Three killed in B-1 crash

LA JUNTA, Colo. (AP) — Three crewmen parachuted to safety but three others were killed when an Air Force B-1B, the nation's newest strategic bomber, crashed and burned after birds were sucked into the engines, authorities said.

The unarmed, $230 million bomber was flying at about 500 feet on a low-level practice bombing run Monday when the pilot reported striking a flock of birds, Air Force and Federal Aviation Administration officials said.

The pilot immediately began climbing and reached an altitude of roughly 15,500 feet, said Bob Buckhorn, an FAA spokesman in Washington, D.C. The pilot then radioed air-traffic controllers that two right engines had caught fire because of "bird ingestion," Buckhorn said.

"We're going down," the pilot radioed, according to Laurie King, spokeswoman at Dyess Air Force Base, where the plane was based.

The four-engine bomber then crashed, spraying 50 acres of flat, eastern Colorado rangeland just south of La Junta with shards of metal, most of them no bigger than a few inches in diameter.

"It was just a heck of an explosion," said Greg Ricken, who witnessed the falling plane from his dairy ranch 20 miles away. "It sounded like a sonic boom. It looked kind of like an atomic bomb."

The crash was the first involving a production model of the B-1B, the nation's newest long-range bomber.

The survivors were being treated for minor injuries at the U.S. Air Force Academy hospital in Colorado Springs, and were in good condition, Air Force Master Sgt. Al Dostal said late Monday.

"The other three crew members ... are all dead," he said.

The Air Force said the cause of the crash would not be officially listed until an investigation was completed. But officials expressed no doubts that birds could disable a low-flying aircraft.

The Air Force says birds caused about $18 million in damage to its aircraft in 1986, including the loss of an F-4E and an F-16. The Air Force said there were 2,765 reported incidents of bird strikes last year, mostly during daylight hours at altitudes below 3,000 feet.

"If you get a large enough bird, or many of them, into the turbines, it can cause problems," said a spokesman for Rockwell International, the plane's manufacturer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Schroeder won't run in '88 race

DENVER (AP) — A tearful Rep. Patricia Schroeder said she would not seek the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination in part because she "could not bear to turn every human contact into a photo opportunity."

Supporters expressed disappointment but understanding, and within an hour of the Colorado congresswoman's announcement here Monday, presses in Ohio started stamping out campaign buttons saying, "Schroeder. Whenever."

The senior woman in Congress, whose biting wit hit some of the Democratic candidates as often as he did President Reagan, said she would not enter the race because "I could not figure out how to run and not be separated from those I served."

An estimated 1,500 people gathered at noon in the outdoor Greek Theater in Denver's Civic Center Park to hear Mrs. Schroeder announce her intentions, which she had revealed to advisers and friends only 90 minutes earlier.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, one of the six remaining Democratic presidential hopefuls, said Mrs. Schroeder had made "a very personal decision, and I respect her for it. I think she would have been a good addition to the Democratic presidential contest."

Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois expressed regret even though he thinks he'll be a major beneficiary of her decision.

"It will be a loss to the nation's dialogue on arms control, women's issues and sensitivity to disadvantaged," Simon said in Chicago.

Mrs. Schroeder, 47, who pinned the term "Teflon president" on Reagan and has referred to the announced Democratic contenders as "a bowl of upset Jell-O," urged her supporters to "build on gains we have made and not lose them."

She said there must be a way to marshal the grassroots support she tapped this summer "and find out some way to do it at the presidential level."

Pat Murphy, president of the National Organization for Women in New Hampshire, said Mrs. Schroeder had appealed to feminists, peace groups and military families, the latter because of her efforts on their behalf as a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

The Colorado congresswoman's press aide, Andrea Camp, said political and financial considerations were part of Mrs. Schroeder's decision.

Her organization reportedly had raised only half the $2 million she once had said was needed to run a credible campaign.

Mrs. Schroeder spent nearly four months testing her support, saying she would run only if she thought she could win.

"I learned a lot about America and I learned a lot about Pat Schroeder (this summer). That's why I will not be a candidate for president. I could not figure out how to run," she said, with her husband, Jim Schroeder, at her side.

For nearly a minute, she was overcome with emotion and could not speak.

"I could not figure out how to run and not be separated from those I served," she continued. "There must be a way, but I haven't figured it out yet."

"I could not bear to turn every human contact into a photo opportunity," she said.

Schroeder's decision leaves three announced Democratic candidates besides Dukakis and Simon: Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt. Jesse Jackson plans to formally enter the race next month.

Herd forfeits two contests

The Hereford High School varsity football team is 0-2 in District 1-4A standings and 0-4 for the season as a result of an ineligible athlete participating in the two victories this season.

