he doesn't believe the Legislature will meet his spending limit.

"In talking with some of the senators, and also the House members, I really don't have a sense of optimism about it," Clements said.

If no balanced budget is enacted by the mandatory June 1 adjournment, the governor would summon lawmakers back into a special session this summer. The state's budget year ends Aug. 31.

Clements said that before he calls a special session, a plan of action for lawmakers to follow is needed.

Millions may miss W-4 deadline

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's one of those once-a-lifetime offers from the Internal Revenue Service that nobody can refuse. But millions are refusing, and the offer is about to expire.

The bottom line is this: The law requires every wage-earner to file a 1987 W-4 tax-withholding form by Oct. 1. If you file before midnight June 1, the IRS has volunteered, it will waive any penalty you might incur for having too little tax withheld from wages this year.

If you let the June 1 deadline pass, you still will be within the law by filing by Oct. 1. But by waiting, you run the risk of being penalized unless your withholding covers at least 90 percent of your 1987 tax liability.

Millions of people are waiting. In a survey commissioned by the IRS, the Roper polling organization concluded in March that just about half of the 100 million-plus wage-earners had filed a new W-4. The elderly, lower-income earners and those in the West are even slower than most in filing.

Although the figures obviously have risen somewhat over the last two months, the response has been disappointing to the IRS.

"The survey showed that some of the people who have been slowest to file are those that are most likely to be under-withheld," said IRS spokesman Wilson Fadely.

Clements seeks federal disaster aid

AUSTIN (AP) — A request from Gov. Bill Clements is on its way to the White House, seeking a major disaster declaration and federal aid for Saragosa and the survivors of the deadly tornado that nearly leveled the town.

Clements signed a letter to President Reagan on Monday that could, if approved by federal officials, trigger loans, grants and other assistance.

"I have determined that this incident is of such severity and magnitude that effective response is beyond the capabilities of the state and the affected local government, and that supplementary federal assistance is necessary," Clements wrote.

The signing came shortly after Clements announced plans to visit the tornado-ravaged West Texas town today.

Clements' letter asked Reagan to issue a major disaster declaration for Saragosa, where 29 people died, 120 were injured and homes, a school, a community hall and businesses were leveled Friday night.

"The tornadoes struck without warning in parts of Reeves County," Clements told Reagan. He signed the letter in his Capitol office with State Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, looking on. Sims' district includes Saragosa.

Patients with dementia need supervision

The Texas Medical Association says if you feel responsible for the well-being of a person suffering from senile dementia, you should be aware of some of the risks that person faces, and some of the resources available to you as a caregiver.

Dementia is an incurable disorder of the brain in which there is a progressive loss of memory and other intellectual functions so that the mind gradually ceases to function normally. The affected person slowly becomes increasingly confused, incapable of sensible conversation, unaware of surroundings, and generally incapacitated.

The Texas Medical Association says about one family in every ten includes at least one elderly member who has some form of senile dementia, including Alzheimer's disease which accounts for nearly 80 percent of dementia cases.

There are risks whenever mentally impaired people live alone, especially after they have progressed beyond an early stage of senility. Because of forgetfulness and a decreased ability to concentrate, there is a danger of fires, falls and other accidents. Some form of daily attendance is important to guard against potential disasters, such as turning on the gas and forgetting to light it.

Friends and relatives can help by organizing memory aids, lists and routines, and by making sure that adequate food and warmth are provided. Without some supervision, a senile person may eat poorly, forget to take medications, and neglect personal hygiene.

DR. GOTT Wood smoke causes trouble

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My son actually enjoys the odor of a wood stove. His wife constantly suffers from lung congestion, and all three of their sons have colds and sore throats all winter. I feel that the wood stove in their home is a hazard, but my son won't listen to me. Can you help?

DEAR READER — The smell of burning wood in a fireplace or stove is pleasurable to many people. I remember the smell of burning autumn leaves; it's a nostalgic and comforting flashback. However, smoke from any source is an air pollutant, and wood stoves are no exception. The combination of dry winter air and wood smoke will cause some people to have repeated sore throats and respiratory infections.

