SISTER'S TRICK

But It All Came Out Right,

How a sister played a trick that brought rosy health to a coffee fiend is an interesting tale:

"I was a coffee fiend-a trembling. nervous, physical wreck, yet clinging to the poison that stole away my strength. I mocked at Postum and would have none of it.

"One day my sister substituted a cup of Postum piping hot for my morning cup of coffee but did not tell me what it was. I noticed the richness of it and remarked that the coffee tasted ane but my sister did not tell me I was drinking Postum for fear I might not take any more.

"She kept the secret and kept giv ing me Postum instead of coffee until I grew stronger, more tireless, got a better color in my sallow cheeks and a clearness to my eyes, then she told me of the health-giving, nervestrengthening life-saver she had given me in place of my morning coffee. From that time I became a disciple of Postum and no words can do justice in telling the good this cereal drink did me. I will not try to tell it, for only after having used it can one be convinced of its merits."

Ten days' trial shows Postum's pow er to rebuild what coffee has stroyed. "There's a Reason."

SYNOPSIS.

Gerard Chambers, son of a wealthy importer and a student at an eastern college, was awarded a membership in the Cinster of the Gemini, a secret organization, founded by Rodery Graves. The society was exclusive, only seven being admitted. The members were known as Persons. A meeting was held and each member was awarded the "oall of destiny." Chambers was told to pass a period as a sallor and not set foot in North America for a year. Then he was to be assigned to another year's exit. He must make his own living unassisted, and keep everything a scoret. Jerry, as supercargo on an occan freighter, bound for Urania, South America, loaded with guns for enemies of that government, was captured and thrown into a dungeon. Marina Bostos, adopted daughter of Gen. Bostos, ministered to his wounds. Each made a strong impression on the other. Jerry was sentenced to die, Capt. Pilaro freed Chambers. All three united with Gen. Barado's rebells. Chambers being made a captain. Capt. Pilaro died of fever. Marina scompanied his body to burial. In a flerce battle Barando defeated Bostos. Jerry frustrated an attempt to assassinate Gen. Barado. Marina body to burial. In a flerce battle Barando defeated Bostos. Jerry frustrated an attempt to assassinate Gen. Barado. APTER XXXIII .- Continued. On March 14, when there was not a spark of hope in Jerry's breast that he would get to Los Angeles in time for his instructions, a member of the nittee on investigating public institutions, a fussy old man who was a leader in a "reform" movement, paid unannounced visit to the station and was appalled at the dirty, un-sanitary conditions of the place. He ordered an immediate cleaning up, and threatened to report the officer in charge to the police trial board for neglect of duty. The next morning the three prisoners were at work scrubbing the stone floor of the cor-Old Finnerty had taken something of a fancy to Jerry, and gave him the least disagreeable work to do. Jerry performed so well, and seemed to show such personal interest in the guard's welfare, that the old man was greatly pleased. That night Finnerty actually thanked him, after he had given him a fine apple and a glassful of real The ranking officer also was pleased with Jerry's work.

"I'm glad you're satisfied," said Jerry to the ranking officer, "and if you want to do something for me you can make me feel like a new man. Cut these whiskers off and give me a shave. They make me feel like a pat-ent-medicine man."

The officer complied with the re uest, and when Jerry lay down that night he felt almost as young as he

The following morning he was put to work clearing up the rubbish and refuse in the little courtway back of he station. Finnerty piled up boxes while Jarry shoveled the refuse into while Jerry shovaied the refuse into heaps near the gate of the picket-topped high board fence. The guard had implicit faith in him, and frequently went into the station, leaving him alone in the courtyard. While Jerry was shoveling out the contents of a big dry goods box he came across an old slouch hat. The instant his eyes fell on it the thought of escape flashed across his mind. Finnerty's back was turned at the moment, and before he faced about Jerry had thrown the bat over the fence into the alley.

first impulse was to steal up be the guard and test him into in bility, but his liking for the old more than anything, stayed the Neat hand. He respected Finnerty's die hair, but the thought of what ght fall to the guard's lot if he ef-led his escape was quickly brushed he reduced his gait to a brisk walk. He crossed to the next corner, where, to a surprise that almost took his legs from under him, he ran almost into the policeman who had arrested him. The relief that came with his sigh when the officer passed by without even looking into his face was