The ineligibility was discovered Monday when counselors were computing credits for graduation. The student, listed as a senior on the 1987 team roster, was one credit short of senior status.

The athlete played in two of the four games this fall, in both of the victories. Those wins were 26-0 over Andrews in a non-district game on Sept. 4, and 38-7 over Pampa in a District 1-4A game on Sept. 18. He did not play in Hereford's losses — 21-14 to Clovis on Sept. 11, and 23-7 to Frenship last Friday.

Statements were issued by Hereford Independent School District Superintendent Charles A. Greenawalt and Athletic Director and head football coach Don Cumpston. Here are their statements:

Greenawalt: "On Sept. 28, 1987, an error was discovered involving the eligibility of one of our varsity football players.

"After discovering the error, we immediately contacted the district chairman of the District 1-4A executive committee and informed him of the mistake. The minimum penalty is forfeiture of all previous games, which we readily accept and have been informed by the district chairman that a private reprimand will be coming from the district UIL executive committee."

Cumpston: "We made a computation error in counting one of our young men's credits. It's not any one individual's fault. Right now, the most important thing for us to do as a football team is to put it behind us and play our football games — because by no means are we out of the district race."

The revised District 1-4A standings will put Pampa at 1-1 and Hereford at 0-2. The other district teams' win-loss records are: Canyon and Lubbock Estacado, both 2-0; Borger, 1-0; Frenship and Levelland, both 1-1; Dumas, 0-1; and Lubbock Dunbar, 0-2.

Hereford High School's next game is Friday at home, against Lubbock Dunbar at 7:30 p.m. at Whiteface Stadium.

County approves audit, purchases

Closing out the budget for fiscal year 1986-87 was the primary order of business for Deaf Smith County Commissioners during their regular session on Monday.

Commissioners reviewed budget amendments proposed by County Auditor Alex Schroeter and received the presentation of the 1986-86 audit from Donna West, a certified public accountant with Brown, Graham, and Company, P.C., who performed the audit.

Sheriff Joe Brown received approval for his $2,600 request to purchase a new radar for the Department of Public Safety and Museum Director Juanita Phillips was granted permission to spend an estimated $1,100 repairing termite damage to the gazebo located at the E.B. Black House.

A Criminal Justice Department grant benefiting the local Domestic Violence Outreach office was accepted and $5,000 in matching funds were committed from the county. Last week, the City of Hereford also committed $5,000.

Remodeling of the county courthouse continues with funding approvals for office furniture for the County Extension offices, now located on the fourth floor, and for changes in the county courtroom.

County investment policies were adopted, in accordance with House Bill 1488, at the recommendation of County Treasurer Vesta Mae Nunley.

Commissioners rejected a proposed County and District retirement system which would cost an additional $700 a month. The plan would allow employee retirement eligibility after 10 years of employment rather than the current requirement of 12 years' service.

Casey was 'primary actor' in Iran deals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the House panel investigating the Iran-Contra affair says he believes late CIA director William J. Casey was "a primary actor" in the diversion of Iran arms sale money to Nicaraguan rebels.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said Monday he had drawn that conclusion gradually since fired White House aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North testified this summer that the diversion was largely Casey's idea, even though investigators have no other direct evidence of Casey's involvement.

"Yes, I believe he was aware of the diversion," Hamilton said, adding that Casey had deceived him about the scheme in numerous conversations while Hamilton was chairman of the House Intelligence Committee. He pointed to North's words in describing a "self-sustaining, off-the-shelf" covert action capability, "words that were not characteristic of a combat infantryman, and seemed to me more the vocabulary of a New York corporate lawyer," as Casey was. "You can hear Casey talking there."

"Bill Casey probably knew about the diversion far before he indicated that he did know" to investigators, and was "a primary actor in the diversion," Hamilton said.

Hamilton's Senate counterpart, Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said he would not be surprised if Casey were in on the diversion, but said that question will not be of primary importance in the committees' final report, due out in late October.

"We'll never know, because he's no longer with us," Inouye added. Casey died in May of a brain tumor.

The issue of Casey's knowledge has been revived with publication of a book by Washington Post assistant managing editor Bob Woodward, in which Woodward contends Casey admitted knowledge of the diversion in a brief hospital interview before his death last spring. Casey's widow, Sophia, denies that such an interview could have taken place.

The House panel met for less than an hour on Monday for an initial review of the 1,000-page draft, and its senior Republican, Rep. Dick Cheney of Wyoming, said afterward that GOP members already are at work on a separate section reflecting their dissenting views.

He did not specify areas of disagreement, but those areas are believed to include the applicability of the Boland amendment, Congress' proscription against Contra aid from the period October 1984 to October 1986; and whether Attorney General Edwin Meese III tried to get the facts out, or to cover them up, during his investigation of the affair last November.

