Thompson's prominence as a national leader in the DAV began with his work as a member and three-year chairman of the DAV's National Membership Committee from 1971 to 1975, a period of intensive growth for the association of wartime-disabled veterans.

He played an increasingly important role in the DAV's national leadership while serving as National 4th Junior Vice Commander in 1976-77 and National 2nd Junior Vice Commander in 1977-78. Last year, as Senior Vice Commander, he was a highly visible advocate for disabled and Vietnam era veterans. He was instrumental in establishing the DAV's nationwide Vietnam Vet Outreach Program, which addresses several readjustment needs of Vietnam era veterans, including a delayed stress reaction that has come to be known as "Post-Vietnam Syndrome."

Thompson's 26-year military career began in 1939 when he enlisted in the U.S. Army. After serving in the South Pacific during World War II, he enlisted in the newly formed U.S. Air Force in 1951. He served in Korea in 1952 and 1953 and in Vietnam in 1965 and 1966.

He earned five Bronze Stars and numerous other military decorations before retiring due to disability in 1966 with the rank of Master Sergeant.

During 1975-76, Thompson served as Commander of the DAV's Department of Maryland. He has held several other positions in that Department and in DAV Chapter #1 in Baltimore. Currently he is serving his second

The Air Force veteran, who has volunteered thousands of hours to helping sick and disabled veterans in VA hospitals, is heavily involved in civic affairs and has held leadership positions in several organizations other than the DAV.

Organizations in which he is active include the VFW, American Legion, Elks, Knights of Columbus, St. Vincent de Paul Society, his church's parish council, Sanai Neighborhood Improvement Association, Baltimore's Northern District Police Community Relations Committee, the March of Dimes, and the Boy Scouts of America.

The DAV is a nonprofit, nongovernmental organization that gives veterans and their families free assistance in claims for veterans' benefits. It also works to protect and improve legislation designed to benefit disabled veterans, their dependents and their survivors.

Hance Introduces Major Tax Incentive Legislation

U.S. Representative Kent Hance (d-Tex.) has introduced major tax incentive legislation which provides for depreciation of "qualified energy" refinery facilities over a five year period. "I think this type of legislation is what we need to get us out of the energy crunch," said Hance. "If we can create a real incentive for private industry then we will have accomplished something toward solving the energy crisis. However, we will never get anywhere if we dont create some major programs very soon.' Hance's bill calls for tax breaks for the production of "qualified energy' which includes synthetic fuels, solar and wind energy, diesel, heating oil, fuels from shale and coal and alcohol-related fuels. The bill also provides tax incentives for the production of unleaded gasoline for motor vehicles from any resource.

industry to receive accelerated depreciation on any qualified energy-producing facility. Also included are facilities used for research, bulk storage and equipment used as an integral part of qualified energy production.

The legislation by the Texas congressman allows private

"What the bill does is allow private industry to amortize or depreciate their facilities over a five year period,'he added. "Not only will this give us increased fuel supplies, but it will build up additional tax bases in communities where otherwise this would not happen without this type of incentive.'

"If we are truly interested in declaring 'war' on the energy problem, then we need to stop talking and start acting,' said Hance. "The fastest way to get new and added forms of energy is to provide a real reason for private industry to get involved. My bill does just that.'

SOMOZA, NO LONGER A RULER, MAY STILL LIVE LIKE A KING

WASHINGTON-The Nicaraguan dictator, Anastasio Somoza, has been deposed and has found temporary refuge in Miami. He would have left sooner if he could have persuaded the pope to request it.

Somoza wanted to flee Nicaragua without appearing to be a coward. So an intermediary flew to Rome and asked Pope John Paul II to issue a "humanitarian appeal for Somoza to resign and the fighting to end. But the pope declined to meddle in Nicaraguan politics.

Somoza is unhappy, of course, over losing his country. But he will be able to live in style. His family and flunkies owned or controlled just about every profitable industry, institution and service in Nicaragua.

He produced the food his people ate, the cigarettes they smoked, the coffee they drank, even the sugar they put in their coffee. He literally bled his people and then sold the plasma for profit.

