STREET PAVING WORK MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

Laid On Half Block on Main and Portion of Public Square.

Work on street paving is making progress according to those having the work in charge. The half on Main near the depot has been covered with the five inch cement and the cement work is being pushed forward on the north side of square.

The grade around the square will gutter in the center to facilitate drainage, the paved surface being the width of the street on the north side.

For the square have been placed ready for laying cement hardens and the brick applied.

The contract, which includes blocks, is completed ahead of schedule.

It is expected that the work will be completed by the end of the month.

The effort will be made to get the section done before the crop begins to move.

The county has an unusually large cotton this year and if the crop is made a new record will be set.

The receipts here will probably be the largest in some twenty years. The effect of dry hot weather, picking will likely begin much earlier than usual.

BALLOTS ARE SENT OUT BEARING FERGUSON'S NAME

Waco, August 9.—Joe Hale, secretary of the State Democratic Executive Committee, announced this afternoon that Judge John Gaines of San Antonio, who at the meeting of the executive committee in Dallas Monday served notice that he would file court proceedings to keep James E. Ferguson's name off the ballot for United States Senator, had not filed such action today.

As a consequence of Gaines' failure to file such action, Hale stated Ferguson would, without question be a candidate and his name appear on the Democratic ballot, inasmuch as any action by Judge Gaines would be to interfere with the Democratic committee's action.

The ballots said Ferguson's name already had been sent out bearing Ferguson's name.

FERGUSON ISSUES DEBATE CHALLENGE

Asks Mayfield to Meet Him On The Stump Anywhere and at Any Time.

Flaton, Texas, Aug. 9.—Following a three-day layoff from public speaking occasioned by the necessity of his going to Dallas to attend the meeting of the Democratic State Executive Committee, Ex-Governor Jas. E. Ferguson took the stump again in this city this afternoon in the interest of his candidacy for the United States Senate, and in vigorous manner with his homely language and native figures of speech renewed the charge that he had been making against Earle B. Mayfield before his itinerary was broken into at San Marcos Saturday.

During the latter part of his address Mr. Ferguson hurled a double challenge at his opponent, first daring Mr. Mayfield to meet him on the stump in joint debate anywhere or at anytime and, second, offering to resign from this race in favor of Mr. Mayfield if his personal record, adjudged by 100 women of Texas, selected anywhere and by any method, was not cleaner than that of Mr. Mayfield.

Mr. Ferguson added that he offered this challenge on the provision that Mr. Mayfield resign himself if the verdict of these 100 women was against him.

Today, for the first time also, the ex-governor produced what he termed direct and indisputable evidence that Earle B. Mayfield is a member of the Ku Klux Klan and, holding up for the inspection of his audience a letter written upon the official stationery of the Klan and dated March 22, from Beaumont, Texas, over the signature of A. D. Ellis, termed the grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan for the realm of Texas.

OLD SETTLERS MEET TO HONOR PIONEER ESTELLINE CITIZEN

Unusual Meeting and Entertainment Held in Honor of Judge R. E. Tackitt.

One of the most unusual and enjoyable entertainments ever given in this section was held last Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Vardy at the old "62" ranch headquarters south of Estelline.

The meeting was held in honor of Judge R. E. Tackitt of Estelline and pioneer citizens from half a dozen counties were present by invitation.

A feature of the occasion was a sumptuous dinner, perhaps the largest ever served at a private residence in the Panhandle. The dinner included a barbecued beef and all of the most choice viand obtainable, including pastries and preserved fruits of all kinds. More than 150 people partook of it and there was left an abundance for as many more. The day pleasant and the crowd comfortably housed in the commodious ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. Vardy, a large concrete block building surrounded on three sides by a shady-vine-covered gallery.

Among those present, besides the immediate neighbors, were: Judge A. C. Tackitt, Girard; Tom Tackitt, and son J. K. Tackitt, of Bristow, Oklahoma; J. M. Frazier, Mangrum, Oklahoma; J. E. Wright, Wellington; Rev. George S. Stoves, Rev. John R. Henson, Rev. J. T. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. John Beverly, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Allen, W. J. Parsons and J. M. Patter of Clarendon; Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Underwood, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Goodnight, Mrs. W. A. McCloud and B. F. Coleman, Childress; G. W. Helm, J. R. Nelson, W. B. Ballard, Newlin; H. H. Davis and Mr. and Mrs. Wade Davis, Baylor; Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Russell, Parnell; H. H. Hawkins, Fort Worth; W. D. Orr, Joe Merrick and Jerry Dalton, Memphis; Mrs. R. D. Green, Mrs. Grover Ewing, Dr. and Mrs. P. L. Vardy and others of Estelline. Among the neighbors were the families of W. R. Frazier, Jackson Collier, Osmer Tucker, Hugh Frazier, J. B. Greenow, W. S. Peterson and many others.

Judge R. E. Tackitt, who served for many years as postmaster and later as justice of the peace, to which office has just been re-nominated, is one of the grand men of this section, whom all are delighted to honor. His family was among the first settlers in Parker county, where his boyhood was spent, and where he and his father and brothers took part in repelling numerous Indian raids in the early days.

Main Street Church of Christ

The great evangelistic meeting at the Main Street Church of Christ continues with unabated interest and enthusiasm. The large crowds that have ever attended a meeting of this nature at the Main Street Church of Christ are in attendance. Hundreds are hearing Dr. Kellem's nightly and the greatest impression has been made. Mr. Podmore has won the whole community with his splendid enthusiasm and his enthusiastic leadership of the grand old songs which stir the heart. He is a musician of really outstanding ability and it is a rare treat to hear him. He is a bandmaster, a pianist of note, a soloist of power and a director with few peers.