The Senate committee was meeting today to hear the first comments from its members on the draft narrative.

Summing up, Hamilton said the 41 days of hearings, lead to several general conclusions: That there was a lack of accountability in the administration; an overemphasis on covert action as a tool of foreign policy; an obsession with secrecy; a misuse of intelligence, and a contempt for Congress.

"The president of the United States should have known about these activities," Hamilton said. "After all, the president is the official who is responsible. It is he who sets the climate within his administration."

Officials such as North and former National Security Advisor John M. Poindexter, who destroyed documents and lied to Congress about the affair, have been praised by Reagan, Hamilton noted.

Study club reviews Bernstein biography

Calliopean Study Club met in the home of Mrs. Earl Holt Sept. 24 with President Cherry McWhorter presiding.

After a brief business meeting Mrs. Emil Dettmann presented the program which was a review of the book "Bernstein". It is a biography of Leonard Bernstein by Joan Peyser.

Bernstein is the son of Russian Jews who immigrated from Russia to the United States when they were very young and married here. He very early showed a great love of music. By the time he started school he could play the piano and sing. He and his sister, Shirley played and sang and put on plays to entertain their friends at home and at school.

When he finished preparatory school he went to Harvard on a music scholarship. While there he met a Greek conductor, Mitropoulos, and a Russian Jew conductor Koussevitsky, both of whom had great influence on his music career. They both urged him to concentrate on conducting. Bernstein studied conducting under Koussevitsky, but all the time he was writing music and playing the piano.

He became assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra when he was 25 years old. He was the first American, the first Jew and the youngest ever to conduct a major orchestra in the United States. He made many tours of United States, Europe, and South America as a guest conductor and became popular everywhere.

He conducted the Omnibus show and the Young Peoples' concert series on television. He taught conducting at Tanglewood school of Music, lectured, played the piano for many concerts accompanied Jenie Tourel in her singing, and composed many productions of musicals, opera, symphonies, dances, and songs. Some of his best known productions are Jeramiah, West Side Story, Wonderful Town, Fancy Free, On Our Town, A Quiet Place.

He married Felicia Montalegre and the two performed together in many of his works. They had three children. Felicia died in 1978. Bernstein is still living and producing music and conducting.

The next meeting of Calliopean will be at Gastons for a style show Oct. 8.

Members present at last meeting were: Mesdames Paul Coneway, Zella Mae Crump, Emil Dettmann, Alton Fraser, Linda Gilbert, Lile Holmes, Earl Holt, James Hull, Duffy McBrayer, Ted McWhorter, Millard Nobles, Kathlee Palmer, Charles Threewit, and a guest, Velora Tinsley.

AVOIDING SQUASHED EGGS

NEW YORK (AP) — Ever wonder how to safely transport your picnic from kitchen to park?

Mary Ellen Pinkham, a household hints expert and a contributing editor to Family Circle magazine, tells how to get deviled eggs to a picnic safely.

"I love deviled eggs at a picnic," Pinkham says, "but they lose a lot of their appeal when they're squashed en route. To avoid this, put the whites in one container and spoon the yolk mixture into a plastic bag.

"When you are ready to eat, cut a tiny hole in a bottom corner of the bag and 'pipe' filling into each egg half."

Normal life can be led by diabetic kids

Children with diabetes are faced with challenges and problems in daily life that require special care and understanding. However, the child with diabetes does not want to be singled out.

He or she can participate in all activities and can be expected to do what every other child does. With a little attention to some simple guidelines, and a little knowledge, no one should be anxious about taking care of such a child, either at camp, in school, or on a "sleep-over" date.

It is important for teachers, nurses, principals, lunchroom personnel, playground and hall supervisors and bus drivers to be notified that a student has diabetes. A special diet, regular meal and snack times, and the possibility of an insulin reaction must be taken into account by all supervisory personnel who are in contact with the diabetic child.

It is also advisable for teachers to meet with the parents of a child with diabetes to learn about that particular child's routine.

In general, if a diabetic child is under your supervision:

-Watch his performance just before mealtimes.

-Don't assign physical exercise just before lunch.

-If he needs a mid-morning (or afternoon) snack, help him eat it as casually and inconspicuously as possible.

-Keep sugar or honey available.

-Encourage the youngsters to carry some form of sugar with him: Diabetic children soon learn to recognize and treat their own reactions.

-Make sure that he takes extra nourishment (carbohydrates) before planned strenuous exercise to avoid a reaction.

-Any child suspected of being in "reaction" must always remain in the company of an adult.

-Do not send the child home by himself. You must make sure that the reaction has been taken care of.

