CENTENNIAL NOT 'LOST' YET

ALTHOUGH the fourth special session of the Texas Legislature failed to make an appropriation for the Texas Centennial celebration in 1936, the backers of this great event have not given up hope. They will try to get the bill through in the regular session in January.

We have complained of the lack of interest in West Texas shown by the backers of the affair, who apparently have ignored the possibilities of interesting visitors in West Texas during the proposed celebration, but at the same time we are still in favor of the centennial. While it is useless to hope to attract visitors to every town and hamlet in the state, the celebration should be centered in our larger cities, such as Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, where the thing can be handled on a large enough scale to attract visitors from all parts of the nation.

At these central points, all of Texas should be represented, with facts about the progress, opportunities, resources, people, climate, education, etc., presented correctly and interestingly with the view of informing the visitors about Texas—not solely about the cities in which the affair is being held.

To split the affair up over the state would be like holding divisions of the World Fair in different localities all over the United States.

But before we "stage" the celebration, we've got to get it.

The special session failed to act on two points in the governor's five-point program, failing to agree on the Centennial and on the issuance of the remaining $5,000,000 relief funds made available under the 20 million bond issue. The bills that were passed were rushed through during the closing hours of the session after the body has gone on for days without agreeing on anything.

The governor is expected to sign the bill authorizing the Lower Colorado river authority; it is not known what will happen to the others, all of which were purely sectional problems.

Out Our Way

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

By CARLETON KENDRAKE

BEGIN HERE TODAY
When CHARLES MORDEN, reporter for The Blade, is found dead DAN BLEEKER, publisher, employs SIDNEY GRIFF, famous criminologist, to solve the murder.

Morden had been investigating the affairs of Frank B. CATHAY, wealthy and prominent, following the arrest of an impostor claiming to be Cathay and accompanied by a girl called MARY BRIGGS.

The day following Morden's death Cathay dies of unknown cause. Griff learns that Morden had visited the apartment of ALICE LORTON who has reported to police the disappearance of her roommate, ESTHER ORDWAY. Griff accuses Alice of being involved in Morden's murder but does not succeed in breaking down her story.

Bleeker secures Esther Ordway's banking statement and learns her account was closed the day of Morden's death. The last check cashed for $2,000, was payable to KENNETH BOONE.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI
"Perhaps," suggested Dan Bleeker, "Mrs. Malone is merely a friend of the family with whom Mrs. Cathay desires to communicate."

Griff's tone was filled with doubt. "Perhaps," he said.

There was an interval of silence. Then the telephone rang. Griff scooped up the receiver, listened for a moment, nodded to Bleeker. "For you," he said.

Bleeker listened while the receiver made a succession of rasping noises. He said, "A check-up on the Summerville end shows that Robert Chelton did just what you said he would do, or rather what you said he had done."

Griff waved his hand in a gesture of dismissal. "Should I give them any further instructions?" asked Bleeker.

"No," Griff said, "tell them to drop it. It's unimportant now."

Bleeker relayed the instructions over the wire, hung up the telephone, then frowned thoughtfully at the criminologist.

"It seems to me," he said, "that it's a matter of major importance. If what you say is true, this man Chelton must be an accessory. Obviously some man figured in the murder, particularly in connection with moving the body. If Esther Ordway and Alice Lorton are one and the same person, and this man writes a letter in which he refers to them both, he must have done so for a very definite purpose. That purpose was to baffle the investigating authorities. Therefore, it would seem to me . . .

Griff's tone was flat, cold and final.

"It's unimportant," he repeated, and his eyes were staring in pre-occupied concentration at a spot on the carpet as he spoke.

Bleeker frowned impatiently. "You're a criminologist," he said. "I'm a newspaper man. I've solved a few mysteries myself. I say it isn't unimportant."

Griff stood facing the newspaperman, his eyes slitted in concentration, his face preoccupied. But his tone was as crisply effective as the nervously explosive words of the newspaper publisher.

"It's unimportant," he said, "because I know all about that angle of the case. Robert Chelton is the same person as Kenneth Boone. Kenneth Boone has been located. Alice Lorton, alias Esther Ordway, is with him. They're under surveillance right now."

our hands. That is, we've got enough facts to give us the key clew that we want. There is something that's right under our eyes, something big, something that we're overlooking."

He paced the floor in silence, his feet pounding rhythmically upon the rug.

Bleeker ventured a suggestion. "Do you suppose," he asked, "that it's something about the girl's connection with Cathay?"

Griff said slowly, "It's something bigger than that, something that's staring us right in the face. It's not an inanimable clew. It's a big, vital clew—something that's a new angle of the case."