Short of abandoning wood heat altogether, your son may be able to solve the problem by venting the stove more efficiently and using one or more of the new soundless, ultrasonic humidifiers in the house. The addition of humidity to the room air often will protect sensitive breathing passages and throats, and it certainly will help prevent the furniture from becoming unglued. Perhaps if you show your son my answer to your question, he will make the necessary adjustments to promote his family's good health. Let me know what he says.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I am 23, with a history of bladder and kidney infections. I still wet the bed without warning. My 8-year-old daughter is going through the same thing, so I could really use your suggestions. I have gone to several physicians, who give me medication to clear up my infections but don't tell me why I keep getting them.

DEAR READER — Bedwetting (enuresis) in children often is due to stress and emotional tension. However, in adults, the condition is more likely to be related to an abnormality in the urinary system, such as chronic infection or blockage in the tract. You need a thorough examination by a urologist, who probably will check you for infection, obtain an intravenous pyelogram (kidney and bladder X-ray) and perform a cystoscopic exam, during which the lower urinary tract is examined through a lighted tube.

Congenital abnormalities may lead to enuresis, and it is possible that you and your daughter have inherited a defect that may need repair.

To keep peanuts at their munching best, store in a cool, dry place. They'll keep indefinitely frozen in a tightly closed container.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I'd like to sound off about a situation I haven't seen addressed in your column. I'm talking about third-shift husbands.

Jack works 11:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. six nights a week, leaving me and two preschoolers on our own most of the time. I work from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., so I sleep alone, eat alone and drive the kids to day care and back. On weekends Jack is tired, so I'm alone again.

I envy women who can talk with their husbands in the evening, eat with them and sleep with them. It's as if I were a single parent.

I try to see things from my husband's point of view. His life is pretty dismal. He isn't able to see his kids much or have a weekend of fun. He is forever trying to lose weight. Almost every day he takes something for a headache or a backache.

Jack sleeps in a basement den and goes to work on cold, dark nights when I'm tucked in bed. Our life is nil because we live on opposite sides of the clock.

Weekends are an endless chain of meals, dishes, laundry and cleaning. I seem to be getting older and lonelier. Where's the real me?—Drying Up in Buffalo

DEAR BUFF: The problem isn't the shift he works, it's the shift he sleeps. You've got to insist that he sleep while you're at work and the kids are at day care. That way there can be several hours of family time together, starting with supper. There's much you can do to improve the quality of your life, and Jack's too, if you pull up your socks and assert yourself.

After the two of you put the kids to bed, share a cup of tea and talk over your day—and his. Flirt a little. It might lead to something wonderful.

Line up a sitter for every Saturday night. See a movie or a play. Make a date with another couple for dinner out. Go dancing or bowling or play bridge. Like everyone else, you're not going to get a nickel's worth more out of life than you put into it. Get going. It's well-worth the effort.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband and I attended a wedding that never took place. The groom showed up at the church drunk. He passed out at the altar just as the minister started the ceremony. The bride dissolved in tears and her father announced sternly, "The wedding is canceled."

They are fine people, but this was in February and still the gifts have not been returned. What do you think?—Just Askin' in Ohio

DEAR JUST: I think it's time they got around to it. Be patient. If they are "fine people" they will surely return the gifts.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Yesterday I was traveling south when suddenly traffic came to a dead stop. It remained bumper to bumper for a mile and a half. Twenty minutes later I discovered the cause of the slowdown—an accident on the northbound side. Why was southbound traffic stopped? Rubberneckers!

Why do people back up traffic for miles to look at a wreck? I have seen one accident (mine) and I would rather not see another one. What's the matter with these folks anyway? This happens all the time. It's the same thing with fires. Crowds of people stand around gawking. Please explain.—Late For Work in San Jose

DEAR L.F.W.: Most people's lives are drab and uneventful. They enjoy the excitement of an accident. It gives them something to talk about and makes them feel important because they were there.

Then, of course, there's morbid curiosity. It is one of the less attractive qualities of human nature, but we all have it in varying degrees.

How to — and how much? Find out with Ann Landers' new booklet, "How, What and When to Tell Your Child About Sex." For your copy send 50 cents plus a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11562, Chicago, Ill. 60611-0562.

Preteens getting into cosmetics despite parents' misgivings

By CYNTHIA SANZ The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Carla Gonzales is like many Dallas 11-year-olds. She giggles with her friends about the boys in her class, worries about how she will finish her math homework, and collects stuffed animals.

"I just like them, I guess," Carla says of the furry bears and monkeys that line her dresser.

And what of the aerosol can of hair spray that sits next to those animals? Or the comb of mauve and purple eye shadows that rests in the lap of one of the bears? Well, whether adults like it or not, that's typical, too.