More than 27,000 gallons of water are needed to irrigate an acre of land to the depth of one inch.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I read recently that a person who makes a habit of teasing is expressing, in a mildly camouflaged way, sadism.

My husband teases me unceasingly. He starts at breakfast imitating my early morning cough and hand gestures. He then repeats everything I say with the same intonation.

The first dozen times he did this I tried to be a good sport and laugh it off. After several thousands hours of frustration, I could no longer pretend it was amusing, and I told him that this mocking was making me angry.

He has made no effort to stop; in fact he now teases me when I attempt to have a serious conversation.

In fairness to him I must say, Dear Ann, that he has been a good husband, is extremely generous and expresses his love for me constantly.

Should I overlook his incessant teasing and count my blessings, or have I a right to feel that this is a form of mental cruelty? — Miserable

in Maryland

DEAR MARYLAND: Kidding on the square is almost always to mask hostility. It sounds to me as if your husband has a mean streak a yard wide and a mile long. Somebody taunted and teased him when he was growing up and now he is getting even.

The man will not change unless he gets counseling. Suggest it. If he refuses, resign yourself to a lifetime of mocking, unless, of course, you decide you are better off alone.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: As the mother of the bride, I stood by the usher who was to escort me to the designated pew. At that moment, the wedding director leaned over and whispered, "Lord in heaven, your ex-in-laws are sitting in your pew! You may walk down the aisle now."

When I reached my pew, I was faced with the awesome challenge of walking over those long, lanky legs so that I could sit by my ex-husband.

The usher said, "Pardon us, please," and my stony-faced in-laws drew up their knees.

I rotated my hips like a shimmy dancer in front of the entire congregation.

How lucky I was to have been lean enough to make it. Meanwhile I was boiling mad at the wedding director for not asking my ex-in-laws to vacate those seats.

Was I wrong?—Churning in Charlotte

DEAR CHURN: The wedding director should have made certain your place was not taken. But once the ceremony began, he or she was helpless. To have kicked them out of the pew would have been enormously embarrassing to everyone. I'll bet very few people noticed and those who did were undoubtedly impressed by your agility and slimmness.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I'm a teenage guy with heavy eyebrows. Some people tell me thick brows on a man look distinguished, but I don't like them. Plucking doesn't help much because they grow back more scraggly than ever.

Someone suggested electrolysis. I know it is a permanent method of hair removal and I want to make sure I don't jump into it without knowing all the facts.

Thanks very much for your informative column. I hope you find my question worthy of your attention.—Bushy Browns in Bethesda

DEAR BUSH BROWNS: You are wise not to jump into anything so permanent as electrolysis without getting all the facts.

I suggest that you ask your barber to trim your brows with a scissors. In time you should be able to do it yourself. Meanwhile lots of women love bushy brows on men. You'll be glad you took my advice.

WHAT'S NEW IN THE MEAT CASE

If you haven't looked closely at the meat case lately—look again. You're likely to find leaner, lower-calorie and more convenient products.

At the 1987 Beef Industry Conference held Aug. 10-12 at Texas A&M University, a number of products already on the market, in test-marketing or being developed were on display. Here are a few of those items.

If you want to cut calories or sodium in your diet, there are beef products that can help you accomplish that goal:

-Close-trimmed meat with no more than 1/4" fat on the outside

-Cuts with USDA labels indicating they are "light," "lite," or "leaner", which means they can contain 25% less fat or calories than what is typically found for that product. Beef labeled "lean" or "low fat" can not contain more than 10% fat.

-Fully-cooked beef luncheon meats and sausages with less fat

-Lower-fat and lower-sodium beef sausage

Changes in packaging have also made beef products more convenient to use:

-Stores are packaging carefully trimmed cuts of beef in portions for smaller families and light eaters.

-Individual cuts of meat are being vacuum packaged for retail sale at the grocers. This form of packaging extends the refrigerator shelf life of meat by seven days. The packages can also go directly into the freezer, without requiring further wrapping to prevent freezer burn.

If you're interested in reducing preparation and cooking time, a variety of beef convenience products are now on the market:

-Grocery stores are preparing beef for stir fry, shish kabobs, breaded beef cutlets, spiced oven-ready cuts of meat and other dishes to save consumers both preparation and clean-up time.

Pre-cooked beef ribs, roasts and microwavable "heat and eat" entrees are being offered in many chain supermarkets.

There are even some new kinds of products on the market from "restructured" beef:

-Beef bacon, strips and nuggets

-Intermediate priced roast beef, steaks and chicken fried steak.

If you think you don't have the time to prepare beef, or that it won't fit into your diet, some of these new products may change your mind.

Educational programs conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap or national origin.
