Plans for the construction of the CCC camp here is expected to be let tomorrow out of the city, headquarters construction in connection with the camps.

It is expected to be shipped afterwards and actual building of the camp is expected to start in a short time. Officials expect that all possible speed will be applied.

Plans were mailed to contractors last week. The camp had been surveyed by an engineer and his report sent to headquarters, and it is expected to have been entered into the record.

The camp will be constructed at the County fair grounds, East Noel Street and East 1st Street. The layout will be in a rectangular shape. The camp is to be constructed on a site which has been selected according to present plans. The camp may be occupied as early as August 1st, and it is expected to start soil erosion work later than August 31.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The House agreed today to vote at 2:30 p. m. Eastern Standard Time on whether to support President Roosevelt's request for legislation to abolish "unnecessary" utility holding companies by 1942.

It took that action by deciding to limit to 2 1/2 hours the debate on a motion to approve the Senate "death sentence" provision. The House Interstate Commerce Committee previously voted to give the Securities Commission discretionary power on this abolition feature.

SUICIDE THEORY DISCREDITED IN DETROIT

One of Explanations Given in Death of New York Lawyer

By Associated Press
DETROIT, July 1.—Any theory that Howard Carter Dickinson may have killed himself was discredited today by the report of Dr. Robert Kaltman, Wayne County medical examiner, who performed the autopsy.

Suicide was one of the explanations given officers by William Lee Ferris, 26, in statements after his arrest as a suspect.

Kaltman said he found no marks which showed that Dickinson had struggled before his death.

By Associated Press
DETROIT, July 1.—William Lee Ferris, hotel habitue and man of many aliases, admitted at police headquarters yesterday, Chief of Detectives Fred W. Frahm announced at daybreak, that he shot and killed Howard Carter Dickinson, prominent New York attorney last Thursday morning. Ferris inhaled, however, Frahm said, that the shooting was done with a revolver he seized from Dickinson's hand.

The slaying, Frahm said, climaxed a party that began in Dickinson's downtown hotel Wednesday evening and ended in Rouge Park, 12 miles from the city, where the attorney's body, sprawled at the side of a deserted road was "picked up" at dawn Thursday.

Didn't Know Dickinson
Ferris, the detective chief said, claimed neither he nor any of the three young women arrested with him in Fort Wayne, Ind., Saturday, had any previous acquaintance with Dickinson or his connection with the $40,000,000 estate of William H. Yawkey, lumberman and sportsman. It was to investigate a claim against this estate that Dickinson came to Detroit last week.

The three young women, Loretta Jackson, 27; Flossie Jackson, 24, her sister, and Lillian Winles, 24, also known as Lillian Miller, are held as material witnesses.

"Nobody knew anything about Dickinson except that he was a guy who wanted to buy some drinks," Frahm quoted Ferris as saying. He denied having promised a taxicab driver some business Wednesday evening. Andrew J. Smygen, the taxi driver, told police Ferris had said he was planning a party with a "big shot lawyer who had a lot of money," and (Continued on Page 4)

Prosser, gospel singer, who will arrive in Memphis tonight to conduct the singing program during a two-week revival at the First Baptist Church, Mr. Prosser is a graduate of gospel music from the Southwestern Baptist Seminary at Fort Worth and has been employed there as a professor of music. He is also director of music at the Broadway Baptist Church, Fort Worth.

The services will be conducted by Rev. O. K. Webb, pastor. Night services will be held in an open air tabernacle near the church, Webb announced this morning.

The adult education program in Hall County, brought to a close last week, will be reopened and continued for a period of nine weeks, local officials were notified by George H. Fern, director of the adult education program, Texas Relief Commission.

According to Mr. Fern's communication with Miss Vera "Tops" Gilreath, county superintendent, the program will be continued with its present personnel. However, Relief Administrator A. C. Hoffman must pass upon the eligibility of instructors to receive the relief employment.

If any of the teachers are found to be ineligible for the new period, their classes will be dropped and no new instructors added, Miss Gilreath stated.

The county will have a maximum of 56 classes, the number that was in operation at the close of the original program. It is impossible to estimate the number that will be cut off by the relief administrator.

Train Runs Wild, Wrecks Whole Neighborhood

A section of the bridge toppled down. A pedestrian and an auto on the bridge fell into the street. Two men in the auto were injured. Then the train plowed into a hotel. The walls fell in, injuring the proprietor. To complete its destruction, the runaway bowled over a telephone pole, smacked a railroad car on a siding and blocked the street with wreckage.

