Corn is a very water sensitive crop that generally must be irrigated adequately to maintain moderate-to-high soil moisture. Timely irrigations on corn can mean extra bushels at harvest and high quality of grain and bushel weights.

A. IRRIGATION

Corn plants should never experience severe moisture stress or yields will be greatly affected. Particular attention should be given to providing sufficient water during the 3-week period beginning just before tasseling and extending through silking. This stage is the most critical period in the development of the corn plant.

Managing irrigation water to maintain adequate soil moisture conditions to produce good quality and high yields requires a knowledge of how much water is needed at the different growth stages of the developing

B. POLLINATION

The highest corn plant water requirements of the season usually occur during the silking and pollination and remain high for about 10 days when grain filling begins. Moisture stress during tasseling, silking and pollination periods is normally quite costly due to delayed silking and poor pollination.

Producers who paid the fee of $10 to leave the small grain standing on ACR, CU for pay, and the required eight percent -- these acreages are also ineligible to be haved or grazed during the 5-month period.

Producers who are eligible for the emergency having and grazing during the 5-month nongrazing period, MUST sign a register and complete the necessary paper work in the ASCS office prior to any having or grazing occurring.

Our Nation On This Fourth Of July -- 1990

By Congressman Larry Combest

On birthdays, we tend to take stock of where we are in our lives. On our nation's 214th birthday, this Fourth of July, we can look with clear vision at our accomplishments and the challenges we face together.

We are a nation of people with differing views, but we make room for those views as we work shoulder to shoulder to to meet our challenges. When we keep the size of our problems in perspective, we measure those problems with confidence, not confusion. When we look at our country's ability and willingness to deal with those challenges, we have seen that we make progress.

Measuring our situation realistically is our best guide to choosing our solutions. We should not sell ourselves short. We stand on the doorstep of the 21st Century where economic and political changes bring added importance to our position in the world.

Countries experiencing new freedoms look to us for leadership and investment. The United States is the world's largest economy, the largest market, the leading importer, and the leading exporter. This helps us here at home. Just last year alone, merchandise exports contributed to more than one-third of real growth in our Gross National Product (GNP) and accounted for nearly seven million jobs in the U.S.

You do not have to look any further than our own countryside to see the best example of our productive strength. Our farmers are the most productive in the world, with a bountiful harvest that also feeds millions corn as soon as plants show rolling or wilting during these periods of extreme heat.

Pollen development can be greatly affected during periods of extreme heat, especially when temperatures exceed 95 degrees, and can be destroyed or killed in the tassel when the temperature is above 100 degrees. If our temperatures remain this high, some fields that are under moisture stress may also have poor pollination and seed set.

C. GRAIN DEVELOPMENT Water requirements remain high during the early stages of grain development, often described as the blister or milk stage. During this time, grain develops and rapidly increases in weight. Adequate soil moisture must be available during the first four weeks of grain filling for high volume grain production.

Formation of the black layer s a signal of full kernel maturity. The black layer becomes visible after the maturity line reaches the inward tip of the kernel. Corn can no longer increase in weight after the black line appears and reduces if moisture content during the drying period before harvest.

Use Of Prickly Pear

Cacus Being Explored

Texans are taking a new look at a thorny old foe. They are exploring more ways to use prickly pear cacuts as food for the table and feed for the range.

Prickly pear cactus is becoming' fashionable as an ethnic food, and it is becoming more commonly found in the grocery' produce section as a specialty food, said Dr. Wayne Hanselka of Corpus Christi, a range specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Ranchers, Hanselka said, also are extremely interested in using the prickly pear for livestock feed during drought periods.

Interest in the food potential of the cactus has prompted the planning of a Cactus Conference July 21 at Texas A&I University, Kingsville. The meeting, to begin at 9 a.m. in the Student Union Building, will be conducted by the Extension Service, Texas A&I and the Texas Prickly Pear Council.

Hanselka said people eat the cactus as a vegetable, when the green succulent leaves or "nopalitos" are sliced and used in salads. The plant also produces a pear-shaped red, yellow or pale green fruit, or "tuna." Products made from the fruits range from cactus candies to prickly pear sherry.

Hanselka said most prickly pear varieties have spines, but a few are thornless.

"This past winter, some of the thornless varieties proved to be less cold-hardy than the thorny pear," he said. "But the extreme cold last December killed both kinds of pear over much of South Texas."

"Marketing groups in Texas, Arizona and California are looking at new ways to expand the human uses for cactus," Hanselka said. "In the western states, produce companies have well-organized campaigns going for their specialty products."

Dr. Peter Felker, scientist in charge of Texas A&I University's Semi-Arid Forest Resource Center, said several South Texas growers have planted nopalito varieties of cactus in rows and have from 300 to 700 plants established. "With nopalitos retailing around $1.50 a pound, they can grow from 4,000 to 5,000 pounds of fresh weight cactus on rather limited acreage," Felker said. "The plants need to be protected from winter's cold by plastic." Felker said other growers, from Austin to San Antonio to Del Rio and southward, are in business to grow the fruit, or tunas.

