Final Rites Held Here for Roscoe Taylor

Named Sweetheart of Young Adults Club

A lovely picture for the readers of the West Texas Times to view is that of Miss Dyann Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Williams, who was recently crowned "Sweetheart of the Young Adults Progressive Club," here in Lubbock.

Funeral services for Roscoe Taylor were conducted last Saturday, March 29, at 2:00 p.m. at Bethel A.M.E. Church with Reverend A. W. Wilson, minister, assisted by Reverend John L. Walker, minister of the Messiah Presbyterian Church and Reverend S. R. Roberts, minister of Mount Gilead Baptist Church.

Remarks were also given by Presiding Elder T. B. Reece.

Mr. Taylor, a resident of Lubbock for the past 32 years, was a native of Simpsonville, Texas, Up-sur County. He was one of a family of four children born to Jake and Sarah Jennings Taylor.

Most of his youth was spent in and around Honey Grove, Texas. In his early years he was married to Miss Mary Hilburn, on October 30, 1912 and they were blessed with a daughter, Louise H. Taylor.

In 1906 he was converted and became a member of the C.M.E. Church.

He came to Lubbock in December of 1937 and made his home here until his death.

His first wife and daughter preceded him in death.

Here in Lubbock he united in marriage with Mrs. Jessie Mae Morgan on June 19, 1938.

His second wife, Jessie Mae, passed away in November, 1966. His health began to wane several months ago and his physicians here recommended his entering the Veterans Hospital in Big Spring for further treatment. He returned home for a few weeks recently but was returned to Big Spring only a few days before he passed away early last Wednesday morning, the 26th of March.

Survivors include a brother, Jaye Taylor of Abilene; a granddaughter, Mrs. Eloise McCoy and five great-grandchildren of Seattle, Washington; four neices, Mrs. Rosie L. Parrish, Mrs. Martina Blair, and Mrs. Florine Taylor, all of Fort Wayne, Ind.; and Mrs. Catherine Lester of Lubbock; a sister-in-law, Mrs. Alva T. Franklin of Amarillo; a brother-in-law, Otis McKnight and son, Samuel, both of Lubbock.

South Plains Funeral Directors were in charge of arrangements and burial was held in City of Lubbock Cemetery, beside his late wife.

Banquet Held at South Plains Boys Club

Plaques were presented to 24 outstanding young fellows of the Boys' Clubs last Thursday night during the 12th Annual Banquet for the three Lubbock Boys' Club branches.

Over 150 boys and their parents were at the banquet held at the South Plains Branch, which was sponsored by the South Plains Lions Club, the American Businessmen's Club and the Optimist Club.

The speaker for the occasion was Jimmie Keeling, head football coach at Estacado High School. He spoke to the youths on competition, inspiration, knowing what you want to be and setting goals. The awards the boys received were based on a month-by-month program at the Boys' Clubs.

They are given for attendance, cooperation, participation, attitude, school standing, community service, family and christian living, ability and improvement.

This special fete was in conjunction with the 63rd "Boys Recognition Week" which was celebrated by 810 clubs across the nation. The three Lubbock branches have an enrollment of 3,350 boys.

Home from Tour of Duty in Vietnam

Major Wellington D. Sadler arrived last Friday from South Vietnam, where he has served the past year. He joined his wife, Inez, and their daughter, Sonia, here.

Major Sadler is the son of Mrs. Ora Lee Easter and the late Woodson Donald Sadler. He was born at Valley Mills, Texas and spent part of his childhood there before coming to Lubbock.

He is a graduate of Prairie View College in 1955. This is his third trip overseas, two in South Vietnam and one in Germany, which lasted 3½ years.

He spent most of his youth here with his mother and met Miss Inez Williams and their romance continued during their college years and in 1955 they were married.

Major Sadler is making a career out of the service to his country and likes about seven more years, during which time he will possibly reach the highest rank obtainable.

His next assignment will be at Fort Meade, Maryland. His wife and 10-year-old daughter will join him soon after Mrs. Sadler receives her Master's Degree from Texas Tech in May of this year.

Sonia is a fifth grade student at Parkway Elementary School and a music student of Mrs. L. C. Struggs.

Major Sadler's service career began March, 1956. Mrs. Sadler is a graduate of Dunbar High School and also Prairie View College.