Dr. Kellem's is very popular among the churches of Christ. At present he is dated up for about four years ahead. About the middle of March he will sail for Australia and New Zealand for a nine months campaign. These meetings will be held in the capital cities of the Dominion. From there he and Mrs. Kellem will go to India to visit the mission stations and also on a hunting trip. After this they will visit Palestine and Egypt and then go through Europe. They will be gone for about eighteen months.

The subjects to be discussed this week are as follows:

Wednesday night, "The Good Confession." Thursday, "A Model Case of Conversion." Friday, "The Scriptural Heart and How it is Changed." Saturday, "The Non-Conversion of Felix." Sunday morning, "The Lord's Supper."

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE LETS FERGUSON'S NAME REMAIN ON BALLOT

Ferguson and Mayfield Supporters Jointly Direct Canvass With Dispatch.

Dallas, Texas, Aug. 8.—The Texas State Democratic Executive Committee made short work Monday of the task assigned it by the statutes to canvass and certify the names of the party nominees and the names of the two leading candidates in the four State contests in which no candidate received a majority of the ballots cast.

Fireworks were planted all over the convention hall in the ballroom of the Oriental Hotel where the committee session was held but a steam roller that operated with machine gun speed and army precision snuffed out every light fuse.

Supporters of former Governor James E. Ferguson and Railroad Commissioner Earle B. Mayfield, rivals for the United States senatorial nomination in the second primary on Aug. 26 jointly held the steering wheel of the steam roller.

Judge John W. Gaines of San Antonio was there to oppose certification of the former Governor's name to county committees as a candidate in the forthcoming primary. In the only occasion presented and that opened by virtue of a parliamentary ruse of a moment Judge Gaines made a feeling appeal for a hearing and paid sarcastic compliments to the steam roller.

A committee had been appointed to canvass the returns of the election and had made its report. Motion was made to accept the report and enter the necessary order. Judge Gaines made his appeal for a hearing and J. Ralph D. Doolittle, committee man from Gainesville, moved for its adjournment.

Judge Gaines declared emphatically as he left the hall that he will file suit in a District Court of Bexar County by Wednesday to restrain the chairman and secretary of the State Democratic Executive Committee from certifying the name of Mr. Ferguson as a candidate for the nomination in the second primary. Court action would mean, Judge Gaines admitted, that there would be no binding decision short of the Supreme Court of the State, and it could not possibly be determined by the time the primary is held.

UPTON CASE BEING TRIED AT CLARENDON

Testimony Closed at 3:20 Yesterday; Visitors Are Searched For Weapons.

Clarendon, Aug. 9.—Both the state and defense counsel suddenly closed their testimony at 3:20 p. m. today in the case of Houston Upton, 18, charged with murder of Gladys Solomon, 15, in Floyd County last February.

The sheriff's department last night announced that suspicious spectators and persons closely associated with the trial probably will be watched closely or searched when they enter the court room tomorrow so as to prevent any weapons being carried into court. This will be done, it is understood to prevent possible violence should spectators be moved by arguments before the jury or should any not be satisfied with the verdict whether it is conviction or acquittal.

District Judge Henry S. Bishop spent the remainder of the afternoon in preparing the charge of the jury. It is expected that the charge will be delivered at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning to the jury and that the day will be taken up in arguments.

Attorneys indicated that each side would ask for two and one-half hours to make arguments before the jury.

Judge Bishop told the attorneys that they could have the entire day to make their arguments before the jury, and attorneys say that each side will ask for two or three hours. This plan would put the case in the hands of the jury in the middle of the afternoon or possibly a little later.

Houston Upton, the young defendant, sat through the trial at the side of his father. He scarcely lifted his eyes to observe a witness or any person in the court room. So far as noticed, he did not speak a word in the court room.

In the testimony offered today, J. S. Solomon, father of Gladys Solomon, was called as a witness. Testimony of persons in the court room about the actions of young Upton was not introduced due to the defendant counsel, except a portion of that of Lewis Miller, Donley County jailer.

DEAD ENGINEER IS BLAMED FOR WRECK

Jury Holds Failure to See Block Signal Caused Death of Thirty-five Persons.

De Soto, Mo., Aug. 7.—Negligence on the part of Engineer Mat (Ginger) Glenn was responsible for the Sulphur Springs wreck which caused thirty-five deaths thus far and injury to more than 100 persons, according to the verdict of a coroner's jury late this afternoon.

Mr. Glenn was engineer on Missouri Pacific fast passenger train No. 4, which crashed into local No. 32 Saturday night. The coroner's jury held that the failure to observe the signal, warning him that the track ahead was clear, caused the rear-end collision.

Mr. Glenn was killed when he jumped from his cab just as the collision occurred.

The verdict was returned after the jury decided to render an open verdict, blaming no one and had immediately reconvened and reconsidered its decision.

TURKEYS LAY THREE LITTERS

Poults Hatched Later Than June Do Not Develop for Thanksgiving Markets.