EX-CONVICT'S PROBLEM

NOW that Alabama Pitts, the athlete who got his try-out in Sing Sing prison, has made his bow to the baseball fans, it is worth while to have a look at some of the implications in his case.

Pitts emerged from Sing Sing to be offered a baseball contract by which he could earn an honest living. An official ruled that baseball was too pure a game to be contaminated by the presence of an ex-convict, and the whole baseball community got up on its hind legs in a display of indignation that did credit to the sports world's sense of fair play.

As a result of this outburst the idiotic ruling was reversed, and Pitts got his chance. From now on he will sink or swim by his own powers, like anyone else.

In all of this argument, one point well worth thinking about was kept to the fore: it is useless to urge the ex-convict to "go straight" if society refuses to give him the job that will enable him to earn an honest living. This is one of those self-evident propositions that need no arguing, of course; but we often manage to forget about it, and the value of the Pitts case was that it reminded us of the way in which society must cooperate if it is to redeem its one-time law breakers.

Pitts got his chance, and everybody was glad to see him get it. But how about all the other men who leave prison and who are not lucky enough to find a baseball contract awaiting them? What happens to them?

Pitts, after all, was only one among many. What would have happened to him if, instead of being a talented ball player, he had been, say, a talented filing clerk; would his chances of finding a job have been good?

That question hardly needs to be answered. His chances would have been very bad indeed. There are too few jobs and too many men looking for them. Few employers will take on a man with a prison record when they can get plenty of men who have never broken any law.

Natural enough, such an attitude, certainly; yet it puts a tragic obstacle in the path of the man who has been in prison and who doesn't want to go back there. He makes contacts in prison, in spite of himself—contacts with lawless circles that will welcome him gladly if he decides to return to crime. If he can't get a job, it is pathetically easy to see how he might turn to such circles for help.

The story of Alabama Pitts dramatized the ex-convict's predicament. It ended happily, because the sports world rallied to Pitts' support. It might have had a different ending if his talents had happened to lie in some other field than baseball.

Summer Sweethearts By Mabel McElliott © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY KATHARINE STRYKHURST, 20 and beautiful, allows her emotions to rule when she marries MICHAEL HEATHEROE, young riding instructor who comes into a title and fortune. Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother is snobbish. The night following his marriage Michael is injured in a traffic accident and when he regains consciousness his memory is impaired. He forgets the marriage. Katharine, heartbroken, believes he has deserted her. She goes to New Mexico to forget. Wandering off for an early morning stroll, Katharine becomes lost in the desert.

Michael arrives to explain and beg forgiveness. He hires a plane to search for Katharine. After a long hunt she is rescued.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XLIV

Zoe said, "My dear, I'm terribly sorry. I knew you'd have to know sooner or later, but I hoped it would be some other way—" The marriage certificate of Michael Heatheroe and Katharine Strykhurst lay on the table between her and Dr. Kaye. He glanced at it, glanced away. "But I had thought," he said in a puzzled tone, "when she left I certainly thought—" Zoe patted his hand. "I don't know what this is all about," she said. "But I'm certain Katharine never meant to hurt anyone. She must have had a very good reason for not telling us."

The lean, ascetic young doctor flushed under his recent tan. "I don't doubt it." "You—you were crazy about her, weren't you?" Zoe asked simply. He nodded. "I've been there, myself," she added after a moment. "I guess you know about that. Loving anyone and find out you don't count, and feeling nothing's worth while... but you know all about that. You saved me from something terrible. I'll never forget it. That's why I wish I could help now." "It's all right," Dr. Kaye muttered. "It's my own fault. I was just a fool, I guess."

OUT OUR WAY

By "Cowboy" Williams

Much, much later, after he had gone, Zoe reviewed the scene, remembering the way he had looked—the hurt in his eyes. She had tucked the tell-tale document away in an envelope and had mailed it to Katharine at Silencia, Roanne, New Mexico. With that out of her hands, she felt definitely safer. It was a pity Dr. Kaye had had to learn the news thus. If it had not been for Gracia and her faithful shepherd dog it never would have happened. Gracia was definitely a trouble maker, but this time she had been an unwitting one. Zoe went through the morning room. Gerda was picking up fallen flower petals; there were late chrysanthemums in all the vases. Gerda turned, holding something out to Zoe. "I guess the doctor dropped this." Zoe took it. John Kaye's pigskin glove. It was a special golfing glove, one of an old and beloved pair. She recognized it. "Thanks, Gerda. I'll see he gets it."

