VACATION TIME?

Homer Henderson

So you want to take a vacation? But you're worried about those weeds. You think the hand might quit while you're gone. The tractor might break down. It might rain for a couple of days right atter you leave. After all, the pumps won't start themselves, and pipe surely won't crawl in place by itself. The time isn't right yet. May be next week or the next will be easier. Maybe. You're worried because things just don't take care of themselves. Who will feed the animals? Who will mind the shop? the flowers and the bills and the Sunday (August 6) at 10:00 a m. You just can't get away? Well, 10:50 a.m. for the worship. cheer up! Get your fishing poles and your camping gear and your kids too if you have time . ad leave! Because yiu're not indispensable. Action and the state of the second of the second

Certainly the matter of timing is important. There are good times and bad times to get away. Of course, the place won't run itself indefinitely without you. But chances are that you won't have to work a bit harder the week you get home than if you had never left at all. Even if the lawn is a foot high, one good mowing will do as much good as the six treatments you missed. A vacation is more than just a few weeks escape from routine. It can be a time of personal renewal which makes the rest of the year more meaningful. During a vacation, a family can rediscover each other without coping with the pressures of day to day obligations and responsibilities. Life is largely a matter of adjusting to the schedules and remands of a particular vocation. A farmer's life is dictated by the seasons and the weather. A house wife finds her life oriented around mealtimes and necessary household chores. A businessman knows the rigor of nine to five. So it is not surprising that the really essential matters of family life together of ten become relegated to spare moments of which there are a precious few. There is little time for the family to be together as a family without any interfering demand minority is not the answer. on time.

A vacation is or should be different from a family trip to the movie or the swimming pool. The object of a vacation ought to be togethermess, not a good movie or a retresh ing swim. If husband and wife go alone, there is time to rene w acquaintance with each other, to recover some of the thrill of courtship when each was the sole object of the other's affection. If the family goes together, then there is time for parents and children to discover ane another as persons rather than just as functioning units in a well-oiled family. How many times have I heard the too-late realizations that run sometding like this: "We just grew old before we had time to be young. We missed so many opportunities to do things together. The kids are grown now, and just when we have time to pay attention to them at's already too late. Well, we kept saving and planning for some exciting times someday; I guess that day just never came." No, it we farm.