Jerry hid himself in a lumber yard until the street-lights began to twinkle. His excitement was so great that he forgot all about his hunger until, about 11 o'clock, he was riding on the trucks of a car near the middle of a south-bound passenger train.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Just as the Clock Strikes Two. About four o'clock in the morning Jerry had further occasion to curse a "Gemini's luck." A "hot box" at his end of the coach brought the train to a stop near the "flag" station of Gonzales. Refore the engine had come to a standstill the ffremen was at the neck before he could get to his feet. "Hey, Charley!" shouted the coal-heaver, and a moment later a big brakeman came up. "Charley" swung Jerry around until his face was directly east and then let fly a big boot with great accuracy.

"Say, pal," he pleaded, "take me on to Los Angeles, won't you? I'll fix things with you one of these days. If you were in my fix and had a mighty sick mother-

"Back up!" laughed the trainman, stooping for a rock. Jerry was not half a shoond too quick in dodging that

"On the square, old man, I've got to get to Los-"I'll sick mother you!" but there was no other rock handy. The train pulled out a few minutes later, leaving Jerry standing against the fence, a picture of despair. He watched the cars swing around a curve and disappear; then he started to limp down the track.

He kept on down the track until he enough to permit of another train's passing. It was five o'clock in the afternoon before a south-bound freight drew up at the siding. He climbed into an empty box car, at one end of which he sank to the floor, utterly worn out. He stretched himself at full length and soon was dreaming of the beautiful land of pot-pie, coffee and sound fruit.

When he opened his eyes it was almost pitch dark and the car was standing still. He got up, but almost sank down again when he found the doors closed. He tried to push them open, but they were locked. Through a crack he saw electric lights and one or two rather pretentious buildings. and he wondered where he could be.

"What time is it? What place is this? How long have I been asleep? Who locked these doors?" These and many other questions flushed through his mind. He was ravenously hungry and so thirsty that his throat was parched. He brought all of his little strength to play, but failed to open the doors. He decided that he could not possibly get out of the car until the doors were unlocked, and he sat down at one of the larger cracks and looked out into the darkness. His eyes had not been on the crack long before a wagon loaded with trunks named under an electric light. Painted on its side was, "Los Angeles Transfer Company."

"Good heavens!" he exclaimed, his blood running cold. "I'm in Los Angeles! How long have I been here? Maybe I have been asleep for days! Maybe I am too late-" The dread of this thought almost drove him in-"I must get out of here right sane. away!" he muttered, desperately, "and will get out if I have to set fire to the car!" He felt in every pocket, but could find nothing that resembled a match. There was a toothpick, but he throw it to the floor with:

"That's right-you rub it in, too! I've had a lot of use for you!"

When, very early in the morning the doors were unlocked and pushed open, Jerry Chambers was almost a nervous wreck. He had champed and fretted, cold chills succeeding hot flashes, for hours—days it seemed to him. He was so eager to get out of the car that he did not wait until the man who unlocked the doors had gone, and he afterwards thanked his lucky stars that the man was too old to give almost popping from their sockets, he | given much thought to what the next reached a siding, where he decided to ran up to a man and asked what day envelope would contain, and he fell to t was.

> "This is Thursday, the 19th," answered the man.

"The 19th!" exclaimed Jerry, bringing his hands together in ecstasy. Thank heaven, I've made it this far, anyway!" Before the man could recover from his surprise Jerry was running across the tracks. "I've hours, hours to spare!" he muttered to himself, his face reflecting the great joy that raged within him. It was not for many minutes that he was brought back to the realization that he was almost starved. He reached a narrow street, and in the yard of the first house he came to he saw an elderly man splitting wood. He went up to him and agreed to finish the job for his breakfast. An hour later he left the place the possessor of three cupfuls of coffee, two slices of ham, two eggs, several pieces of buttered bread and two or three pipefuls of tobacco. He felt 100 per cent, better, mentally and physically, notwithstanding that his arms were very sore from wielding the ax. While he trudged across common he gave himself a thorough inspection.

"This will never, never, never do, he said to himself. "If they see this horrible example downtown there'll be but one finish for little Jerry."

