children grieve as deeply as adults?

Jean Coppedge
 rang early on a cool October morning, 1958. "Your sister it's for her," Mother told my little brother. I was on the front porch and heard her tell him. "I responded, wondering who would be calling me. I didn't let us talk to friends on the phone, so I knew it must be important."

"This is Daddy. Mama's dead," came the sharp, blunt words from the end of the line. Mama was his mother, my grandmother. "I felt the air suck right out of my chest and I choked back the tears as his voice cracked."

"I remember much about the rest of the conversation, other than it was about Daddy. Daddy said that my brother was too little to go. My father divorced about three years earlier and Mother, my 4-year-old brother and I had moved 45 miles away. I laid the phone down and I thought that Grandmother had died. She said I could go to the such shock that I couldn't even cry. Grandmother was dead. "What do you think? A dark, cold fog slowly fell over me. I walked out the back yard, slowly closing the screen door so no one would know I was gone. I sat down on the ground behind the old woodshed. It had passed as memories filled my mind. The front of my chest was wet with tears."

"The next day, I could hardly concentrate on anything. I felt like I was drugged. Grandmother and I were extremely close. She had been with me for a long time. On the weekends when my brother and I went to Daddy, I spent the nights with her because she was scared. I was there but slept in the back of the house. He would not be able to hear her if she had called out to him. She was afraid he would die one morning."

"The summer when my brother and I would spend June and July with Daddy, I spent the days with him and the nights with her. My brother because he got to sleep with Daddy. "The morning I bathed Grandmother, put makeup on her face and fixed her hair. She was a 9-year-old can. It always made her feel so much better. She looked pretty."

"Before we went to sleep, she would tell me ghost stories or Daddy's childhood. We would cuddle in the dark. The fragrance of her Cold Cream she wore is still with me today. I wear it to help me remember her and to feel close to her. She was a kind, loving woman every day to the fullest, knowing there may be no tomorrow."

"Daddy and Mother got me the morning of the funeral. As we entered the casket, my heart just broke. I was grieving so much at each breath I took, felt like the last. My chest was tight, my heart was sweating and my heart was pounding."

"I hid behind the rest of the family, awaiting our turn at the casket, my heart was breaking. I don't even know the words to describe the ache in my chest. It felt like the loss of my beloved Grandmother or watching Daddy die. I hurt so deeply."

"When I wanted to simply fade away and not be in the room, I began to notice that close family members were ignoring Daddy and me. Daddy would speak to Grandmother and everyone knew it. But no one even spoke to either of us or offer a kind word of sympathy."

"Daddy was 'simple minded' as people called it in those days, due to the conditions he suffered at birth. A lack of oxygen had caused him to be slower than most people. He had also fallen as a 2-year-old child and broken his hip. Since his family was too poor to take him to the doctor, he died in the broken position, thus he had suffered pain and a disability all his life."

"Grandmother had worried and always looked after him. She called him a 'her boy' even when he was a grown man. They saw each other every day. Our house sat just a few hundred yards across the pasture from Grandmother and Granddaddy's house."

"I stood at the casket, Daddy was having such a hard time, sobbing and using his big handkerchief to wipe his face, then blow his nose. He had put a man-sized handkerchief in my little black patent leather purse. By the time the service started, it was drenching wet, but I had it to use. No one offered us any of the tissues from the casket. They were passing around the room."

"The family was seated in the privacy room just off the chapel. The funeral personnel pulled the thin white curtain to offer even more privacy. Daddy's oldest sister told us to go sit in the back corner of the straight-back chairs. All the rest of the family sat in the front pews where they talked loudly and cut up until the service was over. During the service, all I could think about was Grandmother up there in her pink Sunday dress. There would be no more sleepovers, no more Grandmother's hair and no more need to mop her bedroom. The furniture was being moved every Saturday night. She always wanted her bedroom to look nice in case company came to see her on Sunday, which they almost always did.

"I still couldn't understand why no one was talking to Daddy and me, or why they weren't hugging us like they were everyone else. Didn't they understand what I had lost? Didn't they care?"

"Hurt, pain and helplessness soon turned to anger. "Do adults think children don't grieve? Do they think we don't understand what is going on? Are they too wrapped up in their own grief to notice a helpless child in pain or a grieving man who has just lost his mother, and needs someone to just hold him?"

"Thoughts continued to filter through my mind as we drove to the cemetery. Daddy drove with his left hand on the steering wheel, cuddled me under his right arm and held me tight."

"Once the final words were said at the gravesite, still no one spoke to us. It was as if Daddy and I were ghosts, invisible to everyone. How I wished we could talk to Grandmother. She would hold us and know just what to say. She would tell us how much she loved us and that everything would be all right."

"On the way home to Daddy's house, he and I didn't say a word. I didn't know what to do or say, so I just stared out the window. When we pulled in the driveway, Daddy slowly got out of the car and walked behind the house and just waited for the longest time. I went in the house and lay across the bed in the back room, where I could hear him through the open windows. Never had I felt so extremely alone. There was nothing I could do to fill the empty black hole that now ached so much, deep in his heart."

I am now 69 years old. Daddy died in 1985. The siblings and family members have slowly faded away, and most who attended Grandmother's funeral are gone.

To this day, I still feel the pain of that day. Did the family members think that since Daddy was child-like in his mental functions could not feel the pain, unhappiness and loss of his mother?

Everyone in the small community where he/we lived always loved Daddy so much. Thus I couldn't understand why close family members would turn on him at a time like this. Was it that they were jealous of Grandmother's special love for her boy -- and me? I suppose I will never know.

Since this story is written from the perspective of a child, this is my point. Children are very fragile when it comes to death. They need someone to cuddle them, hold their hand, and explain about death. They need compassion and someone who will answer their questions.

Children need to feel the warmth and closeness of family members and to be included in the conversations. It might help, depending on their age, to be included in things like picking out flowers or serving food when the family gets together for a meal.

Most adults can rationalize death. But for a child, all they can understand is that they will never see the person they love so much, ever again.

Remember, the death, funeral, etc. of someone in their life, is making images that will be with that child for the rest of his life, embedded deeply within his memories. The loss can forever scar a child's life, or become a precious memory. It depends on the compassion and love shown during this occasion in his life.