According to our sources, Somoza spent the past several months liquidating every asset he could. The money probably has been squirreled away in banks in the United States, the Bahamas and Switzerland. Additional millions have been invested in businesses outside of Nicaragua.

He owns several businesses and real estate in Florida. And there are unconfirmed rumors that he has invested heavily in New Mexico.

The guerilla-backed government that Somoza left behind will expropriate the former dictator's property and businesses. Our sources told us a "trust fund" will be set up to examine the extent of his empire and transfer it to state institutions.

His vast farmlands-roughly equivalent in size to the entire republic of El Salvador-may be parceled up and distributed to the Nicaraguan people.

Meanwhile, our sources estimate Somoza's fortune may be as much as $500 million. As one U.S. official put it, he "won't be on anybody's welfare roll."

OIL MAN: The Senate Finance Committee has been holding hearings on oil taxes. The House has already voted a 60 percent tax on the oil industry's surplus profits. But the Senate is expected to let the oil companies keep much more of their windfall profits.

The committee is chaired by Sen. Russell Long, D-La. He is a rumpled, touseled, amiable fellow who has all the appeal of a puppy. More to the point, he has oil in his bloodstream; he admits that his personal oil holdings are worth $1,204,832.

Long has served in the Senate for 30 years. Next year, he'll face the Louisiana voters again. He isn't expected to have any serious opposition. He won't even begin his campaign for another year, but he is already collecting oil contributions.

The senator keeps his Senate Finance Committee in line by quietly arranging to channel oil money into their campaigns. We have traced figures from late 1973 through the 1976 campaign. Committee members collected a fabulous $900,000 from oil and gas contributions during that period.

Russell Long has never let his personal oil holdings inhibit him from a heroic defense in the Senate of oil privileges. But he is under extreme pressure from the voters, who are outraged over excessive oil profits.

Our Senate sources expect that Long will probably push through the 50 percent tax on windfall profits that President Carter has requested. This would let the oil companies keep over $13.5 billion of their windfall profits. Then Long will likely emaciate the tax bill with exemptions and loopholes, which will permit the oil firms to keep billions more.

BUDGET PINCH: The Secret Service is caught in a financial pinch. It has overspent its travel budget and its funds may run out, say our sources, as early as late July.

Basically, the budget squeeze is blamed on a bureaucratic snafu. A spokesman claimed the budget office was late in getting the Secret Service's requests up to Capitol Hill.

But privately, our sources told us, it is costing more to protect all the high muck-amucks. They blame ex-President Gerald Ford, however, more than others. Ford and his family have traveled more than their government guardians ever dreamed.

The former president has logged 960,000 miles on the road since he left office. This has siphoned money away from the budget for guarding others.

Meanwhile, the Secret Srevice brass are scrambling to find ways to stretch their dollars until relief arrives.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES:The federal government recently set up a hotline so whistleblowers could report waste and corruption. A federal transportation official called the number to report a gripe and was advised to "tell it to Jack Anderson" . . . The General Services Administration recently lowered the fire alarms in a federal building in Washington so the handicapped could reach them. Before they tore out the walls to lower the alarms, they painted them . . . Among the giant corporations that are exempted from the White House wage and price guidelines are such oil companies as Mobil, Shell, Phillips Petroleum, Chevron, Gulf and Exxon.

Gov. Bill Clements, often mentioned as a vice presidential choice should Connally and Bush both falter.

Clements has refused to take sides in the primary matter, at least publicly.

A possible Clements opponent in 1982, Speaker of the House Bill Clayton also refuses to take a public position other than neutral in the issue of the Democratic primary. Clayton, by the way, attended the Southern Legislators Conference in Louisville, Kentucky, last week with Reps. Dan Kubiak, Bill Presnal, and Bob Davis.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Mr. Williamson:

Have you ever wondered why there have been no serious outbreaks of the often fatal diseases of childhood, such as diphtheria, polio, or whooping cough in our community?