"Obviously, the connection of this girl with Cathay is the key. Obviously, the imperfection of Cathay by the so-called pick-pocket has something to do with it. Obviously, the connection between Kenneth Boone and this girl has something to do with it. Those are things that we know about. We haven't run them down yet, but we know about them. But this is something bigger; something that is a new angle of the case; something that's right under our noses and yet we haven't seen it."

He fell to pacing the floor again. The telephone rang.

Griff scowled impatiently, hesitated a moment, then picked up the receiver, listened for a moment and nodded to Bleeker.

"Your newspaper," he said.

"calling you. They say it's important."

"I told them not to call this number unless it was connected with the case and very important," Bleeker said by way of explanation.

He took the telephone, listened for nearly half a minute, then asked, "Did you get anything else?"

The receiver made metallic noises and Bleeker grunted a reply and hung up.

"Well," Bleeker said, staring steadily at Sidney Griff, "here's one you can play with. Cathay committed suicide."

"Did what?" Griff demanded.

"Committed suicide. They've held up making any announcement until they could get a complete analysis of the vital organs. There was enough poison in them to have accounted for his death a dozen times over. Moreover, from the nature and quantity of the poison taken the doctors are unanimous in deciding that the poison must have been taken voluntarily. In other words, it wasn't something that could have been given him in his food or administered to him without his knowledge."

Griff shook his head slowly. "No," he said, "Cathay didn't commit suicide. He couldn't have. It doesn't check with the facts as we know them."

Bleeker's tone was impatient. "But," he said, "the physicians are positive upon that point. It couldn't have been a case of accidental death by poisoning, or of poisoning that was administered in food."

Griff's gesture of dismissal was that characteristic flinging of his hands, and was made with the greatest impatience.

"All of these so-called clews," he said, "aren't clews at all. The only facts that count are the animate facts—the facts having to do with motive, with opportunity, with the conflict of characters. The things that you find picked up so often in detective stories as clews aren't clews at all. They are circumstances and circumstances can be interpreted in almost any light you want to interpret them. Take, for instance the case of statistics. You frequently hear people taking opposite sides of an argument and bolstering their case with the same set of statistics."

"But if Cathay knew he was about to be disgraced," objected

Too Big to Cart Around

There's slight chance that Michigan will lose its new Little (7) Brown Jug. The traditional trophy played for by the Wolverines and Minnesota each year has had the annoying habit of turning up missing after the two teams' annual clash. But the new one, shown at right alongside the original held by Henry Hatch, Michigan property man, weighs half a ton, is five feet one inch in height, and has a capacity of 264 gallons. It is to remain at Ann Arbor—unless loyal Gophers can "spirit" it away.

W. T. Co-eds Getting 'Fatter And Shorter'

Special to The Democrat
CANYON, Nov. 12.—The co-eds of the West Texas State Teachers college are getting fatter and shorter.
Miss Ruth Cross, head of the Physical Education Department for Women at the college found in a recent inspection that the average height of the Freshman girls of this year is 63.72 inches, compared with the average height of the girls of 1933, which was 63.94. The present average weight is 121 pounds, while the average of last year was 118 pounds.
Strangely enough, with the rise in the average weight there is a contradictory rise of almost 50 per cent in the number of underweight girl students. Except for this condition, the inspection reports favorably, according to Miss Cross. All girls ranking ten per cent or more underweight have been called together and given instructions as to proper eating, sleeping and rest.

In a city-wide clean-up of slot machines and gambling devices, city and county law officials captured 13 machines this morning. The raid was made in the early morning hours by members of the Sheriff's department.
From one to four machines were taken from six business houses in and near the business section of the city. No charges had been filed in any of the local courts this morning and it is likely that those charged will be bound over for the action of the District Court grand jury in its next session in February.

Mrs. Billy Kittinger and son, Elbert, and Mrs. Ruth Grundy of Amarillo visited relatives here yesterday and today.

He plants his corn in seven foot rows with a row of peas in the middle, but he attributes his success this year to proper seed bed preparation and thinning the corn to 30 inches or more in the drill.

Terrace Lines Are Run on Hill Side To Protect Grass

KINGSVILLE, Nov. 12.—Terrace lines have been run on a 30-acre hill side field on the King Ranch in Kleberg county, according to W. L. Wilkinson, farm demonstration agent, and the terraces will be built as soon as the grader and tractor belonging to the ranch are available for that purpose.
Robert J. Kleberg, Jr., found that a field of Rhodes grass on the hill side was not doing so well because the slope was so steep that the rains were washing the soil away from the roots. He decided that the field should be terraced to prevent this, to conserve the moisture, and to bring the production up to an equal with that of the fields having an easier soil and
