A LOVER'S QUARREL

In one of Robert Frost's quarrel with the world." This the famous grapevine.) epitaph is most appropriate, for we know Frost as a man who was free to question and even to critize the world and its ideas, but always with un_ derstanding and with love for so fully.

us can profit. I believe we too ought to have a lover's quarrel with the world. Now The parties involved are indeed lovers. Every marriage, every romance, every friendship of any lasting nature involves a lover's quarrel at one time or anther. Yet the quarrel never becomes more important than the love, nor does such a quarrel ever pose a serious threat to the relat-