Soon after mating turkey hens begin to look for nesting places and usually commence laying in from a week to 10 days after the first mating. The mating is sufficient to fertilize all the eggs of one litter, but the hens ordinarily mate three or four times before beginning to lay. All turkey hens, of course, do not begin laying at the same time, and in a flock of about 15 there will be six weeks or more from the first hen begins to lay until the last begins. Poults usually commence laying a little earlier than younger or older hens, say poultry

Bronze Turkey Hen.

In the United States Department of Agriculture. The average number of eggs in the clutch is about 18, although in some cases it may vary from 12 to 30. Hens that do not have to be broken up on becoming broody and made to lay a second or a third clutch. The number of eggs laid in the second litter averages about 12, and in the third about 10, although there is considerable variation in the egg production of different hens.

Some turkey hens can be made to lay four or five litters, but this is not usually advisable, as poults hatched later than June do not have a chance to develop for the Thanksgiving and Christmas markets and are not sufficiently mature by the following spring to be used as breeders. A hen that begins laying in the middle of March will usually finish laying her first litter early in April, her second litter about the third week in May, depending upon the number of eggs she lays and the promptness with which she is broken up on becoming broody.

Hens that are allowed to hatch and raise a brood of poults after laying their first litter often begin laying again in the fall, but poults hatched at that time are of little value except for broilers, as they require too much care and attention to carry them through the winter. Fall-hatched poults begin laying late in the following spring, but they are immature at that time and poults hatched from their eggs do not develop into large, strong birds as do poults from mature stock.

BEST FLOORS IN HEN HOUSE

Disagreeable Condition for Fowls Is Caused by Moisture Coming to Surface.

The floor in any poultry house offers many problems. A large percentage of the moisture in a poultry house comes about through the floor. The moisture rises to the surface of the ground and evaporates in many instances causing a disagreeable condition for the birds. The best floor for a poultry house is built with first a layer of gravel or cinders, in fact any material that has large air spaces, then a layer of hollow blocks, next a very thin layer of cement. A good practical floor can be constructed as follows: Six to eight inches crushed rock, then a layer of paper and follow that with about one inch of cement.

POULTRY NOTES

- Disinfectants are cheaper than disease.
Keep pure, fresh water always with reach.
Never feed your fowls musty grain any kind.
Fowls, in confinement, to do well, need a variety of food.
Crowding induces disease and lowers the vitality of fowls.
The early hatched pullet is the one that begins to lay early in the fall, when eggs are high in price.
With proper care and food come plenty of eggs. Remember that "anything worth doing at all is worth doing well."

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

FIREFLIES.

"Well," said little Frankie Firefly, "I'm sure I do not think it is fair at all."

"I am all ablaze with anger. Dear, dear me!"

"What is it? What is it? What in the world is the trouble, Friend Firefly?" asked little Foster Firefly.

"I will tell you," said Frankie, "for I think it would give me comfort to confide in someone. Or, in other words, to tell my secret to someone."

"There were some people talking on a piazza one evening not long ago."

"That is not strange in itself. People often talk while sitting on piazzas. I do not mind if they do. It is none of my business in the first place, and in the second place their conversation doesn't matter in the least to me. It doesn't upset me. It doesn't particularly amuse me."

"Let them talk on if they want to is what I say."

"But the other evening it was different—this evening of which I am going to tell you now."

"Yes, yes," said Foster Firefly. "Do tell me now."

"You see," said Frankie, "these people were talking of other people. People often do that. Now fireflies are more interested in themselves than in others. But it's all a matter of taste."

"These people were talking of other people, as I have told you, and then they began to talk of one particular person."

"She said this person was always changing from one thing to another."

"She was a grown-up person—this person about whom they were talking—and they said:

"One moment she thinks she'd like to act in plays, the next moment she wants to study the violin, then she wants to have a most beautiful garden and grow lovely flowers."

"After that she will take up something like horseback riding. But she will tire of that and go in for motor-boating instead. And the next thing one knows is that she will be taking up all kinds of useful occupations, studying how to cook, how to make soup nourishing and tasty out of next to nothing!"

"Oh, she is forever having fads and crushes. She goes from one thing to another. That is the way she does."

"Then another person spoke up and said:

"I know what she is like."

"What? They all asked."

"She is like a firefly," that one answered. "She does quite well in each thing she tackles and seems quite bright and talented and then she is off for something else. She can't keep her light burning for any length of time. Her brightness must be the fitting kind."

"And then they all talked of the truth of that. And someone said:

"So many people are like human bugs. You can compare them to the insects and little creatures and they are certainly alike. Now Alice is a firefly. She can't keep bright in one place for any length of time."

"So they talked."

"And it did annoy me! Because we don't take up one thing after another and drop it. They get a little bit of truth and mix it in with a lot of nonsense. That is what I say they do."

"And I'm not flattered, not flattered in the least."

"Oh, Frankie," said Foster, "cheer up and brighten up and let's not pay any attention to human beings. After all they're only human beings."

"Whereas we are fireflies!"

MADE TO ORDER

By DORA NUTE

Copyright © 1924 by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"I am sorry to leave you this afternoon, Nathaniel," Mrs. Haynes was saying, "but, you see, our Sewing Circle is way behind in their work for the South Sea Islanders. Anyway, Anne will be here soon and she can sit with you until I get back." As an afterthought she added, "Don't encourage her to do anything for you, as she is sure to have an accident—you know we call her 'Awkward Anne.'"

Nat smilingly acquiesced, and when his aunt had trotted off to her circle Nat drifted into a light nap.