Easter Time Should Be Remembered

Nearly 2000 years ago, a Holy Man who lived to be 33 years of age died on the cross for you and I. This death, which involved the great Man of that day, was brought about by men of the time, for reasons they and we still do not understand, is one we cannot forget. Not only did He die for the world, but He arose from the dead.

The Holy Man, known to us as Jesus, was hung on a cross in the midst of two others. This Great Man suffered for us in order that our world might be a better place in which to live.

In looking at the teachings of this Great Man, we must ask ourselves why it is we are so very generous in death, and yet refuse to be generous in life?

As we approach the Easter Season, the time when our Saviour died on the cross for us, why can't we begin upgrading our lives in order that we will contribute something constructive to the world we live in.

Some of us this day and time are still a part of the cruel games that people play. It appears as though our brothers are not saying what they mean, nor are they meaning what they say. Some are praising their fellow man and socking it to them in the name of the Lord.

Why not start this Easter Time by remembering what Christ, our Saviour did for you and me?

Here are a few words which would be most appropriate for this week and this season;

Tomb, thou shalt not hold Him longer;
 Death is strong, but Life is stronger;
 Stronger than the dark, the light;
 Stronger than the wrong, the right;
 Faith and Hope triumphant say
 Christ will rise on Easter Day.

What'll It Be-Sticker Patch or Play Area?

It was last spring when the city politicians were using all their wits to become City Fathers. There were many promises proclaimed at that time—yet today some of them have gone untouched.

A request was sent to the Park and Recreation Department in regard to a play area in the Coronado Apartments region, just south of the apartments. The Park and Recreation Board was in sympathy with the need of the playground area within this tract and took their nod to the City Fathers, including those seeking election.

As it came to be, the Mayor of Lubbock then and now, W. D. Rogers, Jr., agreed—along with his constituents—to make this available for those kiddos living within the area. The land was allotted for the youngsters and some outdoor equipment—basketball goals, softball diamond and volley ball court—were thrown into the rush, rush situation.

What the Mayor and City Councilmen didn't throw into the package recreational deal was the clearing off of this rough area, which naturally became engulfed in weeds and stickers after the first rain—just like the rest of our Urban Renewal Area.

The question to ask at this time is "Will the Kids have a play area or a sticker patch this summer?"

Now is the time to start preparing some constructive recreation activities for these young people. They deserve the opportunity of good recreational facilities just as everyone else.

What about it City Fathers? Exactly what will it be? The sticker patch again this year, or can we depend on more help to make a good play area for these young folks?

The Facts About Narcotics: Marijuana, Heroin and the Mafia

By Wesley Hills
 Scope Feature Service

A college student sits in a trance before a stereo, "grooving" the latest sounds. Another student tries to stop an on-rushing vehicle by standing in its path with his arms outstretched. A 12-year-old child squirms in terror in a psychiatric ward. A chronic criminal bashes in the head of a 72-year-old man in order to get a few dollars.

These are some of the things people have done under the influence of drugs and public hysteria soars with each newspaper and magazine article indicating that the use of dangerous drugs is rapidly rising.

Police, doctors, and scientists split hairs over the harmfulness of "pot" while young people increasingly "turn on." Objective discussions by public officials about drug use are dangerous to political careers for the hysterical public and the liquor and tobacco lobbies are poised to challenge any suggestion of legislation that would make life easier for those who smoke marijuana.

Despite public protest, young people are saying: "If you haven't tried it, don't knock it." School teachers, journalists and business executives are also trying drugs. Do-it-yourself books and pamphlets explaining how to produce or purchase drugs and avoid prosecution are being published.

Schools are beginning courses on the dangers of drug use. Magazines and newspapers are publicizing the dangers of drugs but their often contradictory stories serve only to re-affirm in the minds of young people the lack of justification for public control or concern.

The public outcry also appears ironic to youth because of the older generation's behavior during Prohibition. To many young people, the ultimate hypocrisy of the older generation is in asking youth to abandon drugs and use legal means to change present drug laws. Prohibition didn't end until the use of illegal and dangerous, booze was so widespread that government control could not be enforced.

