ANOTHER WEEK FOR CLEAN-UP

Extra Time Needed to Finish; People Are Urged to Help

On account of the fact that this week has not allowed sufficient time for the annual Spring clean-up in Slaton to be properly completed, city officials have announced an extension of clean-up campaign through next week, ending Saturday, April 12.

All Slaton people are urged to co-operate in piling rubbish of all kinds at the rear of their back lots, just inside their back property line, so that the haulers may reach it easily. The city is not furnishing wagons or trucks for doing the hauling, hence each family is expected to have the hauling done when the rubbish has been piled up for disposal. Three or four different haulers are doing this work, and are asking only a nominal sum of each family for this service. City officials said this plan will prove more effective in getting rubbish re-moved than the plan of having city haulers to do the work, they believed.

A committee of six people have been appointed to have charge of the cam-paign. In the west part of town, E. V. Woolever, C. A. Bruner and Mrs. L. C. Odem are the committee, and in the east section, Mrs. F. B. Tudor, Tom J. Abel and L. A. Wilson are on the committee.

Nearly 100 people attended the banquet Monday night for Santa Fe employees and Slaton business men, held at the Slaton Clubhouse. The event was sponsored by the Slaton Chamber of Commerce and the Santa Fe men.

J. H. Brewer was toastmaster, and the banquet dinner was served by women of the First Presbyterian church. The tables were decorated with mini-ature trains, autos and a small repli-ca of the city hall.

The meeting opened with the sing-ing of "America," led by L. A. Wil-son, with A. J. Payne at the piano. Immediately after the dinner, Royce Pember gave two piano solos, the audience demanding an encore after he had finished his first number.

A brief introductory statement was made by L. A. Wilson, after which Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Clark entertained with special instrumental music. They played their steel guitars.

An address was then given by W. H. Smith on the subject, "What Does the Santa Fe Mean to Slaton?" He men-tioned the fact that Slaton was given its existence by the Santa Fe Rail-way company, and said the railway payroll here has been responsible for a large part of Slaton's growth and development. Mr. Smith declared the Santa Fe has several millions of dol-lars invested in Slaton property, and that a large sum is paid each year into school and city treasuries here by the Santa Fe. He said there are now 400 Santa Fe employees in Slaton, despite the fact that this is the quietest sea-son of the year in transportation cir-cles.

Coke Oliver and Mr. and Mrs. Clark furnished two instrumental trios, playing their guitars.

"How Can I Boost My Town?" was the subject of an address by T. E. Roderick. The speakers did not go into the commercial angles of the sub-ject, but said the spirit of the people in supporting churches, schools, fam-ily life and all kinds of civic affairs would determine the amount of pro-gress a town or city would make.

The Clark and Oliver trio then gave additional special numbers of music, including vocal and instrumental fea-tures, which were strongly applauded.

A roundtable discussion was then announced, with all those present be-ing invited to take part. Among those participating in the discussions were: L. T. Green, B. E. Clark, T. A. Wor-ley, Jr., J. W. Hood, J. E. Rucker, C. W. Taylor, H. H. Edmondson, A. J. Payne, and others, of Slaton; and Mr. Mean, of Amarillo.

Mr. Oliver entertained with a guitar solo during the discussions. He also furnished piano music during the early part of the program while the banquet dinner was being served.

The meeting adjourned as the crowd sang "Farewell to Thee," accompan-ied by the Clark and Oliver trio's strumming on their instruments.

Those attending the banquet said it was even better than the one held a year ago, and expressed themselves as being anxious to make it an annual affair hereafter, this one being the second annual banquet of the Santa Fe men and business men here.

THE PRESIDENT ON THE JOB

by FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

©Publishers Autocaster Service

Washington, D. C., April 4th—I came to Washington to see President Hoover. He had just completed his first year in that office. I wanted to ask him personally what he believed he had accomplished in that year, what he hopes or expects to accomplish in his remaining years at the head of the Government.

The President was frankness itself. In the course of a conversation which stretched on toward two hours he answered my every question with such fullness and such precision of detail that one of my unasked questions answered itself.