"If you want to stand out, you have to wear something," Carla explains. "Everybody wears something."

To the delight of cosmetics companies and the dismay of many parents, younger and younger girls are buying and wearing beauty products. The average age now for starting to wear what the girls call "serious makeup" is about 8 or 9, but even 4-year-olds are getting into the act with Care Bears and Cabbage Patch Kids lip gloss.

"By third or fourth grade, almost every girl is at least wearing eyeliner," says Carla, who is a fifth-grader at Maple Lawn Elementary School in Oak Lawn.

Marketing experts in the cosmetics industry estimate that girls Carla's age are among the highest users of fragrance in the country, and by their mid-teens they will be purchasing more blush, eyeliner and lipstick than the adults they are trying to emulate.

"There is a significant trend going on in the industry," says Val Formica, vice president for marketing for DuCair Bioessence.

About six years ago, Formica's company began making non-toxic, water-soluble cosmetics specifically for children and marketing them under such names as Care Bears, Barbie and Popples. (Yes, the same Care Bears, Barbies and Popples that are found in toy stores or on Saturday morning cartoons.) While Formica won't reveal sales figures, he will say that they are on the rise.

"You have a lot of baby boomer families having children right now so there's a rising population of 3- to 10-year-olds," Formica says. "Because of the way their parents are bringing them up, these kids are more sophisticated about what they want, and mom and dad are letting them make more of their own purchase decisions."

But while such products appeal to younger girls, older preteens seem to prefer such inexpensive adult brands such as Maybelline, Cover Girl and Maxi by Max Factor, and by borrowing from mothers and older sisters, some are fast becoming loyal fans of more expensive brands such as Clinique.

"When my mom's running out, she gives me her leftovers, and whenever she gets a Clinique bonus she gives it to me," says Tate Henderson, 10, whose mother won't let her wear the makeup to school until next year.

"I used to use the Holly Hobby stuff when I was little, but I haven't had any in a long time," says Tate, a fifth-grader at Lakewood Elementary School. "I spilled the Holly Hobby bath oil on my sister's bed once and the stain is still there. Now I like Clinique the best."

The more expensive department-store cosmetic lines such as Clinique don't target preteen girls directly, but more and more, the lines found in drugstores and supermarkets do.

"We usually say our market is 15- to 25-year-olds, but our research does say that younger girls are purchasing our products as well," says Amy Manasevit, publicist for Max Factor. "Basically, if your prices are under $2 or $3, that's a market you're going to attract."

Whether or not preteens are stated as the target audience, it would be hard to imagine some products being used by anyone over the age of 15. Maxi's Swirl Stick, for example, is a marbled lip gloss that comes in colors such as brown and gray and is flavored and scented like chocolate or licorice.

"That sort of thing — flavors especially — seems to go over well with younger girls," Ms. Manasevit says.

Swirl Sticks and other lip glosses, are, in fact, often cited as favorites among Dallas preteens. "I like the ones that are just clear, and when you put them on, your lips get shiny," says Nicole McIntosh, 12, a sixth-grader at Lakewood. "Nobody can really tell you have it on."

"The first one I had, I used to eat and my mother said I couldn't have another," says Lilly Alvidrez, 12, a sixth-grader at Lakewood. "Now she only lets me wear makeup on special occasions."

However, if recent sales research is any indication, parents tend to be more lenient about fragrance. According to Ms. Manasevit, cosmetic industry research shows that among girls 12 to 18 years old, 99 percent wear fragrance, 80 percent started wearing it before they were 14, and 60 percent wore it before they were 13.

As in the case of makeup, 10-, 11- and 12-year-olds seem to prefer "adult" scents such as Le Jardin and Charlie, over the strawberry-and green apple-scented colognes directed at children.

Last year, Max Factor went directly after the children's market with a line of Michael Jackson signature fragrances and accessories called Magic Beat. Unlike most other children's fragrances, Magic Beat has the scent of an adult-type cologne. Unfortunately for Max Factor, however, the new Jackson album and video that were to be released when the fragrance made its debut is still nowhere to be seen. As a result, Ms. Manasevit admits, the line "has not been very successful."

Overall, however, the industry is thriving. "We have been in the kids' cosmetics business for probably 15 years and I don't think we've seen business so strong," says David Mamberg, vice president for marketing for Cosrich, Inc., the maker of the Cabbage Patch Kids and Jem cosmetics lines.