Young people today are confident that something similar will happen to drug laws. According to government estimates as many as 30 million people in the U.S. are using illegal drugs, including many of the U.S. servicemen in Vietnam. U.S. courts, police departments and prisons are not equipped to handle that many people. Any crackdown on drugs would cause a breakdown in the whole judicial system and young drug offenders feel that laws will have to be rewritten to exempt certain drugs from narcotic statutes. The question then would be to determine which drugs are least harmful to society and the individual.

The major problem with determining which drugs are least harmful is the lack of objective research into the question. Scientific studies have been hampered by government red tape since drug use by scientists must receive official government clearance. Many studies have been postponed for several months awaiting approval by the government; other studies have been abandoned because of long delays. Objective research has also been hampered by public hysteria and the news media's feeding on this hysteria. A legislator could commit political suicide by suggesting that present punishment for the possession and sale of drugs may be too severe and that the matter of how harmful certain drugs are to society should be thoroughly investigated.

However, the American Medical Association now considers the penalties for possession and sale of marijuana "harsh and unrealistic." And several university research experiments with marijuana, particularly those conducted at Boston and Harvard Universities, have reported that it is a mild, short-lived drug with no clear damaging effects. However, emotions run high on controversial subjects and as usual each side of the controversy uses the information that most agrees with its preconceptions.

The research reports on marijuana by Boston University and Harvard University arrived at similar conclusions. Their findings included:

- Marijuana is a "relatively mild intoxicant with minor, real, short-lived effects."
 - Initial users of marijuana did not get high, but their performances on simple tests were impaired. Chronic users got high, but performance on the same tests was not impaired.
 - Marijuana reaction was not as severe as the nicotine reactions of subjects who became dizzy, pale and had sweaty palms.
 - Bloodshot eyes, not pupil dilation, was observed in the subjects after marijuana use.
 - All the effects of marijuana were gone within two hours after smoking.
- Studies by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare have concluded:
- Marijuana does not cause physical dependence but according to some authorities it can cause psychological dependence if taken regularly.
 - No direct cause-and-effect link between the use of marijuana and narcotics like heroin has been found.
 - The physical effects of marijuana are rapid heart beat, lowered body temperature, reddening of the eyes, changes in blood sugar levels, stimulation of appetite and body dehydration. The long-term effects of marijuana are not yet known.

A survey of professors from the University of Hawaii, University of Michigan and Michigan State University reported that marijuana users were not dropouts, but more likely to participate in political activities and encourage social change.

"Our data appeared to support the thesis that drug use by young people, particularly use of marijuana, represents a social form of recreation far removed in nature from the traditional problem of narcotics addiction or alcoholism," the researchers said.

Despite these studies, however, the penalties for the sale or possession of marijuana are as severe as for heroin. Until recently, in Wisconsin a person could get the death sentence for sale of marijuana.

The greatest hangup with marijuana use is the conclusion that it may be "psychologically" addictive. While tobacco and alcohol are also this, the public seems to believe that psychological dependence on a drug such as marijuana will cause a person not only to purchase increasing amounts of the drug but will cause him to commit irrational criminal acts under its influence. Yet neither conclusion seems to be justified by research on marijuana users or arrest records.

The paramount concern of many of the older generation is that drugs encourage sexual permissiveness. However, current sexual permissiveness is due far more to a revolution in attitudes and scientific breakthroughs that have lessened the penalties of premarital sex. Drug use is more a reflection of permissive attitudes than a cause.

High school students are far more indiscriminate in drug use because of their lack of sophistication about drugs. This lack of sophistication makes them easy marks for pushers who will even sell them fake drugs or put heavy narcotics in marijuana.

Non-students are not only less sophisticated, they're also more reckless. In a recent incident involving the Vikings motorcycle gang, members of the club dropped a 17-year-old girl off on her front lawn early one morning, with the right half of her body partially paralyzed. All she knew was that she had been popping some pills into her mouth.

When the press publicizes such tragic results of dangerous drugs, the public demands stronger enforcement action and the police respond by making a few arrests.

Police departments are able to list few crimes committed by persons under the influence of marijuana. But each key seizure of marijuana may create a scarcity of the drug with indiscriminate drug users turning to far more dangerous drugs as a substitute, thus increasing the danger both to the individual and society.

