FOO, I don't believe that Cap'n Jenkins ever took stock in second sight, the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter, or none of them fool fads. Still, bein' a man of destiny, like Caesar and Napolyun, he naturally used to lay great stress by his dreams, elievin' that a guardian spirit whispered to him in his sleep.

When the cap'n wuz a-ranching down

The Chicago Tailoring when the cap'n wuz a ranching down to and s Yuma, an' I wuz a sorter foreman for him, there wuz a rush into the Pinal kentry owin' to a pocket find wich panned out 'bout $30,000.

This wuz th' only strike ever made in them diggin's, but th' excitement kept up for 'bout three months, during wich time Cap'n Jenkins made big money buyin' goods, wares an' merchandise from them miners. as wuz a-comin' out, and selling the same to them as wuz a-goin' in. He also kep' elec' stock of wines an' likkers in a 'dobe an' went durin' th' excitement wuz one, John McDougall, nicknamed "Baron" Meougall. He owned silver mines in Arizona

n' big cattle ranges. He always traveled with a bodyguard of hree renegade Cheyennes, wich he had ticed away from their reservation years

I liked McDougall for his vim an' energy, n spite of his evil repertation. He used ften to come to the ranch, an' took a great ancy for Mrs. Jenkins who wuz a stoppin wuz plain to see that he'd been sometime an' somewhere, a man of parts an' eddica-tion. His friends feared him an' his enemics hated him like men hate a rattle-

Wa'al, to come back to the cap'n an' his dreams. He wakes up one mornin' an' says

'Jane, I had a queer dream last night. I drempt that there wuz a man a-standin' under that pepper tree yonder a-tannin' a buckskin. An' he said to 'nother man that wuz a-lookin' on: 'Bill, go up to th' house an' ask Mrs. Jenkins for the tea leaves out her teapot. I want to set the tan on this de so we kin cut some gloves out of it.' I saw it ail," says the cap'n, "as plain as

An' Mrs. Jenkins says to him: "Cap'n here's somethin' a-goin' to happen."

After a little the dream wuz forgot. But, hout a week later, as we wuz all a-settin' in the shade takin' our noonin', a feller come runnin' into camp, all dirt an' sweat, an' half crazy, an' said that McDougal wuz after him an' wuz a-goin' to murder him. Quarrel over a minin' deal. This feller McDougall had frund a mine, an' McDougall. Donald had found a mine, an' McDougall, Donald had found a mine, an McDougail, follerin' Lis usuel custom, had jumped the claim. After a little show of fight McDonald Lad guv it up, but McDougail wuz a-goin' to kill him for not lettin' go quicker.

I can't say that I admired McDonald's personal 'pearance. It seemed to me like 'twuz a Scotch fight, anyway, an' I wuz for a lettin' it alone. But the cap'n begun t' arrange his plan of canonaica right away.

tims hide, an' we'll cut some gloves out

Jest then Mrs. Jenkins happened to come Jest then Mrs. Jenkins happened to come to the door an' heered the remark. Sho pinted her finger at her husband an' said: "Your dream." And he pinted his finger at his wife, at the same instant, an' said: "My dream." Then the cap'n walked up to MeDonald an' he'd out his hand.

"McDonald," he said, "your fate is linked with mine. You an' I air spiritool affinities. I dreamt "bout you before I ever sot eyes on you. You're safe here now, McDonald. I'il fight for you to the last drop in my veins."

"Twa'n't many hours after this episodo

'Twa'n't many hours after this episode

'Twa'n't many hours after this episode when a scout come a-runnin' in with th' information that McDougal wuz a-comin' with his Injuns. The cap'n ordered us all to our stations an' told Mrs. Jenkins that she'd better go into th' house.

I wuz inside the tent with a half dozen others, all armed, when McDougall an' his Injuns come a-whoopin an' a-gallopin' into camp an' pulled up right abreast of us. In half a second we had them all covered.

"What's the matter, McDougall?" sung out the cap'n. "What the devil de you ride into my ranch for in this warlike manner? You act like you wuz on a reid."

"I understand," said McDougall, "that you're a-harborin' one McDonald with which I have a feud."

"He's here," replied the cap'n. "But I

"He's here," replied the cap'n. "But I ain't a harborin' nobody—only I'm a goin' to see jestice done. An' you an' your cowardly red whelps ain't a goin' to murder no white man on my premises. But you've got to fight fair. Four agin one ain't a square Shall I kill him?" said one of th' Injuns to McDougall, in a dilec' that he thought we didn't understand. "Shall I kill him now?" I had a bead on McDougall. If the cap'u had raised his hand an' snapped his finger I'd have sent McDougall t' happier huntin' grounds. An' the boys beside me had them Injuns all covered.

But jest when the seconds seemed like hours, an' my cye had begun t' ache asquintin' 'long that rifle bar'l, the quick wit of woman broke the strain, an' Mrs. Jenk-ins come out of th' house and walked ins come out of th' house and walked straight up to McDougall, never givin' her husband a glance, an' held out her hand.

"Wy, baron," she said, "it's a long time sense you wuz here. Won't you git down an' egg norg or a little toddy?"

McDougall shed his sombrero an' bowed as polite as a dancin' master. He raid somethin' to them Injuns that made them ride away, then handed his gun to Mrs. Jenkins an' sprung to the ground, as light on his feet as a cat.

Us hoys sneaked out of the tent, an' McDougall never knew how near he stood that day to th' undiscevered kentry. Me-Donald kep' the tent 'twixt him an' Me-Dougall, an' had skipped into the brush. We never see him again, nor the luskskim, nor the cap'n's double-bar'l'd shotgun. "Cap'n Jenkins," said McDougall, cheerfully, smacking his lips, after the toddy had circulated a few times, "this is mighty fine whisky of yourn. What d'ask for it?"