"Little girls do like to use makeup," Mamberg says, "and when they buy products like this, at least their mothers know that they're water soluble so they can be washed off children's hands, and God forbid, the rug, and that they're non-toxic so if children decide to drink them, it won't cause any serious harm."

Hair-care products are other big sellers in the preteen market, probably in part because parents object less to mousses and shampoos than they do to other cosmetic items.

"My mom thinks that if it's for your hair, it's not really makeup so it's OK," says Nicole, who uses mousse and hair spray to keep her bangs in place and to hold the rest of her brown hair behind a bow on each side of her head.

Temporary hair-coloring products also are quite popular among preteens because they allow them to express their individuality without incurring the wrath of their parents or the ridicule of their friends.

Many of the products come in such untraditional hair colors as purple and green. Some resemble bright-colored crayons, allowing girls to streak or highlight their hair.

"I like the gold and copper colors," says Maricia "Pebbles" Perez, 11, a brunette fifth-grader at Maple Lawn. "It makes my hair look different and bright."

Although many Dallas parents apparently do try to set limits on their daughters' cosmetic adventures, it seems to be a losing battle. School administrators report that many girls who arrive at school without makeup are completely decked out by the end of the day. Some girls even go so far as to bring makeup remover to school with them so their faces are again freshly clean when their parents appear in the afternoon to pick them up.

"A lot of parents don't approve, but that doesn't seem to be stopping the determined ones," says Larry Wilborn, principal of Lakewood Elementary School.

Carla's mother can sympathize. "I don't really like it," she says. "But she wears it anyway. I got tired of trying to stop her."

Shopping center parking lot swallows new car

By KELLY LYNE Laredo Morning Times

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — I'm writing this column in self-defense. I'm writing it before one of my co-workers beats me to it.

You see, I am 29 years old. I'm a college graduate. I'm hard working and self-supporting. And on a recent Saturday, I misplaced my car. My beautiful, practically new, heart of my hearts, automobile.

Not having my history or background, my colleagues find this story extremely funny. I am willing to let my readers be the judges:

I parked the car outside a store at Mall del Norte. There were hundreds of cars in that parking lot. Like soldiers waiting for the call to battle, they neatly stood at attention from the mall to the access road.

I went into the mall, shopped for an hour and a half, returned, keys in hand, to get into my car. It wasn't there. I'm not generally a space cadet. I was sure I knew where it was parked. It's right here, I kept telling myself, as I paced up and down, row after row of car. No midnight blue Honda presented itself. Row after row, as the heat beat down on the cement and the sweat rolled into my already teary eyes, I searched.

I went into the mall, shopped for an hour and a half, returned, keys in hand, to get into my car. It wasn't there. I'm not generally a space cadet. I was sure I knew where it was parked. It's right here, I kept telling myself, as I paced up and down, row after row of car. No midnight blue Honda presented itself. Row after row, as the heat beat down on the cement and the sweat rolled into my already teary eyes, I searched.

You have to face the facts, I told myself. It has been stolen. Stop torturing yourself and go report it. Dejected, shoulders sagging, stomach heaving, I returned to the mall. At the time I was disgusted and mutinous when I found there was no phonebook at the payphones there. Actually, God must have been sitting on my shoulder as the events turned out.

But I digress. I called the operator and asked her to connect me to the police department. "Is it an emergency?" she asked cheerily.

"No, I just wanted to tell them what a good job they're doing," I snapped. "My car has been stolen."

Instead of connecting me to the department (like they do in the movies, you know) she gave me the number. Of course, in my hysteria, I couldn't remember it long enough to dial it, so I dialed a number and got no answer.

So I trudged in my martyrdom to the newspaper's office. There, I broke down, fell to pieces, lost my dignity. "They (they being some dastardly villains who would steal from little old ladies and kidnap babies) stole my car," I cried.

Everyone was so soliticious. Another reporter offered to take me to P.D. to report the theft. "But first let's check one more time," she said. Oh, such wisdom in such a young person.

She took me up and down the aisles. But I, in my characteristic pessimism, was busy thinking about who I could borrow wheels from, how I would break it to the relative who gave me this gorgeous piece of equipment, how much the insurance would cover, etc.

My colleague was the one who spotted it. "There's a blue Honda," she said helpfully, hopefully.