Another controversial aspect of marijuana is the theory that it is a stepping stone to more dangerous drug use. Police estimate that 30% of all heroin addicts get started on marijuana. A former narcotics commissioner for the New York City Health Department, however, has noted that 90% of the city's heroin addicts are school dropouts. This would mean that dropping out of school is three times as great a cause of heroin addiction as marijuana. It appears that the more dismal one's economic environment, the more dangerous the drug he needs to escape dismal reality. The theory is borne out by the predominately greater use of heroin among blacks. College students insist that there is no connection between marijuana use and heroin, largely because it doesn't apply to them.

Among the non-college population, however, the connection between marijuana use and later heroin use is at least partially established. Not only is the non-college user more likely to lack education about the dangers of drugs but his education may keep him at a lower economic level, causing more reasons for escape. This is particularly true of young people who have not graduated from high school. The stress factor on an individual is seemingly far more important to his becoming an addict than his experimenting with marijuana.

The stress factor is likewise important in the creation of alcoholics and may be significant in a person's desire to try narcotics—even relatively harmless ones like marijuana. Today's wide-spread drug use is also caused not only by permissive attitudes and despair, but also by the feeling among today's youth that it is alienated from society. Just as rebellious youth violated liquor restrictions in the Flapper Era, today's youth, who are also living in an affluent age, are violating drug statutes.

Many of those experimenting with drugs are convinced that America is decaying morally and spiritually. Assassinations, war, racism, the draft, police riots and the "identity crisis" lead to increased alienation and greater anxiety—both important reasons for wanting to escape into drugs. The adult population seemingly fails to connect these great problems facing the nation with the use of marijuana, but young people see condemnation by the older generation as hypocritical in light of the adult use of alcohol. An important aspect of this part of the generation gap is that young people have a sense of immediacy about solving problems—an attitude that the older generation no longer has. Young drug users believe that, while the symptoms of drug abuse are treated by arresting students, the basic sickness in America goes unchecked.

Drugs have traditionally been used mainly by the poor elements of society. Karl Marx aside, opium has been the opiate of the masses. In his autobiography, Malcolm X talked about the free traffic in drugs in Harlem in the 1940s and the lack of social taboos on both addicts and pushers. One of the more significant aspects of the current drug crisis is that middleclass and upperclass young people who would seem to have nothing to escape from are using marijuana, barbiturates, STP and LSD. And social taboos are nonexistent. Some of the most active students on campuses are drug pushers and users, including members of conservative organizations like the Young Republicans and the Young Americans for Freedom. The acceptance of drug use is underscored by today's pop music and the emergence of acid rock. The Beatles use drugs and Detroit's hippie guru, John Sinclair, is now appealing one of his convictions on the grounds that the punishment for marijuana offenses is too harsh. He lost in the lower courts.

The drug situation is not confined to the young or to marijuana, however. Suburban housewives are increasingly getting through dreary days by using barbiturates—habit forming but legal drugs.

Going Away Party Staged by NAACP

A going away party was given Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Ellen MacWilliams by the members of the Lubbock Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). This affair was a complete surprise to Mrs. MacWilliams, who is moving to California in the near future.

Mrs. MacWilliams has done a splendid job with the youth of this organization and because of this, she was given the surprise party. The members of the organization admit that it will be hard to find someone to fill her shoes when she leaves.

Police Beat

Stab Victim

A Lubbock woman reported to the Lubbock Police Department while she was in a hospital emergency receiving ward receiving treatment for a stab wound.

According to the lady, she was stabbed by her husband. Her story was that she and her hubby were at a friend's house when the fireworks started. Wishing to be nice guests, she wasn't stabbed until the pair were outside of the friend's house.

She did receive a wound in the arm. She does not know what type of instrument was used to stab her, but it could have been a knife or some other sharp instrument. She went on to tell the police that it was too dark to tell what she was stabbed with.

One thing for certain, she says, "I will file charges against my beloved husband."

Another Stab Victim

The Lubbock Police Department received a call last week in regard to a stabbing which involved a 19-year-old lady who had an argument with another lady who was living with her 17-year-old "man." The aftermath resulted in the lady being stabbed several times.

According to a witness, the lady was struck by her lover while they went outside the apartment complex for the argument. She reportedly was to have struck her lover with a knife.

She was taken to Methodist Hospital for emergency treatment. She told authorities that she definitely would file charges against the assailant.

Vandalism

Henrietta Acosta, of 3415 East Baylor Avenue, reported that a man threw a rock through the rear window of her house last week.