He was brought abruptly back from dreamland by an exclamation of "Oh, my!" followed by an avalanche of missiles, some of which landed on his knees, while more of the same lodged on his chest. The air seemed to be full of wild squawks of "Murder! Murder!" As he endeavored to sit up and speak, a warm, furry object was thrust into his mouth, while a frantic mewling arose, accompanied by wriggling and squirmings about his neck and chin.

"Oh, my!" continued the human voice, while its owner stumbled over his feet. Now fully awakened, Nat inquired of the voice, "Who are you and what is this?" struggling with several objects. Then, with a laugh, he remembered his aunt's warning. "Are you Anne?" and a faint "Yes" was his answer.

"Well, I am sorry, but you will have to dig me out of this avalanche, for you see my eyes are off duty for a while."

Hurriedly, hands worked to relieve him of his burden, the mewling died down and the rasping cry of "Murder" was changed to an approving "Very fine, you are progressing." To break Anne's embarrassed silence, Nat asked "What is this?" lifting a flat, bulky object.

"My poems," answered the meek voice again, with a touch of pride.

A flash of wonder crossed Nat's mind as he tried to construct the picture in his mind of "Awkward Anne," about whom he had heard countless laughable tales, in the role of poetess. In an interested way, intended to be soothing, he said, "Well, now, I guess we can spend a pleasant afternoon waiting for auntie to return from her Sewing Circle if you are willing to hear my complaints of the way fate has laid me low with strained eyes, and I would be delighted if you would read me some of your poems, although I could only offer an amateur's judgment on them."

Anne's meekness evaporated as she joyously exclaimed, "How fine! You know I have been trying for a week to get into the proper mood to write a poem on my impressions of how a person must feel when the light has gone out of the windows of the soul."

"When I walked into Auntie's parlor and there you sat, with your eyes all bandaged, it startled me so that I said: 'Oh, my,' so suddenly in Polly's car that she screeched and grabbed my ear in her beak. It hurt so that I lost my grip on my basket of kittens and my poems." Here her voice lost its joyous note.

While he suppressed his desire to laugh, Nat explained how his "blamed old eyes broke down" on him and in her sympathy over his misfortune, Anne forgot her unfortunate arrival on the scene and confided to him how hard it was to keep her poems out of sight of her ridiculing relatives, and of course no one could get the proper effect of their lines unless she read them aloud, so naturally Polly made a fine assistant when trained to say, "That is exquisite."

When Auntie arrived, she was much pleased with the state of affairs, and a tiny hope stirred in her matchmaking heart that these two would be attracted to each other. Nat was progressing in his profession and Anne might be waked out of that abstract manner which fixed on her the handicap of awkwardness.

Annie approved of the long afternoons down in the orchard which followed, with Anne reading to Nat in an earnest manner, while Nat sat with his lap full of sleepy kittens, and Polly with her sage head on one side, offered her compliments.

Anne posted big, mysterious, business-like envelopes and Nat was fairly caught with his bandages pushed up over his forehead, writing feverishly in a notebook on his knees. When discovered, Nat begged her to keep his secret, but her curiosity became acute when Nat returned from one of his trips to the city to see his specialist with a large parcel under one arm.

After supper he called Auntie and Anne into the sitting room, where he opened the package, displaying two slim, blue covered books with the title, "Poems of Arcady, by Anne Brown."

While Auntie gazed in wonder at her copy, recollecting the afternoons in the orchard, Anne exclaimed: "Oh, my, if I could only help you in your lifework as you have helped me," to which Nat made the astonishing reply, "You have, Anne," and forthwith offered for her inspection a compact, brown-covered book entitled, "Personal Experiments in Overcoming the Handicap of Nerves, by N. M. Thayer, M. D."

But, as Auntie said, Anne needn't have been so indignant at being used as a subject for Nat's experiments, for it was all going to be in the family now, anyway.

Ferguson on Labor

In a speech at Fort Worth recently J. E. Ferguson had this to say about the present labor situation:

"I am for the closed shop and eternally against the open shop," he said in defining his position, "but of the other candidates for the Senate, not one of them has the nerve to tell you how he stands."

"We are trying to protect men working in place of strikers by guards and United States Marshals, but it is intolerable that men willing to do work strikers have abandoned need be thus protected. You can count on the people of Texas for any support in putting an end to this condition."

"From reading the hired newspapers you might think that only the laboring man has a union, but there are others. The banks have one. They call it the clearing house association. The railroads have one. It is called the general manager's association. And there are the packers. The union idea is not a new one. It was a union of thirteen States that won the American independence."

"I am not saying that everything union labor has done is right, but I do say that union labor has not done any more for its rights than others have."

The speaker's declaration that he stood for the striking railway shopmen in the present disagreement brought loud and general applause.—Farm Union News.

Giving Up the Game.

Twenty thousand people committed suicide last year in the United States, which fact seems to be a reflection upon our well-ordered life, writes William Allen White in Judge. It would seem that the great panorama which is unfolding before us...

...beckoning with its tomorrows and luring us with big events just around the corner from today—it would seem that that gripping panorama ought to hold us all in our seats upon this planet. We may be hungry, we may be forsaken, we may be cold, sick, unloved and unloving, and yet it would seem that the daily story of life about us, the great tragic events that are looming before us in Europe and in Asia, and the great comedy that should cramp our sides with anguished laughter here in America, should hold us tightly upon this planet. Yet 20,000 of us have voluntarily got up and walked out, left the show cold and flat and for what? Perhaps they are going to the big show, perhaps they are only going to bed. But they are missing a mighty good thing, nevertheless. The spinning world never before has held so much to charm the eye and engross the soul as it holds today.