That question was: "Does President Hoover realize what he is up against?"

And the answer is: "He does." Since the United States became a nation we have had just two business men in the President's chair. One of them was George Washington. The other is Herbert Hoover.

George Washington had won financial independence in business before he became President. Herbert Hoover started on his own with nothing and from a large proportional income was independently wealthy at forty. He got his independence out of the ground, as George Washington did; Washington as a farmer and dealer in land, Hoover as a miner.

And, like George Washington again Herbert Hoover is an engineer.

In our time it is a new experience to have at the head of the Nation a man trained in the operation of great enterprises, accustomed to the management of men and money on a large scale.

One does not have to agree with Mr. Hoover's point of view nor endorse the policies of his party, to recognize his ability or even to concede his greatness in the sphere is that of the administrative engineer.

It was apparent that such a man must have a different approach to the problems of administration than that of the politicians who have previously filled the Presidential office. Managing the affairs of 120,000,000 of the richest and most prosperous people in the world perhaps might not seem so much different, to him, from managing the affairs of a big corporation.

I wanted to find out. We have been talking so much, in America, about a "business Government," that I was curious to discover whether a man with a practical, business point of view could get away with it in reality.

There has been a lot of loose talk to the effect that the President, because he has never been a politician, is being bamboozled, horns-woggled, befuddled and otherwise fooled by the political gentry who inhabit Capitol Hill. Don't you believe it. Herbert Hoover not only knows what is going on, but why, and who is behind it. And he knows, better than some of them do themselves, just which Senators are going to come back to Washington and which are going to be slipped gently into political oblivion.

Nobody quotes the President unless he has personally prepared the statement for publication. No newspaper man who hopes to have another chance to talk to him writes what the President says to him in confidence. But you can stick a pin in this:

He does not play politics with a brass band or a big stick. There is nothing of the playactor about him. The arts of the politician which appeal to the emotions are totally foreign to his nature. It is impossible to imagine him posing for dramatic effect or engaging in verbal denunciation of his political opponents. But the man who organized and administered the Belgian relief and made Germany like it, who ran our own Food Administration and persuaded us that sawdust was good to eat, who as Chairman of the Supreme Economic Council which absolutely ruled all Europe during the eight months between the Armistice and the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, figuratively as well as literally had the nations of the world eating out of his hand, who as Secretary of Commerce for seven years told the business and industrial leaders of America where they got off and made them like it—and him—must of necessity be master of the supreme art of the politician, the art of understanding people and making them do what he wants them to do. And this is a subtler and higher type of politics and in the long run more effective and more enduring in its results, than more than one or two men have ever brought to the White House.

Herbert Hoover approaches the problems involved in running the Government of the United States exactly as the president of a great business corporation approaches his own business problems. And that is the method of the engineer.

Engineers deal in facts. They don't build bridges by guesswork or dig tunnels with their emotions or erect skyscrapers by sentiment. It is an old saying among engineers, to which the President himself called my attention, that if one can get all the facts, and be sure that he has all the facts, about any engineering problem, and arranges them in their proper perspective, then the one correct solution becomes apparent to everybody.

That is true, as far as it goes. But it takes another kind of ability to convince other people—a board of directors, say, or the Congress of the United States—that the facts are facts and therefore that the solution offered must be the right one. This is particularly true when that board of directors—or Congress—has been in the habit of running things by guesswork, sentiment and emotion.

That is President Hoover's hardest job. He deals in facts. The truth which the assembled facts reveal is the only truth he recognizes. His job, as he sees it, is to get all the facts about every phase of the Government, then to convince, persuade or otherwise impress upon Congress, the politicians and the people that these are the facts and that they point to only one sane and sound solution of the problem in hand.

To do that takes skilful team work. Don't run away with the idea that Mr. Hoover has any quarrel with Congress. That is team-work, but Herbert Hoover is driving the team.

And so far as his hands are not tied by legislative restrictions, he goes ahead on his own initiative—after first finding out all the facts—just as the president of the Western Union or the Steel Corporation does.