According to Mrs. Acosta, the rock was thrown from the alley. It will cost approximately $10.00 to repair the window.

House Burglary

C. T. Grain, 2635 East Auburn Avenue, reported that someone had entered his house by merely prying open the rear door of the residence.

Once inside, the looter took his favorite deer rifle—valued at $100—and all the coins in his favorite bank.

According to Grain, it will take approximately $12.00 to repair the door of his house.

Looter Takes Beer and TV Set

Jack Bailey, of 602 Walnut, is not a happy man by any means this week. You see, someone entered his residence while he was away and took 18 cans of his beer and his channel changing television set in one big haul.

A funny thing about the break-in, the door to his residence was not locked. The looter had it made, he just walked in without any effort.

Around The Hub City

The members of the Knights of Pythian and Court of Calanthe are to be commended for a splendid job last Sunday afternoon in their annual observance of their Thanksgiving Services. This affair is held each year near the 26th day of March Reverend E. D. Toines, pastor of the St. John Baptist Church, delivered the address. In his own way, the energetic minister expressed to the group how important love is to each and every one.

This affair got off with a bang when the members and the Dunbar High School marching band marched from Dunbar to the meeting place at St. John Baptist Church.

Around the Hub City would like for the readers of the West Texas Times to know that there is always room for organizations like these two in our community.

A job well done, members.

Among the students who were home for a few days break in their college attendance were Donna Jones from Trinity University at San Antonio and Larry Jones from the Military Academy at Harlingen, Texas. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Don Jones.

Also in the Hub City for a few days is Cecilla Joyce Graves, a student at Bishop College.

Among out-of-town friends and relatives who attended the funeral services for Roscoe Taylor were Mrs. Juanita Knapp and Mrs. Veranita Osborne, both of Amarillo; Mr. Jaye Taylor of Abilene; Mrs. Alva T. Franklin, also of Amarillo; Mrs. Eloise McCoy of Seattle, Washington; Mrs. Martina Blair, Mrs. Florine Taylor and Mr. Charles Blair.

Mrs. Josephine Smothers and Mrs. Nellie Truesdale were called to Waco, Texas due to a death in their family.

Mr. and Mrs. Fulton Berry have moved into their recently purchased home on Colegate. Mr. Berry is a student at the police academy here.

Around the Hub City would like to call your attention to the fact that those energetic young students are still out for their spring vacation. Why not give them a chance when you are driving to and from work?

The Multi-Service Center, located in the Mae Simmons Park, and the Posey Multi-Service Center, located at 1714 East 14th Street, would like to invite you to come by and see what they are doing in their respective locations.

Memo from Mac R. B. 'Mac' McAlister State Representative

State Representative, Dist. 76, Place 3

The most overrated statement about the Texas Legislature by news columnists is the purported "vote swapping."

I have yet to have the first Legislator to ask me to swap votes on any measure. There is tremendous value on "Keeping your word." Many Legislators will work the floor and ask you how you are going to vote on a Bill. The quickest way one can lose the respect of his fellow Lawmakers is to talk one way and vote another. For this reason you learn early to be careful on any commitment. The reason for this is, a Bill that looks OK in the beginning may be completely massacred by amendments. Finally in the House, as in business, church or anywhere else, a person must gain the respect of his fellow man in order to be effective. There are many brilliant men in the House, and when they tell you, "This is a bad bill," you can usually rely on it. The big job I have as a rookie is to gain this respect through intelligent study and honest effort.

Mayor John Soules of Sundown proved that the little man can still have a big voice in government. The Mayor flew in last week to testify at the Public Education Hearing. He didn't get on the floor until after midnight, but his testimony along with others had much to do with causing Chairman George Hinson to name a subcommittee that's favorable to the small and medium size schools.

The newspaper columnist who predicted Governor Smith to be colorless were caught eating their own words this week along with delicious hamburgers. The Governor took time off last week to put on a chef's hat and apron and to serve Speaker Gus Mutscher and rookie House members at a surprise luncheon. Governor Smith told me there is no reason for the First Man of our state to hold himself aloof and that actually he learns more talking to a farmer from Ropesville than from his chief advisor in many cases. When you visit the Governor's office you always leave with a sweet taste in your mouth thanks to the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce who has a tall candy jar filled with candies for the visitor. Let us hear from you.