Hospital for Plants.

A hospital for plants is the latest device, designed by an ingenious Englishman, for the aid and comfort of lovers of flowers, who are often distressed at sight of their favorite plants ailing and dying from maladies for which they know no cure. When a sick plant is brought to the hospital, it is immediately examined and sent to the room prepared for its case. If it is suffering from a cold it is tended with heat; if it has become anaemic from an excess of solar rays, it goes through a freezing treatment. The unwholesome branches are removed, while those that are anaemic are fed. It seems that certain plants are very nervous. Some easily get neurathenic, while their neighbors show undeniable symptoms of hysteria. But special management permit the application to each of them of the treatment it requires.

GOOD HUNTING FOR SHARKS

Unfortunate School of Porpoises Helpless in the Power of Their Inveterate Enemies.

Passengers on the Seaboard... arrived at... days ago, to...

...remarkable tale of a grim battle between occupants of the deep, while off the Grand banks of Newfoundland. The ship was proceeding swiftly in good weather about dawn when the lookout sighted a large school of porpoises ahead.

Instead of proceeding as usual in one direction in orderly fashion, describing an occasional graceful arc in the air, the fish plunged madly in all directions, leaping straight in the air and lashing the water to foam. As they became aware of the presence of the ship they quickly gathered closely about it, as though for protection, swimming rapidly alongside to keep pace with it.

Their number was estimated at 200, the largest school any of the crew had ever seen.

Suddenly a number of huge black shadows were noted stealing up on the school from behind. The sinister dorsal fin occasionally appearing above the water proclaimed them to be sharks. They gained steadily and finally plunged among the porpoises. Instantly the terror of the latter again became apparent as they strove madly to escape in all directions.

In their confusion they dived wildly against the side of the ship. Some were struck by the on-rushing bow. Others were drawn into propellers.

Meanwhile the sharks continued a methodical campaign of extermination one after another of the frantic porpoises was ripped by the teeth of the pursuing monsters, and left to be consumed later at leisure.

The fight continued until half the school had been killed, when the sharks abandoned the chase.

For an hour after, the porpoises clung to the ship. At last, deciding the danger had passed, they swung off on a course at right angles and disappeared.

Danger of Sunset.

The death of PUNCHAL of the ex-Empire Charles, who succumbed to broncho-pneumonia, caused great astonishment, for it was supposed that in the warm atmosphere of Madeira people did not die from such affections, but were cured of them.

The action of the sun is, however, not uniformly beneficent, and many physicians distrust its last rays when it is disappearing on the horizon. It is well known that in warm countries people provide against the sudden lowering of the temperature which then occurs.

Thus, in all churches in Rome they sing the Angelus an hour before sunset to warn all those outdoors to take the necessary precautions.

Expert Criticism.

Perdita—How do you like Ferdinand as a sweetheart? I always thought his love-making rather cold.

Philippa—It is somewhat repressed. But isn't his technique great?

ALITA IS STOPPED

By LOUISE M. ADDELSON

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Tall and thin and swarthy was Miss Alita Vanderveide, with an intense love of art and an intense hatred of clothes as other people wore them.

Miss Alita was temperamental. She played the piano with much force and vigor. Other Vanderveides also performed, thereby, however, displeasing Miss Alita, who had a consuming desire to be known as the musical wonder of the family; and she was very, very bitter against anyone who interfered with that desire. Cousin Chopin Beethoven Vanderveide did interfere with it. A fickle and unjust world, overlooking the merits of Miss Alita, had hailed a couple of Chopin's musical compositions with delight; and the director of a famous opera company had signed a contract with him at a highly remunerative figure.

Miss Alita was deeply pained as, on a certain evening, she fingered the tickets sent to her and her mother for the first opera at which Cousin Chopin was to conduct.

"Shall we go?" asked her mother.

"We shall go," answered Miss Alita. "Otherwise they will think me jealous."

"And of course you are not?" asserted the mother.

"Of course not!" said Miss Alita.

They went. Miss Alita didn't think much of the way her cousin led the music. Nevertheless, at the end of the first act she rose and walked to the orchestra railing, saying, in a voice loud enough to be heard in the greater part of the house, "Chopin, we congratulate you. We are proud of you."

Chopin flushed to the roots of his hair. "Thanks," he said, crisply. "You had better go back to your seat. It is nearly time for the second act."

"What a pity," said Miss Alita, seated once more, "that Chopin is so ill-mannered."

"Maybe," said the mother, hesitatingly, "maybe you should have waited with your congratulations."

"No!" said Miss Alita, emphatically. "He might think me jealous."

Somewhat or other Chopin resented the felicitations of his cousin Alita. Nor did his resentment abate when, the next evening, she again publicly bestowed her congratulations. At his home the following day she repeated the performance before a houseful of guests. Thereafter Miss Alita congratulated Chopin every time she saw him. He commented on this inelegantly but emphatically.

"I won't have that old crow spout what fun I get out of life with her fool talk. I won't have her claim relationship to me in such a manner—and in such a costume!"

"What will you do to prevent it?" asked Mary, his pert and pretty sister.

"Something desperate—and soon."

"Some chance," laughed Mary.

"Wait and see. But never mind that now. I've invited some friends for dinner tonight—Straumm, Freeland and a few others. I suppose our precious cousin will pop in just in time to spoil things."