Since the beginning of the clinic in 1939, by the Jr. League, three (2) physicians and one nurse, the clinic has been the only source of preventive medical care for the low income and medically indigent families with children in Lubbock. Thousands upon thousands of volunteer hours have brought the 1939 caseload of 49 to some 8,000 in 1978.

Beside administering some 17,000 immunizations to infants and children to age 18 in 1978, the clinic also provided, through volunteer physicians, some 4,000 medical examinations. Many referrals were made to other agencies for follow up.

Another service of the clinic is a nutrition program, funded thru U.S.D.A. This program provides infant formula to high risk infants and special foods to children ages 1 thru 5 and pregnant women who are at high risk nutritionally. Nutrition and baby care classes are offered daily.

Home visits are made routinely by qualified nurses on all newly registered infants.

The clinic has been identified as a community clinic since funding comes directly from the people to United Way.

Without the generous support of the people thru contributions, clothing, baby food, volunteer hours and other services, the clinic would not be what it is today.

AUSTIN-While President Jimmy Carter is shaking up his administration, Texas Democrats are busy selecting a method of picking delegates to the 1980 presidential nominating convention.

Some party leaders favor a presidential preference primary like the Texas Republicans are going to have. Others favor picking national convention delegates through the state convention route. The State Democratic Executive Committee is scheduled to approve an official plan on July 28, and many Capitol insiders feel the decision is more important than is generally believed.

Mrs. Carrin Patman of Ganado, chairman of the SDEC rules committee, says she is convinced SDEC will vote for a convention plan but leave room to add a non-binding presidential referendum to the primary ballot to be used as a guide at the state convention. The plan is a reasonable compromise between those who want a binding primary and those who don't want any kind of presidential contest on the primary ballot.

"Smoke-Filled Rooms"

State Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, is among the Democrats who favor a binding primary in which delegates would be apportioned according to popular vote.

During a Dallas County hearing last week, Mauzy argued that failure to hold a primary would signal the voters that Texas Democratic Party was heading back to the days when decisions were made in "smoke-filled rooms" and by manipulating the precinct-to-state convention process.

State Rep. John Bryant said "it would be a very bad mistake" to not hold a primary. The Dallas legislator said Democrats would be hard-pressed to explain to voters why the party is not holding a primary when the Republicans are gearing full steam for theirs.

One reason the Republicans are so eager to hold a primary which they education system and more changes may be ahead.

Texas Education Agency commissioner Marlin Brockette announced he will retire later this year, and two deputies will leave with him.

Gov. Bill Clements has appointed a special advisory committee on education to study the public education system. He campaigned last year with a promise to return to basic education in Texas. Recently he has stated it may be necessary to change the make-up of the State Board of Education from an elected one to one appointed by the governor with Senate confirmation.

Legislation to phase out the elected officials will have to be introduced in the next legislative session if Clements decides to go ahead with the plan.

"Public Not Allowed"

Clements' new committee met last week and ran into a collision over the open meetings law with a House Education Committee official.

Saying the public was not allowed to attend, Clements' office manager Allen Clark asked Education Committee clerk Rock Fritz to leave a meeting of the governor's advisory committee. Allen said the committee wanted to talk "about personalities, assigning people to committees."

Fritz checked with the Texas Attorney General's office for an opinion on whether the Texas Open Records Act applies to advisory panels and was told the law was not clear.

Farmers Seek Explanation

Leaders of an agriculture group said Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown didn't go far enough last week in explaining why he refused to back a proposed agriculture products commission to advise the governor. The group also charged Brown made ethnic and racial slurs when he lost his temper in a meeting with them on the issue.

Brown subsequently apologized publicly to black leaders for the slur he felt was made in a private meeting in his office.

The farmers later met with Clements and said he told them he would consider forming the advisory agriculture group.

WEST TEXAS TIMES

by Joe Kelly

You only take one vacation a year, so milk it for all it's worth. Okay, that makes sense.

But remember—six weeks from this Saturday Texas Tech opens its football season here, against Southern Cal. So, summer must be about gone.