"That's it," I screamed. "Thank you, thank you, thank you... you get the idea."

I got in the car and lovingly patted the steering wheel. "You gave me quite a scare," I told it.

Meanwhile my co-workers were concocting all sorts of stories about what had "really" happened. One ventured that I had had heat stroke. Another suggested I had been hitting the tequila bottle that afternoon. Another said the fact that I'm from Kansas explains the whole thing.

But Editor Bill Bouldin had the most interesting theory. He intends to assign the cop reporter to investigate a new breed of thief. This thief steals the car, makes a carbon copy of it, and returns the original to the exact spot from whence it came no harm done.

Actually, I think someone did steal it. But they realized that a hard-working journalist like myself, struggling to make ends meet, could never replace it. So, in goodwill, they returned it. Only they couldn't remember exactly where it was parked. So they put it back in the wrong spot about eight rows from where I know for sure I parked it.

All things considered, it could have been worse. I could have reported it stolen to the police. Then they could have laughed at me to.

I don't care how much people laugh. I grew up in a family where a car was the most important possession a person has, even more important than the family home. My brothers discuss cars endlessly. My father can take one apart and put it back together piece by piece.

It's a good thing they'll never know how close one of their kin came to shaming them. A Lyne doesn't lose a car. It'd be like a cowboy losing his gun, or a surgeon, his scalpel.

Lynes gotta have wheels.

POLLY'S POINTERS

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — Can strawberries be canned? We're growing quite a few strawberries this year and I'd like to save some for winter. — T.B.

DEAR T.B. — Strawberries are much better frozen, as they become pale, soft and unattractive when they're canned. If you don't have a freezer large enough to accommodate some strawberries, why not make strawberry jam, preserves or jelly?

However, if you still want to can strawberries, here's the procedure that gives the best results: Use only the most perfect berries. Wash, hull and measure them. Then spread the strawberries in shallow pans in thin layers alternating with layers of sugar, using 1/2 to 1 cup sugar for each 4 cups berries. Cover with waxed paper and let stand at room temperature for two to four hours. Turn the berries and sugar into a kettle and simmer five minutes in their own juice.

Pack berries and juice into clean, hot canning jars, leaving 1/2 inch headroom. (If you have a juicer, use juice to cover the berries, and boiling this sugar syrup.) Cover with lids and screw-on bands and process in a boiling water bath 10 minutes for pints and 15 minutes for quarts.

The President with the most children was Tyler, who had 15.

With 7-6 win over Andrews late Saturday night

Whitefaces advance in baseball playoffs

A nightmare of a day for Hereford Whiteface Coach T.R. Sartor on Saturday ended with the Herd baseball team defeating Andrews 7-6 late in the evening at Jal, N.M.

Hereford was scheduled to play Andrews in game two of the bi-district playoffs on Saturday afternoon in Lubbock, but Lubbock Christian College's Chaparral Stadium was wet and unplayable.

Coach Sartor spent more than four hours Saturday, beginning at 8:15 a.m., to try to locate a dry field to continue the playoffs series.

Finally, at about 1 p.m., the Whiteface team departed from Hereford and headed to Andrews where there was a dry field—at least that was what Sartor was told.

When the team reached Littlefield, Hereford High School principal Terry Russell flagged down them down and told them he heard that the site of the game was changed to Hobbs, N.M.

The Whiteface team found that the Hobbs field was too wet to play on, and the group headed to Eunice, N.M. They found out that Canyon and Pecos were playing game two of that bi-district playoff series.

The Hereford players and coaches waited for that game to end, as well as the Andrews team. Pecos won the game 7-5, forcing the series into a third game (won by Pecos 7-5).

That meant Hereford and Andrews had to look for another field to play their game on. The two teams then went to Jal, N.M., where they finally played game two of the bi-district playoff series, starting at 9:30 p.m. Mountain Daylight Time or 10:30 p.m. Central Daylight Time.

The game went scoreless for the first four innings. Pitching for the Whitefaces was Bobby Medina, who went into the game with an 8-1 season record.

Andrews gained a 3-0 lead in the top of the fifth inning. Hereford committed two errors and Medina walked two Mustang batters in the inning.

Hereford, which had only two baserunners in the first four innings, gained a 5-3 lead in the bottom of the fifth inning.