Ferdinand Straumm, a friend of Chopin's from a distant town, arrived late in the afternoon and, true to Chopin's prediction, Miss Alita also was announced shortly afterward. Chopin became thoughtful, but as he gazed meditatively at his good friend Straumm his expression brightened. He greeted Miss Alita with a gayety and enthusiasm that astonished her.

"Allow me," said Chopin, "to introduce Mr. Straumm. Mr. Straumm, my highly gifted cousin, Miss Vanderveide."

"How fortunate I am," said Miss Alita, quite flustered, "to meet the composer of the Straumm waltzes!"

Chopin smiled. His friend looked dazed, but Miss Alita was unconscious of it. There was another Straumm among Chopin's acquaintances, a much more notable Straumm, whom for years Miss Alita had been anxious to meet. And she was very happy in the thought of having met him at last. But her happiness lasted only until George Freeland arrived, in time for dinner.

"Let me," said Miss Alita, sweetly, "give you the inestimable privilege of meeting the composer of the Straumm waltzes."

"What are you talking about?" asked George, rudely. "This isn't the composer of the Straumm waltzes. In his wildest dreams he never associated himself with the real Straumm."

Miss Alita's eyes flashed from face to face.

"I leave this house forever," said she. "I loathe it, and its inmates. I wash my hands of you. I leave you forever."

And she did. "I acknowledge," said Chopin, after a moment's silence, "that I have been guilty of deception. It was cowardly, but I had to do something to divert her attention from me. She was getting on my nerves."

"Well," said Straumm, "though I would even have married her to please you, I'm awfully glad I don't have to."

"I didn't know," interposed George Freeland, "that I was upsetting things, but I'm positive I can enjoy myself a whole lot better now that our sweet Alita has gone."

"Dinner is ready," said Mary. "Suppose we go and eat!"

Depends.

Contest Editor", The Memphis Democrat CONTEST CLOSES, TUESDAY, AUGUST 15th, A

HER YEAR OFF

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Emma Brown's classmates were all agreed that she had drawn the plum from the pedagogical pie when, the September after she graduated from college, she received an appointment to teach in the high school at Montrose Highlands. Not only would her work be under the most delightful conditions of splendid equipment and inspiring surroundings, and draw, even at the start, a very fair salary, but she would in time be eligible for Curtis Hunt's Sabbatical Year.

Curtis Hunt was the comparatively new superintendent of schools of Montrose Highlands. He had instituted many reforms, none of them, however, more popular than his Sabbatical Year. "High school teachers, as well as college professors," he stoutly maintained, "should be allowed a year off, every seventh year, for recuperation and study. In time we hope to grant this year's vacation with full pay; at present, all we can do is to allow a small bonus and hold the position open."

Emma, strange to say, was not vitally interested in this feature of her job. Seven years! Why, by that time she hoped to be married and have three children at least.

Yet one year passed, then several. And still Emma reported faithfully at a quarter of nine in Room 206 on the third floor.

And so her Sabbatical Year came to Emma. And at its close, back in school, she appeared at the first teachers' meeting of the season, where she knew from experience she would be called upon for a report of what she had done during her absence.

When her opportunity came Emma arose and, grasping the chair-back in front of her, swept her audience with a brave glance. "Some of my Sabbatical year," she told them, "was spent at the university; some of it was spent taking a course in Phoenician archeology, the rest of it I put in making myself ready for—"

—for marriage, studying how to be a companion, a thrifty helpmate and a home maker." She sat down amid a silence that was audible.

Then, smoothly, tactfully, under John Wentworth's hand, the meeting flowed on in the usual channels.

Emma had unconsciously accomplished a strange thing. She had focused upon herself the attention of every fellow teacher, man and woman. And that attention, once captured, remained riveted. For it was impossible not to observe that Emma wore different clothes and wore them in a new way, and that her personal appearance had grown more youthful, yes, more beautiful. The women would have understood had they known that a course in dressmaking and weekly visits to a reliable beauty specialist had been a part of Emma's past year.

The men accepted the change of face value, but were none the less interested.

John Wentworth, watching home with Emma, discovered that she was womanly, alluring, provocative. He began to regret his many years of bachelorhood and to wonder how soon he could bring them to an end.

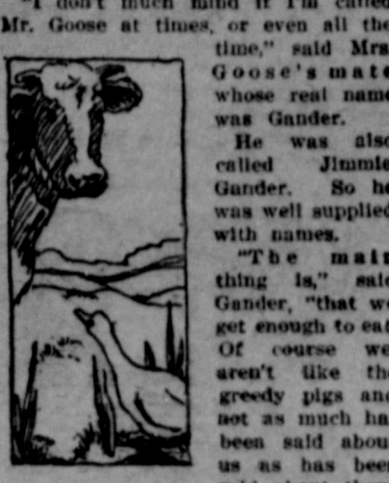

Emma cared for Wentworth she gave no outward sign of it that winter, but pursued her pedagogical way serenely, accepting equally the attentions of the principal, the head of the science department, the history teacher and the young instructor in English. A trifle bitterly the other women teachers compared notes and laid little bets among themselves as to the final outcome. And every one privately resolved at a try for one of the unsuccessful competitors. Emma had blazed a trail they condemned in public but secretly longed to pursue.