Anyway, five weeks ago last Sunday I was fishing with Jim Whitelaw for lake trout, and it seems like yesterday. I only wish it was.

That was followed by a visit by the family to Lake Placid, the scene of the approaching winter Olympics. And it is worthy of mention, even though not many from this area probably will go there.

Lake Placid is an Alpine-type village 10 miles from Saranac Lake. The one thing that they have in common is that they are both small and both are on lakes—neither of which donates their names.

Saranac Lake is on Lake Flower; Lake Placid is on Mirror Lake. Don't ask me why. Many years ago they went their separate ways. Saranac Lake opted to become a center for tuberculosis, both recuperation and recovery, along with research headed by world-famed Dr. Trudeau.

Lake Placid decided to go the sports route and already has hosted one winter Olympics. Indeed, the original ice arena, for skating and hockey, is very much in evidence as you drive down the main street. But there have been changes. Another, and bigger, facility has been attached and it's a mammoth complex.

Not farm from the arena is Lake Placid High School. The former cinder track has been converted into a speed skating oval—and last spring you saw competition on it, as well as seeing it in the Dorothy Hamill special.

Evidence of the Olympics is everywhere, even in summer. In fact, Lake Placid has been urging people to visit and see preparations because so many will not be able to attend the games in person. Housing is limited and they are planning on using Saranac Lake, Keene and many other North Country sites.

As we approached, suddenly there were construction and detour signs. Instead of going into the village proper, we were diverted on side streets. The first thought was — uh huh, there's so much activity going on that we aren't going to see anything to speak of.

Wrong. They were in the process of blacktopping the streets. After a short detour, we were on our way back into the village itself. Here were the shops, the hotels, the eating houses, the average business. Almost all of them were decorated for the Olympics and the village had flags flying on both sides of main street.

Traffic was slow, fortunately, so we had a good chance to look around and see the feverish preparations. And, towering over the village and Mirror Lake is Whiteface Mountain, which you all will see on TV coverage and hear a lot about.

Joe took pictures, shopped for a couple of tee-shirts and then we decided to see the ski jump site. The jump site stands out and can be seen for miles. It's brand new and a huge structure.

A rope barrier kept spectators away from the base, but you could stand approximately where the finish will be and it's frightening. The jump towers over you and makes you feel small and insignificant. How anyone dares propel himself down the jump and through the air is beyond my comprehension. Incidentally, the jump already has been tried. Lake Placid, in the past few years, has been having summer jumping. They truck in loads of ice and spread it on the jump and landing area. That took place early this month and, of course, we missed it. We didn't go to the bobsled run on Mount van Hoevenberg. It was built before the prior Olympics, has been used heavily in the years since and has been refurbished for the upcoming Games. The Winter Olympics is costing a fortune, and there have been the usual cost overruns. New York State and the federal government are combining efforts, along with support from private groups. It's going to bring a lot of money into the state, and village, but there are local questions about whether it is worth it. The environmentalists are up in arms-aren't they always-although predictions of the dire damage it would cause have been greatly exagerated. True, the ski jump stands out like a sore thumb, but I didn't see any bears or deer carrying signs and picketing it. One of the most controversial projects was a housing development for the athletes. It is located at Ray Brook, between Saranac and Placid. When the Games are over, it will become a prison. During initial digging and such there was a lot of wash into the Saranac river and the environmentalists said fishing would be killed. I'm happy to announce that most of the wash affected Oseetah Lake, where we camped, and if it killed the fishing, the fish didn't know it. That's where we caught the bass and northern pike that made up four meals. Saranac Lake has been affected by the Olympics, too, of course. Hotels and motels are booked solid, and the village will be used for overflow parking, while the hospital-and excellent facility-also will be used extensively. They have set up strict security and no none without proper tickets and parking permits wil be allowed into Lake Placid. The roads are going to present a problem, too. Because they aren't super highways, although they are good. But there are going to be some gorgeous bottlenecks. It's better to stay home and wat it on TV, which is what I intend to do.

Question: Why do vegetables wilt and dry out so quickly after storing in the refrigerator?