She went upstairs. Her own beautiful room was in perfect order. Her dinner dress, an affair of delicate blue lace, was laid out on the bed. Her little buckled slippers and transparent stockings were there, too. Gerda flung herself down on the taffeta-covered chaise longue and closed her eyes. She had John Kaye's glove in her hand. How he must have loved Kaye, to look so troubled when he learned of her deception! Zoe shivered a little; there was a man any girl might love with an aching tenderness. She had always noticed him, growing up. But he had been Katharine's special friend. Then the night he had worked over Zoe, after her mad attempt to kill herself, she had begun to think of him again. She had refused to admit it, hating to mark herself as light and fickle, but actually before she had reached Colorado on her trip in search of health she had admitted Dr. Kaye to the secret places of her heart. Gibbs had thus been easily blotted out. She could look back at Gibbs now as at a far-off figure in another existence. She had grown up since that night. She wouldn't be foolish about this. She'd keep out of John Kaye's way. She respected him, honored him. If the sound of his quiet, authoritative voice stirred her more than a little, she would let her feelings go no further than that. "But, oh, what a lucky girl she would be who was singled out by this serious, gentle, head-smacking young man!"

"Not for me," said Zoe, springing to her feet and dashing into the bathroom to run a luxurious tub. "Talking to yourself, darling?" Mrs. Parker wandered in, wrapped in a negligee of dull rose, her pretty hair set in scalloped waves and delicately pinned waves. "I was just muttering away," Zoe said gaily. Zoe's mother established herself on the chaise. "I was just talking to Daddy about the move into town, and he's for it," she said animatedly. "He found a penthouse in a building over east—57th Street. I think he said, Anyhow, the oddest thing—Dr. Kaye lives in the building." Zoe, bending over a half-opened drawer of gossamer underthings, felt a rosy tide of color flooding to her cheeks. She gave herself a steady movement before she answered. "That comes under the head of co-incidences, doesn't it?" Her tone was so dry that Mrs. Parker said, rather anxiously, "You don't like him, darling? Is that it?" Zoe hastened to deny this. "Oh, I think he's an admirable person—but hardly in my age and weight class, do you think?" "Darling, don't be flippanant! And do promise to be courteous to him when we meet." "I can promise that, well enough," Zoe said. "Dearest Mums, don't worry. I'll be lovely to him. Although I don't suppose we'll see him much. That's the way apartment house life is; you never see your next-door neighbor."

Side Glances

By George Clark

John Kaye went back to the Strykhurst house with a heavy heart. That Katharine should be actually married to another man was a stunning blow. But that she hadn't confided the news to him was more crushing still. Poor child—she had few people to confide in, the young physician mused, watching Bertine reside at her dinner table later. Bertine, massaged, corseted, groomed to the last inch of her healthy, middle-aged body, beamed at him, little suspecting the thoughts her young kinsman was directing at her. "Gracia is coming over for bridge later, John. Can we count on your support?" He answered as graciously as he could. His thoughts were far away. "I'll be glad to, although I may have a call from town. Miss Mearsham telephoned me just before dinner. She's to call later. Something about a consultation at the Medical Centre—" Bertine pouted. "Oh, you doctors! Always on the wing. I hope it doesn't go through. Gracia will be so disappointed. You knew her engagement to Captain Byrne was off, didn't you? Gracia decided they just weren't meant for each other." John Kaye scarcely knew what he ate. The soufflé on his plate was delicious. He scarcely touched it. His office nurse telephoned just as coffee was being served in the drawing room, and as Gracia McIvaine bustled in. "Why, Dr. John, we meet again! Wasn't that dog fight too awful?" Drat the woman, thought the man resentfully, making his excuses and plunging out to the telephone.

Miss Mearsham was properly apologetic. The doctor needn't come in tonight, after all. Dr. Abbott said tomorrow morning would do just as well.

John Kaye came back to the drawing room and lied manfully. He had to rush, he said. He would be back as quickly as he could. Perhaps they would not have finished the rubber...

Regretfully Gracia watched him go. John could hear Victor Strykhurst telephoning Mrs. Willets, asking if Lucy wanted to make a fourth. He felt guilty, but escape was too tempting.

Driving past the Parker's gateway, he felt an unaccountable impulse to see Zoe again. Her warm and impulsive sympathy had been very sweet that afternoon. Perhaps he could talk to her about Katharine.

The girl who came toward him was fragrant in delicate blue lace. Her brown curls rioted about her small head. Her eyes were fringed with dark lashes.