Then, came the spring vacation, from which Emma returned with a radiantly happy look in her eyes and a ring that sparkled triumphantly on its appropriate finger.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MR. AND MRS. GOOSE

"I don't much mind if I'm called Mr. Goose at times, or even all the time," said Mrs. Goose's mate whose real name was Gander.

He was also called Jimmie Gander. So he was well supplied with names.

"The main thing is," said Gander, "that we get enough to eat. Of course we aren't like the greedy pigs and not as much has been said about us as has been said about them."

"Well — that's right. We're not like the pigs. But gracious me, we do like to eat."

"It is said that a goose will eat as much as a cow. Yes, that is what has been said and that is the truth too."

"That is splendid I think, for a cow is much bigger than a goose."

"Yes, a cow is very, very much bigger than a goose. One thinks of a cow as an enormous animal, but one doesn't think of a goose as so very enormous."

"That is so," shrieked Mrs. Goose. "What you say is very true."

"I think it is splendid to think of how much we can eat and yet we're not so enormous."

"We will eat all the time and we're not very fussy about our food. We will eat almost anything we can get hold of and will enjoy it."

"We have a regular system about our eating, and a system is very superior. People have a system about eating too when they eat breakfast and dinner and supper."

"But our system is greatly superior for we eat all the time as we've said. To be sure people eat between meals, but they're not almost constantly eating as we are."

BARGAINING IN BABIES

Little Jane had long desired a baby sister, and one day she came rushing home in high excitement.

"Oh, mother, come downtown quickly!" she exclaimed. "There are splendid bargains in babies and you can get one while they are cheap."

"What in the world are you talking about, my dear?" the mother asked in astonishment. "Somebody must have been playing a joke on you."

"Truly, truly!" the little girl declared, jumping up and down in eagerness. "Great big sign about it, on the top of the skating rink. It says, 'This Week Only, Children Half Price.'"

What He Bought. Smith bought a business through an agent as a going concern. After six months he failed, but took his trouble very lightly. Meeting the agent some time later, he said:

"Do you remember selling me a business—a going concern?" "Yes, of course I do," replied the agent.

"Well," said Smith, "it's gone."

Oh! You Woman! He—That sparrow you're wearing on your new hat is certainly not to my taste.

She—I know it. According to your taste it should have been a goose with sauerkraut.

"Later I suffered from weakness and weak back, and felt all run-down. I did not rest well at night, I was so nervous and cross. My husband said he would get me some Cardui, which he did. WIVES OF POULTRY WORLD

Breeds Have Distinct Utility for Egg Production for Family Use.

The United States Department of Agriculture has announced that certain breeds gained their status as ornamental fowl and as eggs for children and grown-ups, says the United States Department of Agriculture, they have also distinct utility value for egg production for family use. There is also demand for eggs for hatching or breeding stock of good quality because of their small size these breeds often have the advantage of fowls where only a very small space is available for the flock. They are easy for children to handle, and the ownership of a few Bantams is the beginning of a real interest in poultry raising.

Various breeds of Bantams, their distinctive methods of management as outlined in Farmers' Bulletin No. 1, The Bantam Breeds and their uses, the first of a series on "Varieties of Chickens." The Bantam breeds, says the bulletin, have been raised with the idea of egg production and, as a result, the average egg is probably around 1.5 to 2.0 ounces. The color of eggs runs from white to dark brown.

White Cochon Bantam.

Some of the breeds have been developed to lay a fairly long period of the year. Cochin and Game are apt to be broody. Since these kinds have been developed from the larger standard breeds they have many of the characteristics.

Reports collected from Bantam breeders show that the average hen lays out from 25 to 35 pounds of feed in a year, which is about one-half as much as a hen of the Mediterranean breeds or one-third as much as a hen of the larger breeds would eat.

A copy of the bulletin may be obtained free by addressing the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

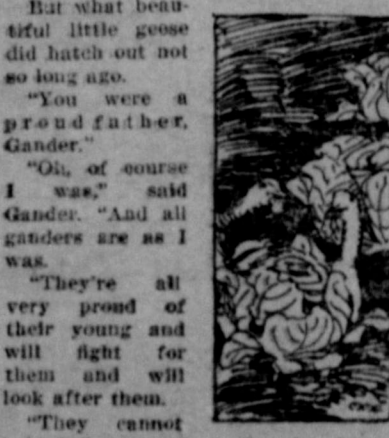

HIDDEN TURKEY NESTS

When Confined in Pen Until Late in Day, Laying Hens Will Go Straight to Her Eggs.

A quick and easy way to find stolen nests of turkeys is to confine the birds from early morning to late afternoon. The laying hens will then go straight to their nests to lay the eggs which they are holding. Says poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, when turkeys have free range they nest only in obscure places and often over a half mile or more from home where they find a nesting place that suits them.

Attractive nesting places are generally about the barnyard. The turkeys usually make their nests in boxes or barrels or by scooping out a little earth in the shape of a shallow bowl, piling up the earth to satisfy the hen's desire for seclusion. The nest most preferred by turkeys consists of a barrel on its side, in which straw or hay is placed. When confined in a brood pen several turkey hens may lay in the same nest, but on free range each bird usually makes her own nest. Turkeys do not range far during cold weather. In the north, where the nesting season often begins when there is still snow on the ground, the hens are more likely to select their nests near home.

The Strike and the Country

The Government itself is "in wrong" to begin with. It was with Government approval that the railway workers' wages were lowered when it was absolutely certain that such an act would precipitate a strike and a tie-up. An agency of the Government undertook to do the dirty work of the railway owners, to give a corporation act the aspect of a Government edict, and now that the strike has come, there are United States soldiers enough to say it is a strike against the Government!