The impression one gets upon entering the Presidential offices, in the ugly old structure known as the State, War and Navy building, across the street from the White House, is precisely that of the executive offices of a big corporation. In the old White House offices, in the wing which recently burned, there was a different atmosphere under previous Presidents. Ante-rooms were usually crowded with politicians seeking favors, or with tourists hoping for a chance to shake hands with the President. The general effect was social and political and not that of business. President Hoover's office might be that of any big business man, except that most big business men's offices are elaborately furnished and decorated.

Behind a big desk on the window side of the big room the President sits in a big swivel chair. As he rises to greet his visitor one sees that he is a big man. Six feet exactly, broad of shoulder, deep of chest, he weighs around 185 pounds, and mighty little of that is fat. In his pictures he gives the impression of being a bit soft. But that round face isn't fat.

The bony structure behind it is broad from cheek-bone to cheek-bone, from the angle of one jaw to that of the other. He is in good training but the sort of good training in which intelligent business men try to keep themselves.

Over the radio one gets the impression that the President's voice is rather er high-pitched, almost a tenor. In conversation that impression vanishes. It is not a vibrant voice, it lacks the resonance which makes for oratorical effect. But it is a baritone rather than a tenor, with the deeper tones predominating in conversation.

The President's clear, blue eyes are fixed upon his visitor as he talks. They are deep-set eyes, the bony pent-house of the forehead projecting considerably above the long upper eyelids. And the forehead goes straight up from the eyebrows, a long way up before it curves backward abruptly where the sandy hair begins. There is no sign of thinning over the dome of Mr. Hoover's head, but a little patch of gray is discernible on each temple.

His manner is dignified and easy without being genial. One tries to imagine him slapping anybody on the back, or anyone outside of his most particular intimate personal friends and family calling him by his first name. It is too much of a strain on the imagination. It can't be done. Yet there is no impression of coldness. The impression is rather that he has his emotions under perfect control, and that in dealing with and discussing public affairs he is discussing them in the light of reason applied to facts and not as matters to grow excited about. It is not hard to imagine him becoming angry, but it is impossible to imagine him "bawling out" anyone or giving any outward sign of loss of temper.

Mr. Hoover, we are told, is sensitive to criticism. I would put it differently. Dealing all his life in facts, he cannot tolerate lies. Remember that he is a Quaker, and the members of the Society of Friends have as one of their guiding rules of life the admonition of St. James: "Let your yea be yea and your nay, nay."

Mr. Hoover is sensitive to misrepresentations. It makes him write to be lied about. But honest, friendly, constructive criticism he welcomes, when it comes from sources he believes to be sincere. My estimate of him in that respect is confirmed by men who are closest to him.

He swings back in his swivel chair, thrusts one hand into his trousers' pockets and answers his visitor's questions without the slightest hesitation and with a degree of detail that is surprising. One gets the impression of a mind which functions like a well-oiled machine, silently, swiftly, and with perfect accuracy. He has the facts there in his head, about details of Government and administration which most presidents would have had to refer to an assistant secretary of some department.

We talk about facts and their importance. The President has appointed a dozen or more commissions of experts for the purpose of finding out the facts about various governmental problems. There will be more such commissions. The facts which they gather and collate will save the President and especially save Congress a great deal of time and serve as a guide for intelligent legislation. There is such a mass of public business continually passing through the Congressional mill, so many details of administration being put up to the President, that the regular standing machinery of the Government has not the time for direct and thorough investigation of every legislative and administrative proposal.

Mr. Hoover has gathered some interesting facts about the growth of the President's job. When the Federal Government moved to Washington in John Adams' administration, Congress and all its attaches numbered 250 persons and the President, to execute all of the laws then on the books, had a staff of 125. Today there are 3,000 persons on Capitol Hill, but the Executive departments, not counting the Army and Navy, employ 650,000 persons to administer the laws which Congress has instructed the President to enforce. Twenty times as many people, in proportion to population, are needed today to enforce the laws now on the statute books, as in Jefferson's day. Some of that is due, of course, to the growth of the nation. President Jefferson's administration granted only a dozen or so patents; today we grant 175,000 patents a year. But a lot of the burden upon the President and upon the taxpayers is due to the huge grist of laws which have only sentimental reasons for having been enacted.