"Why, Zoe's a beauty," thought John Kaye, surprised that he had not noticed it before. He had always counted her a mere child, frivolous and amusing today she had shown a sweeter, deeper, more womanly side. Some ancient scales seemed to have fallen from his eyes...

For a moment they stood, regarding each other. Then the man said, haltingly, "I thought I dropped a glove here today..." Zoe shook her head. "Don't believe so, Gerda would have given it to me, if you had."

That glove was in her childish treasure box, along with other hoarded mementoes. "Some day, perhaps," thought the girl with sudden prescience. "I shall tell him about it."

"May I stay long enough to smoke a cigaret?" the man asked, glancing from the book she held to the glowing grate fire. Zoe's heart cried, "Stay a long time, my darling."

But she was all demureness as she answered him. (To Be Continued)

Memphis Golf Team Drops to Clarendon

Invading Clarendon for the first inter-club golf matches of the season yesterday afternoon, players of the Memphis Country Club returned with the small end of a 16 to 8 score. The local club was without the services of five top-notch players, forcing the bracketing of players five places higher than their usual positions. Clarendon golfers will return the matches next Sunday, and local players already have announced that the score will be reversed.

Delayed because of the invasion of Clarendon, finalists in the country club's Scotch tournament will battle this afternoon for the championship of the two brackets. Results of yesterday's play: Memphis winners—Thomas Hampton defeated Ira Merchant, 3-2; L. M. Hicks downed "Pinkie" Kerbow, 3-2; Carl Harrison erased Meredith Gentry, 5-3; J. C. Ross beat Walter Wilson, 2-1, and L. M. Hicks Jr. defeated Loyd Martin, 2 up.

Clarendon winners—A. N. Woods clubbed R. S. Greene, 6-4; Dick Cook stopped J. D. Webster, 4-3; O. B. Jackson beat O. B. Smith, 2-1; The Jackson erased Floyd Spring, 2-1; H. J. Boston swamped M. E. WELLINGTON IN SHUTOUT WIN OVER HOLLIS

Down Visitors, 7-0, Behind Seven-Hit Pitching

BY WOODROW MURRAY (Democrat's Wellington Correspondent) WELLINGTON, July 1.—Behind the seven-hit pitching of Knight and Morgan, the Wellington Gassers improved their position in the Western Division of the Red River Valley League by shutting out Hollis, Okla., 7 to 0, here yesterday. Morgan worked for 4 2-3 innings, limiting the visitors to three hits, but he was replaced in the sixth when two singles and a walk loaded the bases. Knight retired the side and then hurled four-hit ball for the next three innings. At the same time, the Wellington club, after being held scoreless for four innings, broke loose against Tabbers and Atkinson in the next three for all their seven runs.

Stewart started for the Owls in the absence of Jim Smith of Amarillo, who promised for a week he would be on hand, only to call late Saturday night that he couldn't make it. Stewart did a fine job for five innings, limiting the leaders to three hits and one earned run. But five frames is all the burly righthander can go, despite the fact he announced he was feeling fine, he slipped in the sixth, allowing three hits and two runs, and went out in the seventh when the first three batters pounded out one home run and two triples.

Whitfield completed the frame after allowing five runs—and old Louie Marcum had to get 'em out. He allowed only seven runs in two innings, four earned, which was pretty good for an outfielder. Memphis slowly built up a margin during the first five but when they broke in the seventh, they made a good job of it and before the frame ended, Paducah had scored seven runs.

The Owls were not finished, however, for despite the fact they're leading the Western Valley league, Paducah has no club to be boasting about. The Owls knotted the count in their half of the seventh with four runs, coming when Moore's drive into left field bounced through a hole in the fence and went for a home run with the bases loaded.

That was the last punch. Bridwell, who replaced Cullum on the mound after Moore's clout, awarded the Owls one hit for the remainder of the affair. Whole Story Untold Ferris' statement, the detectives said, failed to set forth a very definite motive and conflicted in so many respects they did not believe the whole story had been told. Frahm's assistant, Deputy Chief Henry W. Piel, said the officers were convinced that all the parties to the case were in custody, however, he said they no longer placed any credence in a report that a "second man" might have been involved in the slaying. Ferris and the three young women reached police headquarters here from Fort Wayne last midnight.

IOWA SLUMS PROBLEM

DES MOINES, Iowa.—The slums of Iowa are fully as bad as those in the metropolitan centers except that the factor of concentration of population is less severe, the Iowa State Planning Board reports. It urged that $138,000,000 of PWA funds be spent for housing and slum clearance in the state.