"Food companies and specialty firms are buying most of the tunas, including a lime green fruit often called 'tuna blanco' or white fruit, from Mexico. But Texans-" are getting into the cactus fruit business just in time to benefit from a nationwide marketing effort."

At the July conference, Felker said, almost a dozen talks will be given by scientists working

Medic Alert Bracelet

Individuals who have a special medical condition that a doctor should know about in an emergency should consider wearing a Medic Alert bracelet. Critical information is engraved on the Medic Alert emblem, along with a 24-hour emergency Medic Alert phone number which provides more information.

According to the American Hospital Association, one out of four Americans has a condition that may not be obvious to medical personnel in the event of severe illness or injury. This condition could affect treatment. These problems include chronic illnesses such as diabetes and asthma, visual or hearing disabilities, allergies, bleeding disorders, heart problems and dependence on special medication.

Today almost 2 million people are registered with Medic Alert in the United States, but many more should be registered. Medic Alert is also recognized internationally, with 1 million members in 21 other countries.

Persons interested in joining Medic Alert can call 1-800-ID-ALERT for more information. Lifetime membership in Medic Alert, including the bracelet or neckchain and an annually updated wallet card, costs $25. Cold Wave with prickly pear in Mexico, California and Texas.

Dr. Robert McLauchlan of Texas A&I will discuss the use of the A&I biomass harvester for chopping and harvesting prickly pear for cattle feed.

Salvador Valdez, director of the economic development office of the Texas Department of Agriculture, will speak on funding options for prickly pear production.

Mexican scientists reporting on their prickly pear research are Dr. Facundo Barrientos Perez of the Chapingo Research Center, Dr. J. Caballero-Mellado of Puebla and Fernando Escalante of Saltillo.

Besides the discussions, the program also will include displays of cactus products, a food contest featuring prickly pear fruit recipes, cooked nopalitos in casseroles and other dishes, and wine and sherry made from prickly pear.

Manufacturers of ranch "pear burners," or the equipment used to burn the spines off prickly pear so cattle can eat it, will present a pear-burning demonstration.

Marcus A. "Buddy" Johnson of Crystal City, Zavala County Extension agent who is growing 17 varieties of cacti in a demonstration test, said many South Texas ranchers depend on prickly pear to feed their herds during extended drought periods.

"As a result, some ranchers are now replanting the pear in areas where cactus has been fed to cattle," Johnson said.

Bill Maltsberger, Cotulla

rancher and president of the Prickly Pear Council, has a 500-acre cactus demonstration nursery on his ranch.

"As the pear is burned off and fed to cattle, I replant the acreage for future use," Maltsberger said.

"One problem in producing the pear is finding cold-tolerant varieties," Johnson said. "Research and variety tests help here."

He said another problem, particularly in growing the thornless varieties, is that wildlife will devour the plants before they can attain any size.

Because so little of the pear is produced for human food in Texas, Johnson said, local and national markets are importing the cactus from Mexico.

In 1988, he said, 1.14 million pounds of nopalitos and 2.17 million pounds of tunas were imported from Mexico through Texas border markets at Laredo, Eagle Pass, Progreso and Hidalgo.

"Although the Texas restaurant trade and supermarket chains used a considerable abount of the prickly pear products," Johnson said, "thousands of pounds of the attractively boxed produce were shipped on the specialty markets catering to ethnic and Yuppie foods along the East Coast and several cities in Canada."

Rabies In Humans Can Be Prevented

The recent death of a 22-year-old South Texas man from rabies could have been prevented if he had sought immediate medical treatment, say experts with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Texas Department of Health.

Medical records show the Hidalgo County man was bitten by a rabid bat about 47 days before his death earlier this month.

All types of animal bites should always get prompt medical attention, said Dr. Bruce Lawhorn, veterinarian with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Dr. Keith Clark of the Texas Department of Health, Austin, said if the latest victim had sought immediate treatment for the bite, the death could have been prevented.

Clark said treatment to prevent human rabies cases includes quickly administering immune globulin to the bité victim followed with a series of five anti-rabies vaccinations over a month's period.

"The incubation period for human rabies can vary from 14 days to several years," Clark said.

He said the human rabies case this month was the first recorded in Texas since 1985. One also was confirmed in 1984.

The 1985 case involved a 19 year-old man who had migrated to Abilene from Mexico, according to health department records. The 1984 case occurred in a young Houston immigrant who succumbed to a rare strain of rabies that she had acquired in Southeast Asia more than four years earlier.

Lawhorn said that contrary to popular belief, rabies can and do occur in all seasons and in all parts of the country.

Clark said more than 500,00 persons are bitten by animals each year in the United States, and about 30,000 of these victims require anti-rabies ible to rabies," Clark said. "In Texas, skunks, bats, foxes and raccoons are the most commonly affected animals."

Lawhorn said rabies is spread by the bite of a rabid animal that infects one or more dogs or cats during a fearless invasion into a community.