One of the serious faults in our governmental system is the habit of legislation by emotion.

To illustrate: somebody had the emotional idea that it would be nice for the Government to provide free medical attendance and hospitalization for every veteran of any war, so long as he might live and regardless of the cause of his illness or disability. We are already taking care of every veteran whose disability can be in any degree traced to his military service. But this new project would make it incumbent upon Uncle Sam to take care of every case of senile dementia, hardening of the arteries, pneumonia, smallpox, ingrowing toenails or any other ailment which might attack any man who had ever worn a uniform, no matter if he had been in perfect health for fifty years after his military service.

President Hoover quietly appointed a commission of physicians and actuaries. They started with the known facts of the present number of veterans, their probable average longevity and the probable incidence of disease or disability among them, and the present cost of hospitalization per patient per day. When they got all of those facts tabulated and projected it figured out that the scheme, over which it was extremely easy to sentimentalize, would cost the taxpayers of the United States somewhat more than Six Billion dollars at the lowest possible computation. And that was that, so far as that particular piece of legislation was concerned.

Mr. Hoover believes that only by finding out all the facts and shaping the Government's course by them can Governmental expenses be reduced and the burden on the taxpayers relieved. At the same rate of progression at which Federal expenses and personnel have grown in the past 100 years, at the end of another century everybody in the United States would be on the Government payroll.

MODERNIZE

Now is the time to repaint the roof—or, if necessary, reshingle right over the old shingles. And at the same time you can paint and redecorate inside and out—add that extra room or porch—put down a cement or board walk—lay an all-weather driveway—enlarge or build a new garage—and, in fact, make your place over to where it will be an inspiration to look at and live in! Don't put off—for there's no sounder investment you can make than to modernize your home.

We'll be glad to talk over your remodeling and beautifying possibilities. If you have a well-built place, it is probable that it can be modernized wonderfully well at surprisingly small outlay. Why not stop in at the first opportunity?

Wilson Citizens
Are Beautifying
School Grounds

The citizens of Wilson and the surrounding community voluntarily offered their services last Tuesday to the Parent-Teachers Association for an all-day working to beautify the school grounds, which was landscaped by the Landscape Artist at the Texas Tech.

The P. T. A. furnished $100 to buy trees, evergreens and pay for the landscaping, and the school board donated an additional $100 for the building of more sidewalks. A beautiful plan was secured and with the ever ready response of the progressive men and women to a call of civic improvement, the day was well spent in hard labor with digging, plowing, building and such like. The ladies furnished a splendid meal which was served in the Home Economics Department.

At one o'clock the entire school and patrons met in the auditorium for a short, but interesting program. Superintendent A. L. Faubion introduced the visitors and speakers on the program, which included County superintendent H. C. Cavness, C. C. Williams, secretary of Tahoka Chamber of Commerce, County Attorney Nelson, all of Tahoka. Each made interesting talks commending Mr. Faubion and his faculty, board members and P. T. A. for the splendid record the Wilson School is making; remarking that the large attendance of patrons and their interest in the school was proof enough of the organized community spirit.

Mrs. H. B. Crosby, president of the P. T. A., responded in behalf of the P. T. A. in appreciation for the wonderful support of the patrons.

When completed, the school grounds of the Wilson Public School will be a credit to the town and among the best on the Plains.

When the politicians won't talk, their condition must be as serious as that of the boy who won't eat.

Of course you've heard about the unfortunate parachute jumper who took a drop too much.

Was Improved By
All-Day Working

Although the Wilson Cemetery is new and only ten graves are now there, the people of Wilson are taking an active interest in the beautification.

Last Thursday the community responded to a call from the Board of Directors of the Cemetery Association for an all-day working. An estimate of one hundred and twenty-five were present.