Answer: Vegetables need high humidity storage to stay fresh and crisp. Home economists at Whirlpool Corporation, a leading manufacturer of refrigerator/freezers, recommend that you wash leafy vegetables and drain slightly. Always store them in sealed crispers, or in other containers, such as plastic bowls with air tight lide

HOW COLD SHOULD YOUR REFRIGERATOR BE? A rule of thumb is that temperature is right if milk is very cold to drink.

Question: Is there an easy way to keep track of the food in my freezer? Something always gets overlooked and has to be thrown out.

Feasibility Study Launched For Texas Gasohol Plant

A group of Central Texas farmers have worked out an agreement to enter into a feasibility study for the design, construction and operation of a plant to produce alcohol from milo for use in gasohol, it was announced this week.

Kenneth Johnson, a farmer near Hutto and chairman of the Board for Central Texas GPI Cooperative, Inc., made the announcement following signing of a contract with GPI, Inc., a marketing and management consulting firm.

The plant would process 4,200 carloads of grain sorghum into 20 million gallons of alcohol and sizeable amounts of high quality food protein. The cost of the plant will be approximately $30 million and would take 18 months to construct, following groundbreaking. The feasibility study will take approximately three months, and if favorable, an additional two or three months would be needed for site selection and engineering. Officials are hopeful the plant can be in the Hutto area.

The Central Texas plant is one of 25 planned facilities—all farmer-owned cooperatives—to be built in the grain producing states of the nation. Discussions are already proceeding in other areas of Texas and the upper midwest. The Central Texas agreement was the first signed to proceed with the feasibility study.

"If everything goes according

atives would be producing 500 million gallons of alcohol annually and would materially reduce our dependence on Arab oil imports and improve our balance of trade deficits,' Ron Wood, Texas Coordinator for GPI, Inc., said.

The gasohol concept is not a new one, but has become more economically feasible with recent increases in the cost of oil imports and resulting increases in cost of gasoline. In the past two years, refining systems for this alternative source of fuel have been developed, processing the grain into alcohol with a yield of fuel far in excess of the fuel consumed in the process.

The mixture of 10% alcohol and 90% gasoline will fuel any car which normally operates on regular gasoline, leaded or unleaded. It does not require any modification of the automobile and therefore can be readily marketed as soon as production can be attained.

quartered in Foreman, N.D. who have conducted extensive research into the economics and marketing of alcohol fuels and related food products. The purpose of the organization is to assist farmers in developing production and marketing of alcohol to be used as a fuel in a mixture with gasoline.

"This is a real opportunity for farmers, through their cooperatives, to produce fuel, as well as food, with all the resulting benefits,' Wood said. "If the farmers do not do it, some of the corporate giants will.

Burglary Prevention for Homeowners

When you leave home—even if only for a few minutes—make sure that all doors and windows are locked.

Keep your garage door closed and locked, whether you're home or not.

Keep a record of the model and serial numbers of such items as television sets, radios, stereos, firearms, etc.

Observe carefully and report all suspicious persons and vehicles.

Be sure to get the correct license numbers of suspected vehicles.

Report any crime to the police at once and be willing to testify.

Cooperate with officers investigating an offense in your neighborhood.

Keep valuable stamp, jewelry and coin collections in a safe deposit box rather than at home.

Trim shrubbery around doors and windows so it will not provide protective screens for burglars.

Make sure all locks on doors and windows are in working order.

Keep vehicles locked. Do not leave property in the car. Do not leave lawnmowers, garden tools, bicycles and other property unattended in your yard.

Be cautious of strangers. When in doubt, call the police. Remember tha a burglar rarely looks like a burglar.

When you are out in the yard, lock your doors. Daylight burglaries while people are at home are common.

Never admit anyone into your home unless you know them. A one-way door viewer can be easily installed. Otherwise insist that the visitor call out his identity.

Demand credentials before admitting salesmen or repairmen, particularly if you have not requested their presence. Refuse to deal with any caller of this type who does not present identification. Notify the police immediately.