Rodney McCracken led off the inning with a double. Four of the next five Whiteface batters walked, leading to two runs. Those who walked were Robby Collier, Paul Maes, Keith Herrera, and Medina.

Kyle Streun then hit a two-run single, and Keith Anderson hit an RBI single.

Andrews moved back into the lead, 6-5, in the top of the sixth inning, on two Hereford errors and two singles.

The Hereford sixth inning began with James Hernandez walking, Maes singling, and Herrera walking to load the bases. Medina hit a sacrifice fly into right field to drive home Hernandez and tie the game at 6-6.

Maes advanced to third base on the sacrifice fly, and Herrera remained at first base. Herrera then stole second base, and the Andrews catcher's throw went into centerfield for an error.

Maes scored on the error, giving the Whitefaces what proved to be their winning run.

Andrews, trailing 7-6, got a leadoff single in the top of the seventh inning. The next two Mustang batters flied out, with Hereford outfielders McCracken and Collier catching those fly balls.

The next Andrews batter hit a single into right field, where Keith Brown was playing at the time on defense for Hereford. Brown rifled a throw to third base to throw out the runner who had attempted to advance from first to third on the single.

That marked the end of the long day for the Whitefaces, and boosted them into the regional playoffs against Fort Worth Brewer.

Hereford Coach Sartor said, "We didn't play well, but we got the big plays when we needed them."

"Michael Phibbs made a great catch in the outfield in the fourth inning. It was a running catch, it was in the gap and it would have been a double if he had not caught it. And then, of course, Keith's play in the second inning."

Hereford had just four hits in the game, but they were all timely ones, including the three hits in the fifth inning.

Medina pitched a complete game to up his record to 9-1. None of the Andrews runs were earned runs. Medina gave up seven hits, walked three batters, and had two strikeouts.

Hereford committed six errors in the game.

A crowd of more than 100 watched the game, including about 80 fans from Hereford. There were about 35 Andrews fans at the game.

Hereford plays Fort Worth Brewer on Thursday at 8 p.m. at the Snyder High School baseball field in Snyder.

Game two is scheduled on Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Vernon Regional Junior College field in Vernon, and a third game, if necessary, will also be played on Saturday.

Brewer lost game one to Hirschi, 2-0, and then won two straight over Hirschi, 10-4, 10-5.

Game one of the series between Hereford and Brewer is scheduled at 8 p.m. Thursday at the Snyder High School baseball field in Snyder. Admission prices are $3 for adults and $1 for students.

Game two of the series will be played at 1 p.m. Saturday in Vernon, at the Vernon Regional Junior College baseball field. Game three, if necessary, will be played after game two.

Admission on Saturday will also be $3 for adults and $1 for students.

Fort Worth Brewer is led by pitcher Ronnie Powers and second baseman John Turner. Powers has a won-loss record of 18-6, which ties a state record for most pitching victories in one season.

Turner, son of Brewer head coach Mike Turner, is batting .419. Catcher Todd Hatcher has a batting average of .408.

The leading home run hitter for Brewer is rightfielder Greg Morris with nine.

The rest of Brewer's starting lineup has Steve Putnam at first base, Devin Dixon at shortstop, Kenny Stavenhagen at third base, Wes Moore in centerfield, and Peanuts Lowry in leftfield. The designated hitter is Craig Slovak.

Davis leads Astros over Pirates 7-2

HOUSTON (AP) — Glenn Davis is out of his hitting slump and that's bad news for opponents of the Houston Astros.

It was bad news for the Pittsburgh Pirates as Davis and lefthanded pitcher Jim DeShaies provided the hitting and pitching to lead the Astros to a 7-2 victory over the Pirates Monday night.

Davis drove in three runs with his eighth homer of the year, a double and a sacrifice fly. After being mired in a long slump, Davis now has a seven-game hitting streak in which he is 13-26. The streak includes four doubles, four homers and eight RBI.

DeShaies, 3-2, weathered a shaky first inning in which he allowed the two Pirate runs, but he recovered the pitch his first complete game of the year. It was only fourth complete game by an Astros pitcher this season. Cy Young Award winner Mike Scott has the other three.

The Pirates knew what they had to do to solve DeShaies, but they didn't do it.

"If you don't lay off his high fast ball, he (DeShaies) is tough to beat," said Pirates Manager Jim Leyland. "You have to make him bring the ball down in the strike zone. We didn't do that. As a result, he got a lot of pop fly outs and fly outs in the game."