His trousers were rent in a dozen places and his coat was stiff with mud The old slouch hat was at least three sizes too small for him, and every time he took a step the sole of his foot beat the little remaining suggestion of the sole of his shoe to the ground. At six houses he managed to beg and work for a pair of trousers, a coat a clean flannel shirt, a fairly sound pair of shoes, much too large for him, and a soft hat that might have been presentable back in the 80s. The coat was a bright checked affair and the color of the tight-fitting trousers was a faded brown.

He scrubbed the floor of a colored man's barber shop for a bath and a shave (he shaved himself as per the proprietor's ultimatum), and when he started towards the central business portion he felt considerably "dressed

It was a little after 11 o'clock when Jerry got his first view of the Hotel Florida, at office of which he was to receive his further instructions

"But I've gone this far," he mentally commented, "and made good, and I'll shove through the last three months if I have to swim across the Pacific or walk to Jericho. They can't hand it to me any harder than they have, and I'm used to about everything in the tough-luck line. The San Dimas can wait and so can she-if she has not waited too long sirendy." Here he be came gloomy over the thought that Marina might be dead, or that she had ceased to love him, or that she had fallen in love with another.

The broad, flower-banked plazza of the hotel was swarming with men and women and children all dressed as is becoming such a festive occasion. Jerry was in tremendously marked contrast with his checked coat and brown trousers, and when he got near enough to be seen he was easily one of the "sights."

Girls giggled as they looked at him. men eyed him suspiciously, and two tots set up a scream and ran from him when he gave them a "good morning." He deemed it advisable to become less conspicuous, and determined to wast until a few minutes of the appointed hour before going to the hotel office. He had retraced his steps a short distauce when he saw a man and a wom an, the former swinging a cane and the latter in fluffy white from tip to She was a picture of loveliness and Jerry could not take his eyes off of her. When they had approached to within 20 feet of him his chin dropped and he almost reeled. It was Marsylla Bayless! It was too late to turn. and, bringing his teeth together, he kept on, increasing his gait. He did not intend that she should get a good view of his face, but for some un accountable reason he looked her squarely in the eyes. Her eyes were directly on him, and she came to a sudden stop and uttered a little exclamation of surprise. Then, when he was but five feet away, she curled her lips, tossed back her head and looked straight ahead.

"Good heavens!" flashed through Jerry's brain; "she recognized me! She was startled at seeing me, but she wouldn't speak! She turned up. her nose, and-" Here he broke into a should be blamed, for I'm a nice looking thing to be spoken to. Out here for the festival with her father and mother, eh? She fulled her pony close to him and whispered:

"Jerry Chambers! Go down to the next street. I must see you!"

Jerry could not say anything before she was driving away. He thought for a moment, his first impulse being to keep straight on, but he finally decided to see her.

"She didn't want to speak to me where there were people around," he said to himself, "but wants to have a word away from their sight. I'll bet she is doing a lot of worrying right as we can," explained the hotel mannow for fear that she will be seen talking to me."

Five minutes later, in the shade of a large tree on the next street, he was standing before her.

"Jerry, Jerry, where have you been?" she asked rapidly, looking up and down the avenue. "The whole country thinks you are dead. Tell me, tell

Your mother and your father are at a quiet hotel on the other side of the city," she broke in, plainly show ing her desire to be rid of him. "Your mother has been ill for months, and she is in mourning for you. You must see her this very day, Jerry, and-The sight of another trap approaching caused her to stop, and with a hurried "good by" she drove away.

Jerry scarcely knew what to do, so hot was his brain, so great his surprise to learn that his father and mother were in Los Angeles. He had about ten minutes in which to reach the hotel office, and he knew that he would be unable to look up his parents before two o'clock. He decided, however, that, no matter what the instructions were, he would go to them as soon as possible after he received the envelope.

He reached the hotel steps at three ning a gauntlet of curlous eyes, whish pered remarks, giggles and laughs, and advanced boldly towards the door, His hand was on the knob of the screen when the hand of a big, uniformed man came down hard on his shoulder. "Here, you can't go in there," sald

The clock over the office counter showed about a minute before two. Jerry was desperate. His face was colorless and his hands moved restlessly The sound of the whistle brought a fat, bald-headed man to the door on a run.