Be alert in protecting not only your home but your neighbor's as well. Don't tell a stranger that your neighbor is not at home.

Do not reveal your name, phone number or address to unknown callers. Never admit to them that you are alone or when you will be away from home.

A residence that presents a lived-in appearance is a deterrent to burglars.

Never leave notes that can inform a burglar that your home is unoccupied.

Do not hide keys outside your home. Burglars know where to look.

An empty garage advertises your absence. Keep it closed and locked.

When you leave town, arrange for someone to mow your lawn and pick up circulars, mail and newspapers. Don't advertise your absence.

Don't publicize vacations ahead of time. Many burglars watch for newspaper accounts of vacationers.

Leave information with a trusted neighbor as to where you can be contacted if necessary. Ask them to watch your house. Be sure all yard gates are securely locked. If possible, set a timer to swtich the lights on and off at predetermined times.

Sheridan's Ride

On June 25, 1952, twenty-seven years ago, on an isolated country road just outside of Amarillo, a single gunshot cracked in the stillness tragically brought to an end an era of journalism that can never been again, only recalled. It was and is now defined as "personal journalism," That glorious, brave and headstrong time when newspapers were in the hands of owner-publishereditors who used their enterprises as the mirrors of the communities they served, as sounding boards, commentary bases, as reflections of the life, times and morals of the world about them. "Canned" or wire copy so prevalent today was either non-existent or used with yesterday's discretion, shoved to provide world backdrop against which the vital and living, breathing, colorful community news of today, that day, was performed.

That ill-fated, self-inflected gun tragedy in the Panhandle dust brought to the end the life of a man who brought to and left his personal hallmark on his paper and his community in such a telling and intimate, powerful and humorous, deadly serious approach and execution.

In 1979, as the older generation remembers well, the today generation, particularly for the fledgling would-be serious newspaper student or apprentice, the image and the heritage of Gene A. Howe, who was the Amarillo Globe (now Globe-News), remains the solid and shining legacy for inspiration and for a pylon for hoped-accomplishment in the field already sadly depersonalized by computerization, automation and mediocrity, to say nothing of the now arid field of dedication.

Gene Howe, scion of a celebrated editor-publisher father, Ed Howe, of the Atchison (Kansas) Globe, migrated to Amarillo in 1924 and from thereon he presided over his Amarillo parish with dignity, rowdiness, humor and a deep concern for the city, the area and its people. To establish his forged links with his domain he instituted a column called "The Tactless Texan," in which "Ol' Tack" would plow into any form of civic or personal foray he wished, from menus to civic reform and aid, nature conservation and development of his adopted state and city. was a shy, inarticulate man (off-beat, certainly, for any newspaperman!) except on that typewriter. When he hit that keyboard, he was in his element. Nowadays we're fancy, we have all the gobbly-gook about "communications" and "media" and all that artificial flower bouquet stuff, but when Gene Howe tackled his machine he "talked," he did not "communicate." He was modest, the column was adorned not by his photo but the time-honored photo of Hollywood's cross-eyed silent star, Ben Turpin. That was the "velvet glove of humor" that he wore over a fist that could pack a solid and telling punch.

Gene Howe's life span ran from 1886 to that fateful day in 1952. His foot touched many bases in the long game, he was outdoorsman, businessman, newspaperman, employer, both a serious and fun columnist, and a promoter par excellence. He was most of all the unpredicable man and so it is that, 27 years after his death, a Lubbock writer has blessedly seen fit to enshrine this man within the covers of a new Staked Plains Press book titled fittingly and inescapably, of course, "The Tactless Texan." Lubbock writer Etta Lynch has been at her typewriter for a long time now. She started as a rank amateur, writing in the confines of her home in the city, working out her designs and creations in the times when she was not housewife, determined to master her craft. Any of us who have practiced the same excoriating craft will tell you it is as hard as digging any ditch, doing any manual work and more. Someone has said writing is the loneliest profession of them all; you have to do it all by yourself. How very true. Once the writing bug had bitten Mrs. Lynch she had had it. Once a person absorbs that particular venom into the system there is no cure. It is inoperable and it means constant anguish and work, but, oh such beautiful anguish and work! Etta Lynch scored some successes, minor and telling, with her short works and then she began doggedly to lengthen the scope of her work. From "Help Is Just a Prayer Away" she moved into the biographical field culminating a couple of years of so ago in the publishing of a life of one of the celebrated early Texas Tech football coaches of fiery recall. In that book Etta Lynch demonstrated without question that she knew how to research down to the last detail, the infinitessmal bit, and she knew how to put it together, readably and entertainly as well.

