

TRIAL FOR MURDER. COURT OF VICE AND TERMINER—July 14. Before His Honor Judge Edwards, and Alderman Benson and Ingram.

The Court.—William H. Sparks, Police Officer sworn.—In April last I attended the Bowery Theatre. Mr. Jewell was at the theatre for several evenings after the affray—the night after the affray he was in the theatre talking to Mr. Will...

Cross examined.—I thought Jewell had been drinking and was excited with liquor. Direct.—From his whole manner, conversation and conduct I do not believe that he was entirely out of his head.

William T. Mills one of the jurors on the trial, sworn.—I saw Mr. Clapp, on the 5th July, in Court. I heard him inquire of a young man who was called Mike, which was Jewell. As I did not hear the young man answer, I said, "Gentlemen, that is Mr. Jewell, the prisoner who stands near the window," and who stood in a very conspicuous situation, with his side face to the wall.

James Leigh Wasson sworn.—I have known Jewell for some time. He is a left-handed man; drives with it, and is in fact a left-handed man. He has been in the city two years last March.

John Bloodgood, Police Justice.—Jewell was brought before me on the affray. He was perfectly calm. He appeared to be perfectly calm. He was there some time and I conversed with him. On the night of the affray I met Smith in the Bowery, which we have a watch house. I went into the house and found the watchman at the door, having Jewell in custody, about to take him off. As there were some angry words, I told them not to strike. I issued the warrant for the arrest of Jewell, and it was given to Smith. It was all peaceable in the house when I went in.

A. M. C. Smith, police officer recalled.—I executed the warrant for Jewell's arrest. When I entered the house to arrest Jewell, there was no one in the house.

Cross-examined.—I do not know that the warrant was in any way altered. I cannot swear for the exact words which were spoken. I think the warrant in the name as it was, and that the red seal was on it at the time I did not alter the warrant.

John Bloodgood recalled.—The whole of the hand-writing of the filling up of the warrant is that of Mr. Calender, the clerk. I have never seen the warrant since the day after the affray.

A. M. C. Smith recalled.—I have seen knives of the description which were introduced into the house on the day it bears date, and sealed as it is in the warrant. I have seen the seal, and it was that the complaint in this in many other cases was partly made before one magistrate and his name put in the body of the warrant, but before it was completed that magistrate signed a warrant with his name, and the name of the sitting magistrate inserted and signed to it.

Gilbert Hays recalled.—I did not see Granger at all in the room when Smith and he arrested Jewell. When Jewell was taken to the watch house, he could then find a verdict of manslaughter in the first degree, but he should press the finding of the verdict of murder, as justified by the evidence. He defined what murder was as an intentional killing, and that it was a crime that was conceived for months or only a moment before giving the fatal blow, if there existed in the mind an intent to kill, and death ensued or was intended.

Mr. Price here rose, and contended for the rule made at a former term, viz: that one of the District Attorneys should sign the indictment, and the District Attorney should sign the indictment for the prosecution, then the other counsel for the accused, and then the District Attorney to close the argument, if he chose to do so. The District Attorney then signed the indictment, and the District Attorney then signed the indictment for the prosecution, then the other counsel for the accused, and then the District Attorney to close the argument, if he chose to do so.

Col. Johnson's visit to New-York is a tall tale. Poor Dave Crockett was twice as much of a Lion.

The President's Land Circular.—We wholly misapprehended the character of this Circular, and are compelled to retract the favorable opinion expressed the other day. In this, as in Jacksonian generally, one thing is professed, while another is intended.

The Buffalo Daily Star utterly misconceives our sentiments in regard to the appointment of Mr. VAN RENSSLAER. We are willing that Mr. Van Buren should make all his appointments from our ranks.

The Legislature of Michigan met at Detroit on the 11th inst. G. V. Maxon, in his message, expresses great indignation at the proceedings of Congress in relation to the boundary question, but intimates that it will be expedient to submit. He however submits the question to the People of Michigan, and promises to obey their instructions.

Key State went against Van Buren for Vice-President and will go against him for President.

The States of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and Vermont, are sure to vote for HARRISON and GRAHAM. There is certainly a very handsome capital for a party to commence business upon.

Two singing masters, one by the name of Hutchinson, (the name of the other we do not recollect) this morning entered a complaint against a person by the name of Hall, for assault and battery. It appeared that these two singing gentlemen had been on Sunday at a social gathering at the residence of a friend of Hutchinson's, and that they had been engaged in a quarrel.

The actual number of warriors in the Creek nation at the very latest estimate is 5000; of this number, 2000 are supposed to be free, 2500, prisoners at Fort Mitchell, 3000 in Tuskegee and give up their arms 100, escaped to Florida 300, making in all that can be accounted for 2,500. The balance of 1,800, of course, are still in the war, and are divided into small parties, and as they have had abundant time and opportunity to have reported themselves at friendly camps and have not done so, the inference to be drawn is that they are hostile.

The name of the excellent ship carpenter who built the Tow-Boat TOMPKINS, is WALDO CORRETT. The name was misprinted on Saturday.

Storm had been on the hills. The day had worn. As I sleep upon the hours had crept: And the gentle dawn of morning came at the morn I do not remember hours slept.

From Mr. Dunlop's new work, "Thirty Years Old, or the Water Drinker." Self-Flattery.—We find a most extraordinary gratification in the indulgence of appetite, or in obeying the dictates of our passions, and our wills, and forget the lessons of reason or revelation.

The Sisters—A Contrast.—Sophia had stipulated that she should visit her parents and sister. Her mother was dead. Her father refused to see her.

Interference, the Peril of Murder.—The murders (including suicides and murder by duelling) that are the fruits of intemperance, constitute the greater portion of those who stain the records of the judicial, or private history of our country.