Mr. L. Lumsden had previously solicited a donation and the generous sum of $200 was received, for the erecting of a windmill and tank, piping and hydrants, building tools, shrubs, trees, etc. He also received the services of Mr. Sylvon Sanders, of Lubbock, to landscape the plot, which is very beautiful, and something to be proud of.

Loads of rocks were hauled to outline the flower beds and driveways, tractors, plows, teams, hoes and picks were wielded by both men and women in their progressive community spirit and civic pride.

A bountiful dinner was spread at noon and enjoyed by the willing workers.

The Board of Directors consisting of Mrs. L. Lumsden, Mrs. Frank Crews, Messrs. John Hamilton, John Hamilton, John Heck and Gus Nieman expressed their gratitude to the entire community for their willingness and response to this worthy cause.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT

To the voters of Lubbock county, I wish at this time to announce my candidacy for the office of County Clerk, of Lubbock County, subject to the Democratic Primary, to be held on July 26, 1930. I have been a resident of Lubbock county for the past 13 years. I came to this county from Austin, Travis county, Texas, at which place I was engaged in the barber business, and entered that business in Lubbock, for the first five years. After which time I have been engaged in the real estate business, which has been practically 9 years.

I wish to state that this is my first time to ask for any public office, and if elected I will do my utmost to fill that office with credit to myself and the county at large. I have carried a Union card for 29 straight years. I will appreciate the good offices of the voters in giving me support, and will try and see as many as possible before the primary.

Courteously yours,
Ed D. Allen.

Wilbur Napps, Walter McAtee and Bill Huckabay spent Sunday in Snyder.

"Now, Mrs. Maddison, I'm going to ask you that impertinent question all over again: exactly why did your husband leave you? No, no, I don't mean that. I know why he left you. But why did you suddenly leave him flat?
I don't know that; I'll bet your husband doesn't know that. Only you know—and Danty. I guess Danty knows."

She was silent; but she realized at that moment just why she had not destroyed Rex's last note. She had kept it to show Luke some day, and demand from him the explanation she should have asked for when it came to her. It was her justification—the only one she could have for her conduct.

"That is an extraordinary request for a stranger to make, Mr. Haynes, and I don't know whether to enlighten you or not."

She stood for a moment silent, and then, turning abruptly, walked out of the room. Haynes picked up his hat from the floor and rose, thinking the interview was at an end. But in three minutes she was back again with a little envelope in her hand.

"I'm telling you something that nobody knows but me and Mr. Morell," she said. "When my poor brother shot himself, this note was found in his room."

She took from the envelope two telephone slips and passed them to him. Gunner Haynes read:

Margaret darling, I have lost.
For months I have been gambling.
Today I took a desperate step on the advice of Luke Maddison. He has led me to ruin—money is his god. I beg of you not to trust him. He has led me from one act of folly to another. God bless you.

Rex.
He read it twice and then looked up.
"Is this your brother's handwriting?"

She nodded.

"Could you swear to it?"

"Yes, I'm sure it's his. I've had hundreds of penciled notes from him, and I couldn't possibly be mistaken."

"Who found it?"

"Mr. Morell found it in Rex's room.
Poor, dear Rex had a servant, a very trustworthy man, and he saw the note before Mr. Morell put it in his pocket—"

"He didn't read it, of course?"

"The servant, the servant, I mean?"

"I don't think so. He only saw the note, and Mr. Morell hid it."

The Gunner had an amazing memory. He could from that moment have repeated every word in the letter —there was no need for him to take a copy, and he handed it back to the girl.

No man wasted less time or effort than Gunner Haynes. His method represented the very economy of labor.
He was satisfied that Connor had carried away his victim, but was wrong when he associated Danty Morell with the abduction.

He called upon Connor but was told vaguely that the man had gone into the country. He did not attempt to seek an interview with Danty Morell, but after a day spent in a vain search of Connor's wharf, made his way to Half Moon Street, watched the house until he saw first Danty and then Pi Coles leave. To get into Danty's flat was a very simple matter—a key blank, a piece of lampblack, a quarter of an hour spent in Green Park filing the soft metal, procured him an entrance.