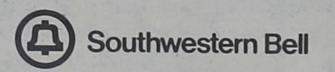

We're Still The Way We Were.

An elegant revival of times past, the Celebrity always adds a touch of warmth to its surroundings. Available in ivory with gold-colored trim or powder blue with silver-colored trim, it's small enough for a bedside table.

And, of course, it's genuine Bell. Which means you're getting top quality and you never have to worry about repairs. Since the working components are owned by the Bell System, we'll fix them anytime there's a problem. Without additional charge.

The Celebrity is now appearing at your nearest PhoneCenter Store, where you can also choose from a variety of other colorful and attractive styles. Or call your local Southwestern Bell business office. Choose a phone that's genuinely you and genuine Bell.

The Celebrity. $16 a month for five months or a one-time charge of $80. Prices do not include taxes or, if applicable, installation and recurring charges. If necessary hearing aid adapters are available from your telephone company.

THE CHOICE IS YOURS. BE CHOOSEY.

Then she went back into her den and she began the long and demanding research on the life and times of newspaperman great Gene A. Howe. Biography is perhaps the hardest of the variations of the writing craft, the most time-consuming and bewildering. You unearth facts; the key is to turn those dried twigs of memory and printed recall, of interview with survivors if any and the tramping over the setting grounds into that magical thing that revives the man or woman subject and re-endows the memory with life, flesh and blood, humor, pathos, drama and humanity.

In "The Tactless Texan" Etta Lynch has for the first time stepped across the forbidding territory into a first realization of the power she has for the amalgamation of heart and mind, comedy and seriousness, personality an the heartbeat of her subject. She has paid generous and warm tribute to the late Gene A. Howe, and he, who debunked all forms of personal self and spotlighted actions, would, I think, have smiled his slow smile and down deep been mighty pleased with the Lynch results.

Etta Lynch has not just "stumbled onto" the key that she now uses to unlock the doors to the past with such effectiveness. It doesn't just happen that way. No, she has "arrived at" this place that she demonstrates so winningly in her Howe tone. It is merely the growth and fruition to date in her writing career that is seen and felt. She has ways to go, yet. But she has, for the first time, I think, infused her narrative and her portrait with that "toner" that all writers must inject, the mix of the writer's own personality, sympathy and understanding that gives the subject matter life.

All this may sound very high-minded, I know, but I do want you to keep your eye out for "The Tactless Texan" by Etta Lynch. It isn't just that it is about a famous and landmark newspaperman of this area, this state, this country, but more, it is a recreation of times past, not so far back either, and a restatement of values in all areas that we seem to be overlooking, sadly, today. Etta Lynch has done valued service in undertaking her study and she has created an indelible memorial to a fine and giving man. She is to be highly and warmly congratulated. Read her book and see why I can so surely make that assessment.

Focus on Afro-American Religious History-Harvard University Divinity School alumni Help Shape New Field-Dr. Davis Willis, PhD

1975, a black, and an associate professor of religion at Amherst College in Amherst, Mass., and Dr. Randall Burkett, an anglo, is director of the social studies office at the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., and are both historians of the Black Church in America.

As the Harvard Divinity Bulletin in a recent issue states: "They share with a small but growing group of scholars around the country the excitement and the challenges that come from being a part of this new field of academic endeavor." The field encompasses religious phenomena, figures and institutions dating from the time of slave religion in the South to the presentcentury. The discipline is concerned with the influence of African religion on the development of black Christianity: the emergence of national black denominations like C.M.E., A.M.E.; the several black National Baptist Conventions; the historical development of black theology: the role of black churches in the making of black history as well as in the nation's political, educational and religious history.