"Is there an envelope here for Rod ney Graves?" Jerry cried, as the door man started to drag him down the steps.

"Graves-Graves, oh, yes!" quickly answered the man. 3lt's at the desk! "Quick, quick, for God's sake quick!" frantically implored Jerry.

The doorman was half dazed, reaxing his hold, and Jerry dashed into the office, barely missing a collision with a fat woman. The bald-headed man had reached around the lettercase and grabbed up a long blue en velope, which, just as the clock struck two, he handed to the fast-breathing Jerry in the middle of the crowded room.

CHAPTER XXXV. Reunion.

The hand that came down on Jerry Chambers' shoulder a second later was the friendliest he had felt in six long months. It was the hand of Phineas Hwyle, manager of the hotel and a Gemini Person of The College class of 8f

"I'm awfully sorry you were so bad ly treated by the man at the door, apologized Hwyte.

Of don't let a little thing like that worry you," laughed the bappy, lighthearted Jerry, apparefully oblivious to broad grin. "I don't suppose she the many curious eyes that were focused on him "It just such a thing hadn't happened I should have been surprised and perhaps a little di appointed. he was a complete transformation. His snug-fitting, stylish gray suit, an immaculate negligee shirt, a spotless straw hat, a pair of eight-dollar tan shoes and a bamboo walking stick reminded him of the Jerry Chambers of other days-the Jerry Chambers whom Marsylla Bayless would not insist upon going up a side street to see. Hwyte took Jerry to one of the parfor-floor rooms, which he turned over to him "with the compliments of The Gemini." When Jerry was alone, lying on the bed after another bath, he wondered and became auspictous. "What does all this kind treatment mean, anyway?" he mused. "I suppose it's meant to make what's coming to me all the harder. What in thunder can be doing at midnight? That's rubbing it in good and hard!" He had intended losing no time in looking up his parents, but he was so tired and worn out that he fell asleep. A rapping on his door about five o'clock aroused him.

"Come in," he said, sitting upright and rubbing his eyes. The door opened and n rushed Wallace Chambers, Mike O'Connor and Gen. Fernandez Bostos. Before Jerry could be made to believe his eyes he was being almost smothered with hugs. Wallace Chambers, the first to reach him, could not speak, but the fast-flowing tears spoke his happiness. throps of joy were springing from the eyes of Mike O'Connor, and Gen. Bostos was unable to-speak for some-time. "Well!" o Jerry finally managed, to exclaim. "Where-what-"

"Safe at last!" his father wept, and he squeezed him so hard that he grunted. "My boy, my Jerry, back again-back 'to father' and mother and-" Here his eyes began to sparkle, and he brought himself to his full height. Tapping his chest proudly, he went on in the business-like tone of the Wallace Chambers of old: "I knew they couldn't kill him! I know the 'Chambers colors' too well! It akes more than a hurricane to lower them, I can tell you, gentlemen." CTO BE CONTINUED.)

To Encourage Better Methods

The boards of trade and commercial bodies throughout the Southwestern states are manifesting this year a greater interest in agricultural affairs than they have done in any previous year. Business men and farmers are being brought closer together. In Arkansas and Texas scores of boy's corn clube have been form-We are sorry to report Robert ed; good roads clubs are being organized in many communities and in the towns and county seats monthly sales and display days are becoming popular features.

The board of trade of Paris, Texas, is the latest to enter the field with substantial prizes for agricultural products. That body offers $750 in cash to cotton growers in Lamar county for cotton grown in 1909. The prizes are divided as follows:

For black waxy land, ten acres, Iwo hundred dollars for best and largest yield; $100 for second best; $50 for third best; $25 for fourth best.

Gray and sandy land, ten acres; Two hundred dollars for best and largest yield; $100 for second best; $50 for third best; $25 for fourth best-

The better understanding which must inevitably result from the closer association of business men and farmers can scarcely fail to bring good results for all concerned. The prejudice which haexisted in rural districts against the dwellers in towns will be overcome by better acquaintance, and cities and towns will awaken to the fact that the stimulation of local enthusiasm in agricu tural affairs, leading directly to the adoption of better cultural methods, is as great a factor in the real progress of the Southwest as the location of new manufacture ing enterprises.-Farm a n d