The Pirates either popped or flied out 14 times.

DeShaies allowed only one base runner after run-scoring doubles by Johnny Ray and Jim Morrison netted the two Pirate runs. He retired 24 of the final 25 Pirate batters and finished the game by allowing only four hits while walking one and striking out three.

"Tonight I was able to hit my spots after the first inning and get them to hit the ball in the air a lot," said DeShaies. "It is great to contribute to a win."

The first two batters in the Houston lineup managed to get on base six times, giving Davis runners to advance.

Billy Hatcher walked three times and had a single and Bill Doran had a single. Hatcher scored three of the runs.

After tying the score at 2-2 off Pirates starter and loser Dorn Taylor, 1-1, with Davis' double and an infield groundout by Terry Puhl in the first inning, the Astros took the lead for good when Davis slammed his home run leading off the fourth inning for a 3-2 lead.

Davis added a sacrifice fly in the fifth, Craig Reynold tripled in Alan Ashby in the sixth and Hatcher scored on a double play ground ball in the seventh before capping the scoring with a single in the eighth driving in Denny Walling.

Lobbying on acid rain topped all others

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acid rain control legislation barely got out of the starting gate in Congress last year, but that didn't stop energy industry foes from winning the Capitol Hill lobbyist spending sweepstakes for 1986.

The Citizens for Sensible Control of Acid Rain said its lobbying costs totaled $3,028,235, the biggest single chunk of the nearly $60.9 million that individuals and groups said they spent while trying to influence Congress.

The organization, bankrolled largely by electricity and coal companies, paid out most of the money for mass mailings designed to prompt citizens to tell lawmakers they oppose mandating stricter emissions controls on coal-fired boilers.

After spending nothing in the first three months of the year, the acid rain group began moving quickly after some 160 House members became co-sponsors of an acid rain control bill drafted by Reps. Gerry Sikorski, D-Minn., and Henry Waxman, D-Calif.

The legislation was approved at midyear by the Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, but that's as far as it got, eventually expiring in the full committee. In the Senate, an acid rain bill never came up for a committee vote.

Tom Buckmaster, the Washington public relations man who serves as the lobbying group's part-time executive director, declined to say how many pieces of mail were dispatched around the nation.

He also said that "it's too early to tell" how much the group will spend this year, when control advocates on both sides of Congress plan to make a far more concerted effort to get the issue to the floor.

The acid rain lobbyists won the spending sweepstakes by half a nose. In second place last year at $3,011,412 was another mass-mail operation, the controversial National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare.

Some members of Congress close to these issues accuse this group of using scare tactics to get senior citizens to contribute to its operations, which last year deluged

Capitol Hill with an estimated 8 million pieces of correspondence.

Both the National Committee and the acid rain lobbyists easily surpassed the previous high spending of $2,067,506 by the Natural Gas Supply Association in 1984.

The aggregate lobbyist spending of $60,869,183, compiled from reports filed with the House clerk and Senate secretary, was almost 25 percent higher than the total that lobbyists spent in 1985 and nearly 45 percent above 1984 levels.

The big outlay, fueled by the huge stakes riding on the tax revision package, worked out to an average of about $113,700 for each House and Senate member.

According to the required spending reports, little of the lobbying money is spent directly on members. Much of it goes for staff salaries, to hire lawyers to visit congressional offices and to pay office overhead.

And an ever increasing amount is used to turn the American public into long-distance lobbyists through costly direct-mail campaigns designed to get people to flood Congress with pre-addressed correspondence carrying an interest group's message.

Last year's $60,869,183 was the highest since The Associated Press began compiling such totals in 1983. It was $11.85 million above the previous high in 1985, when work began on the new tax law.

The No. 3 spender last year was Common Cause, the so-described citizens lobby that concentrates on issues such as campaign finance reform and political ethics. It said its spending of $2,074,807 represented its entire budget.

Other groups spending more than $1 million were the National Association of Letter Carriers, $1,633,716; Fiber, Fabric and Apparel Coalition for Trade, $1,482,349; Committee to Protect the Family, $1,469,866; American Council of Life Insurance, $1,119,881; Sierra Club, $1,059,721; and Handgun Control Inc., $1,002,522.

This latter anti-firearms organization, however, was outgunned as usual by the collective spending of its three main foes: Gun Owners of America, $981,500; National Rifle Association of America, $904,895; and Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, $417,625.