Part of the work in this new historical discipline involves reconstructing the life histories of prominent leaders in black religious organizations. The scarcity of senior scholars in the field of black church history—has led to the formation of the New England area of a group that is vital in the activities of black church historians and with the encouragement of another black: Dr. Preston N. Williams, Houghton Professor of Theology and Contemporary Change at Harvard, has named itself the Northeastern seminar on Black Religion.

"If Loving You is Wrong, I Don't Want to be Right" is one of the renewed popular songs of many moon, writes a bellringer. She asks if Minnie Riperton, who died of cancer recently at the youthful age of 31, is the author. She also owned a record company and was listening to a Stevie Wonder tape of a song he had written for her, when she collapsed in the arms of her husband Dick Rudolph. Miss Riperton, who had a breast removed in 1976, entered Cedars-Siani Medical Center a few days earlier but the cancer had spread to her lymphatic system. Miss Riperton was serving as honorary chairman of the American Cancer Society's 1979 national education crusade.

The bussing of large numbers of public school children for the purpose of desegregation was recently upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, thus ending widely-held beliefs that the court was backing down from an earlier commitment that racial segregation must be ending in school systems of the North. The two rulings upheld the Columbus plan to bus 37,000 public school students of the city's 89,000 beginning this fall and Dayton's three year old plan which busses 18,000 pupils.

Generally what the court held in the de facto cases was that plaintiffs would have to bear the burden (school management) of proving that a community's all black or all-white schools were the consequence of conscious segregative decisions by public bodies—that it wasn't just by accident, but by covert design, that a locality's schools were racially imbalanced. The decision may spur an interest in some circles of the country for a constitutional amendment to prohibit racial balance busing. And after 25 years, the fight goes on and on and where it will come out, no one knows, stated one bellringer source.

Until later, peace, and be a good neighbor. They come in all colors.

Make Sure It Works

When you pick up your telephone to use it, it works. That's true more than 95 percent of the time.

And the cost is extremely reasonable. Telephone prices have risen at less than half the rate of the Consumer Price Index during the past 12 years.

So what? Isn't that what the phone company is in business for—to give good service at fair rates?

Yes, it is. But unlike many other parts of our nations economy, our communications system continues to get better and better.

If you have spent much time in foreign countries, you know a telephone that works isnt something that God willed on us.

The upshot of this is that current legislation now before Congress seeks to revamp completely the telephone industry. We commend Congress for its efforts to inject competition into the telephone business, increasing the power of consumers to choose.

But we believe bills set forth by Senator Hollings and Representative Van Deerlin contain features that may severely damage the quality of telephone service. And all proposals seem to promise higher prices for the residential telephone user as well as for residents of small towns and rural areas.

The bill invites IBM, RCA, ITT, etc. to compete but then restricts the Bell System from competing equally. For instance, Bell Labs has invented a remarkable new automobile phone service that the Bell System will not be allowed to offer us under the Van Deerlin bill.

3 Come visit this interesting and unusual special exhibit.

Legislation prohibits Bell from working closely with Western Electric in producing and developing phone services. Such a provision does not apply to Bells competitors who may manufacture their own equipment as they wish.

The legislation doesn't assign anyone the responsibility of seeing that the entire phone network works. Currently, the Bell System has responsibility for seeing that your long distance call gets from your house to its destination. With other companies providing a rance of networks and services, no one will have ultimate authority to make the system work. That is especially important during catastrophies like tornadoes.

And the Hollings bill unnecessarily complicates growing international communications.

We believe that competition ought to be the rule whenever and wherever it would benefit the public. Regulations should be the rule when necessary to assure 1) service is available at reasonable terms to all people, 2) the service works, 3) it is the type of service people need.

Let's phase competition into the phone business. But let's make sure that Bell gets an equal regulatory chance.

And when all is said and done, let's make sure the telephones in our homes work. Like they do now.