"The disease develops in the domestic animals and they bite and transfer the infection to other pets and perhaps humans," Lawhorn said.

"Children, because of their close association with the pets, are most often the human victims," Lawhorn said.

Control of rabies depends on immunization of pets and other domestic animals, Lawhorn said, and on alerting the public to the signs and hazards of the disease.

"Enforcement of animal control regulations also is important," he said.

Lawhorn said any time a dog, fox, skunk, cat or bat bites a human, there is a danger that the animal may be rabid. He recommended that these immediate precautions be taken:

·Identify the biting animal by kind, size, color and location. Caution children to seek the help of a policeman or other

•Have the animal caught. Immediately report the incident to animal control officials or police and keep the biting animal in sight until it is apprehended. Trying to catch the animal without professional help will risk multiple human exposure.

.Wash the wound thoroughly with soap and hot water. Rinse well and disinfect with alcohol, iodine or other disinfectants. This lessens the chance of contracting rabies by removing or inactivating virus in the wound.

•See a physician as soon as possible for a decision on the need of anti-rabies treatment.

•If possible, have the biting dog or cat tested for rabies or placed under observation. If is is alive and normal after 10 days of observation, the animal was not infective at the time of the bite. A veterinarian should monitor all aspects of this confinement and observation period. The 10-day period of observation is valid only for dogs and cats.

•Wild animals, such as skunks, bats, foxes or raccoons. should be submitted immediately by a veterinarian

Jehovah's Witnesses Schedule Convention relations for centuries.

Muleshoe Officials of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society have revealed completion of plans for a series of 142 district conventions of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States during the summer of 1990.

Spokesman Pat Shropshire said in Amarillo that 59 separate facilities would be used to accommodate 1,412,000 delegates expected for the four- day district convention meetings.

Shropshire said the convention program would be presented in nine languages. In addition to English they include: Spanish, Chinese, French, Greek, Italian, Japanese, Korean, and Portugese.

Shropshire said 13 delegates would represent the congregation from Muleshoe at the convention scheduled July 5-8 at the Civic Center in Amarillo.

Speaking of language, Shropshire said language has been a divisive factor in human "Language is only one of the reasons for divisions among men, however," he said. 'Others are nationality, race, education, and social status. But Jehovah's Witnesses are working internationally to overcome all these divisive factors and become truly united."

The convention theme for 1990 is "Pure Language." The program will stress that the "pure language" is one of truth and will endeavor to show the practicality of making God's Word, the Bible, the dominant force in uniting people worldwide.

Last summer we saw a more striking display of this unity in the cities of Chorzow, Poznan, and Warsaw in Poland. Witnesses, speaking at least 20 different languages, were present from 37 lands. Yet, a striking oneness was manifest by all of the over 160,000 that attended.

Be means of talks, demonstrations, symposiums and dramas the theme of interbe emnational unity will phasized, Shropshire said.

Helmut Kohl, Chancellor of West Germany:

"It would be a fatal development if the external and internal conditions of German unity were not completely clear when the day of German unity comes."

Our advice to you this week is to take care of your heart, and live a while.

The 25th anniversary of "TEXAS" has prompted a series of special events that began on June 13, 1990, Prizes each night recognize the 250th persons with a musical cassette of "TEXAS," the 2,500 persons with a Cowboy Morning Breakfast and a Palo Duro Canyon poster, the 10,000th persons with a Hudsbeth House Bed and Breakfast, the 25,000th persons with a cowboy hat given by

Mammogram Importance

Approximately one in ten women will develop breast cancer at some time in their lives. It is estimated that in 1990. 150,000 women will develop the disease and 44,000 will lose their lives to it.

Stressed

Although these statistics are frightening, women can protect themselves. Early discovery of breast lumps and prompt treatment of breast cancer can decrease mortality in women of all ages.

"Breast cancer can be detected early in three waysbreast self-examinations, physical checkups on a regular basis and mammography," said Doris Scales, RN, nurse specialist in the Hodges Cancer Center.

Scales advises women to perform breast self- examinations every month, beginning at age 20. This procedure can help a woman to become aware of the normal size, shape and feel of her breasts. This familiarity makes the early warning signs of cancer easier to detect. Any unusual changes should be reported immidiately to a doctor.

and fat, which can change over time. For this reason, breast exams should be performed by a doctor every three years for asymptomatic women between 20 and 40 and every year for women older than 40," said Scales.

Mammography is an X-ray procedure that can detect the smallest of lumps long before a self-exam or even a doctor's examination. The procedure produces a high-quality image of the internal structure of the breasts and can detect any existing lumps or calcifications.

"Coupled with breast selfexaminations and clinical examinations mammography is the most accurate way to detect breast cancer in its earliest and most treatable form," said Scales.

"Asymptomatic women age 50 and over should have a mammogram every year. Between ages 35 and 39, a woman should have her first mammogram, and asymptomatic women 40-49 should have a mammogram every one to two years." said Scales.