Once inside the flat he proceeded at his leisure. He was not at all anxious at the thought of Danty's return. His hatred of Morell was in one sense illogical. They had been friends and partners, though he had lost sight of the man and the partnership had broken off. He had no direct proof of the duplicitly he suspected. Gunner Haynes had loved that feather-headed little wife of his, and when she had disappeared, never to become more to him than a record in a workhouse register, a tremendous part of his life had been cut away from him. He might suspect Danty as the cause of his agony; he had no clear evidence that the story the man had told was untrue.

Danty had said the girl had disappeared, and that he was ignorant of her whereabouts as her husband. Yet, for all this, the suspicion in Gunner Haynes' mind amounted to a certainty. He was a just man, and so long as that proof was missing, Danty Morell would come to no harm.

He made a quick but thorough examination of the two rooms. There were letters which had to be scanned, pocketbooks to investigate, drawers to be opened and searched, but in none of these did Haynes find the slightest clue to Luke Maddison's present place of imprisonment. He did find the note which Connor had scribbled, giving the address where Luke was staying, but no more. There remained only the safe, which was not so much a safe as a steel cupboard fastened with a spring lock—the type that is found in most business offices. To open this was a matter of five minutes' patient work.

There were four shelves and each was crowded with letters, bills, and curious souvenirs which Danty had collected—the cupboard was in such disorder as only a man without method could create. On the third shelf he found a wooden box, the lock of which he forced. There were papers here—bundles of letters tied up with shoe-laces, bits of old string—there was nothing romantic in Danty's disposition.

The first bundle did not interest him. At the sight of the writing on the second his face went gray. He brought the box into the dining-room and sat down, read three of the letters, glanced at the others, and very slowly and deliberately tied them up again and put them back in the box.
As he did so he caught sight of a scrap of paper exactly the size of that on which Rex had written his last message. He took it out—yes, it was scrawled in the same handwriting. But the message was unintelligible. It ran:

Danty Morell. The man is a common swindler. I was warned against him by—

And then in a flash he realized. He had an extraordinary memory, and could repeat almost word for word the supposedly complete message Rex had left. With these words added it would have read:

Margaret darling, I have lost.
For months I have been gambling.
Today I took a desperate step on the advice of Danty Morell. The man is a common swindler. I was warned against him by Luke Maddison. He has led me to ruin—money is his god. I beg of you not to trust him. He has led me from one act of folly to another.

That was it! Danty had found that the first and last of those scraps made a complete message; he had put the second in his pocket (it still bore marks of being screwed up).

It came as something in the nature of a shock to Margaret Maddison to discover how completely changed were her feelings toward the man with whom she had passed through stages of toleration to liking, and from liking to a sort of passive affection, and from that again, in the cataclysmic revolution of feeling that her brother's death had brought about, to the bitterest loathing.

For the first time in her life Margaret was in love, and in love with something which was neither a memory nor an idea, but something which was to her as real as her own hand.
She had gained that sense of possession which is the wife's own sense—an understanding of her obligations. She could not afford to waste time in regrets at the amazing follies and wicked errors of the past: in the days that followed her mind was occupied with schemes for helping him out of the morass in which he struggled.

She did not hear from Gunner Haynes, although she stayed up until nearly two o'clock the next morning, having the telephone switched through to her bedside. Nor did the next day bring news. She was out when Danty called, and having no occasion to go to her check book, she did not discover his theft.

After she discovered it, she called on him.

Danty heard her voice and was coming across the hall to meet her before the door was closed.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Margaret," he said. "Is anything wrong?"

She did not answer until she was in his room.

"Before I tell you why I've come," she said, "I think it is only fair that you should know I have left instructions that unless I am back in my house in three-quarters of an hour my butler will ring up Mr. Bird and tell him where I have gone."

He frowned at this.

"What's the idea?" he asked harshly. "That's an extraordinary way to behave—why the dickens shouldn't you be back in three-quarters of an hour?"

"Where are the remainder of those checks that you stole from my check book when you called the other day?" she asked.

She saw his face go red.

"I don't know what you mean," he said loudly. "I steal checks? What nonsense you're talking—"

"You came into my house and you were in my sitting room long enough to extract ten checks. One of them was brought to the bank today, made out in Luke's name and signed by him. On my instructions the check was not honored."

The color left his face.

"Not honored?" he stammered, and in his embarrassment he betrayed his share of the guilt.

"I'm less interested in the check than in my husband," she said quietly. "Where is he?"

"Really, my dear girl—" he began.
"You'll address me as Mrs. Maddis-son, if you have to address me as anything," she said. "I want you to return those checks; I want you also to tell me exactly where Luke is."
"As far as I know, he's staying with a convicted thief named Haynes," the man answered roughly, and to his surprise she nodded.

"I thought so, too. I went down to see him—but he had gone. I think Mr. Haynes was surprised to find that he had gone, and I'm only now understanding that Luke did not go of his own free will. Then I thought he may have wandered out by himself in order to escape association with Mr.
Haynes. But the check explains a great deal. Where is Luke?"

He shook his head.

"I don't know."

"In that case I am going to do what I was trying to avoid," she said. "I am going to the police, and I shall charge you with stealing the blank checks, and leave it to Mr. Bird to connect you with Luke's disappearance."

She half turned to the door, but he caught her by the arm.

New Aid Brought Much Joy to Both

"Orgatone (Argotane) Has Been a Great Benefit to My Wife and Me, and We Both Feel Fine."
Says Abilene Man.

ABILENE, March 12.—Mr. W. M.
Wheeler, well known local man, a farmer, living on rural route 3, is enthusiastic in his praise of Orgatone (Argotane), the new medicine, because he and his wife have received benefits and relief from troubles of years' standing.

"It's true," he continued, "Both my wife and I have been bothered with stomach trouble, for quite awhile. It seemed that none of the food we ate digested properly, invariably after meals gas would form and we would experience severe pains and cramps in the pit of our stomachs. We took a lot of medicine but just couldn't get to the bottom where we could eat what we wanted, without suffering afterwards. My wife suffered terribly from gas forming on her stomach, and would have a full bloated up feeling. I had a bad case of constipation.

"Orgatone (Argotane) was advertised so highly we decided to try it.
Well, we certainly are greatly improved in every respect since taking Orgatone (Argotane). We both have a fine appetite now, and our food di-gests properly and we aren't bothered with cramping or pains afterwards.
My wife isn't bothered with gas forming anymore, in fact it has done both of us more good than anything we have ever taken, and we feel better than we have in several months. Orgatone (Argotane) is a wonderful medicine and has been a great benefit to both of us."

Genuine Argotane may be bought in Slaton at the Teague Drug Co.

Dallas Lady Glad To Praise Famed Konjola

Neuritis And Stomach Troubles Soon Banished By Power Of New Medicine.

MRS. E. M. FITZGERALD

"I never had the least idea Konjola would help me as it did," said Mrs. E. M. Fitzgerald, 4533 Worth Street, Dallas. "My stomach gave me a great deal of pain and trouble. Gas accumulated in my stomach after meals and the pressure against the heart cavity caused that organ to beat wildly. Neuritis attacked my side and my right arm and shoulder. These pains were often so severe that I could not do my housework. I did not sleep at night and became very nervous. "Konjola is fast bringing me back to health again. My stomach is in excellent shape and I can eat almost anything without distress. The neuritis pains are gone, my sleep is normal once again, and my nervous condition has greatly improved. I shall always recommend Konjola to anyone suffering as I did."

Konjola works with the important functionary organs of the body, drives the poisons from the system and regulates the organs of digestion and elimination. In this way glorious and abundant relief is brought about. It is recommended that Konjola be taken from six to eight weeks for the best results.

Konjola is sold in Slaton, Texas, at the Red Cross Pharmacy, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section. (Adv.)