As to the coal situation, the conditions of coal miners are and always have been a disgrace to a civilized people. We have enjoyed our coal at a great cost of flesh and blood. We have permitted our public press to degrade the name of miner until it means little less than a law. We have forgotten that the best of the British stock comprise the bulk of our mining forces—Irish, Welsh and Scotch—men whose minds are fit soil for the seeds of liberty and Christian justice. We have thought, because they belong to one of the most ancient trades in the world, the trade of mining, that anything was good enough for them and that they must somehow be themselves to blame or they would not have so many sufferings. And that is about the total extent of the public's contribution of thought to the mining problem.

The mine owners want a strike because it will reduce stocks, make coal scarce and raise prices. There is colossal irony in the fact that the country faces a coal famine because there is too much coal produced and so many mines running that, in spite of the high daily wages paid to miners, the day's work are so few that in West Virginia last year miners earned $500 and in Illinois $1,000—the lowest and highest figures for a year's income. And in earning that pittance, 2,600 were killed and 30,000 injured!

The mine owners produce coal at the highest cost of $2.91 a ton, often at a much lower cost. And that coal sells for $11 to $14. When the Federal Trade Commission tried to discover where the $8 and the $11 difference went, an injunction stopped them. The President knows all this—it is before him in reports!

suicide. Reduction of rates, increase in the quality of the service and higher wages are the guaranties of railroad prosperity. Minds of the old order cannot see that, but it is the truth of railroading.

And when the service is resumed, the Administration will have no right to light a cigar, sit back and congratulate itself. Settling a strike doesn't mean anything more. Too many strikers have been settled without touching the sources of the strike. The annual chokings of the nation's life have been intended by certain concealed forces as rehearsals for a final choking will inaugurate a national struggle for life. Strikes grow more numerous and threatening every year, not because labor grows more threatening or less American, but because each succeeding strike has a deeper alien fringe around it and is a signal for the activity of Bolshevik and anarchist groups that are not related to the strike at all. These latter come out under cover of the strike season and spread their poison. And each year they find their prospects better. The administration has been so busy with Russia that it has had little time to give to America. Who is it, anyway, that is so interested in keeping our national eyes overseas when they should be scrutinizing affairs at home?

As to the coal situation, the conditions of coal miners are and always have been a disgrace to a civilized people. We have enjoyed our coal at a great cost of flesh and blood. We have permitted our public press to degrade the name of miner until it means little less than a law. We have forgotten that the best of the British stock comprise the bulk of our mining forces—Irish, Welsh and Scotch—men whose minds are fit soil for the seeds of liberty and Christian justice. We have thought, because they belong to one of the most ancient trades in the world, the trade of mining, that anything was good enough for them and that they must somehow be themselves to blame or they would not have so many sufferings. And that is about the total extent of the public's contribution of thought to the mining problem.

The mine owners want a strike because it will reduce stocks, make coal scarce and raise prices. There is colossal irony in the fact that the country faces a coal famine because there is too much coal produced and so many mines running that, in spite of the high daily wages paid to miners, the day's work are so few that in West Virginia last year miners earned $500 and in Illinois $1,000—the lowest and highest figures for a year's income. And in earning that pittance, 2,600 were killed and 30,000 injured!

The mine owners produce coal at the highest cost of $2.91 a ton, often at a much lower cost. And that coal sells for $11 to $14. When the Federal Trade Commission tried to discover where the $8 and the $11 difference went, an injunction stopped them. The President knows all this—it is before him in reports!

And yet the owners of the mines do not get all of this excessive profit. The owners and miners produce 700,000,000 tons of coal annually in a country needing only 500,000,000 tons. Fully 40 per cent of the coal mines are not needed. But they are working. And the anxiety of the mine owners to sell their coal is as great as the anxiety of consumers to get their winter's supply. What is the explanation of this strange state of affairs? The Man Between, the Broker, the Coal Speculator—he is the explanation. It is the old story which Dearborn Independent readers know very well by this time: the breed of those who wedge themselves between the producer and the consumer to make them both enemies, start them both fighting, and reap shameful profits from the struggle. That is the heart of the coal strike. And the President knows this, too!

There is a philosophic view of all this chaos which is difficult to take when one considers the mental distress of the country and the colossal stupidity which causes it: yet the true American, retiring from the heat and anxiety of the present jumble o-things, must reflect that perhaps all these things must come, and must grow increasingly worse, until the blindness of our people be broken through and until they see that they are not the victims of a universal law, but the sport of greedy men. These thoughts have been hushed of recent years because some have denounced them as bearing kinship to the "reds." Let all those who think to shelter greed behind the plea of loyalty, let all those who would cloak commercial sin in patriotic pleas, learn this, and learn it well: when the overturn comes which shall straighten up our country, and drive forth from its bounds all things that corrupt and strangle it, it will not come from the "reds." The "reds" never yet destroyed an evil, they have only increased the tale of evil. But when the overturning comes it will be due to the awakening of a Christian conscience in our people, a Christian conscience and nothing else, a conscience that will refuse to be beneficiary of blood and tears wrung out of any race of men. That conscience has awakened before the swift and final judgment upon entrenched wrongs and bitterness; it will come again. Today is the main hope of the nation. —Dearborn Independent.

BROTHER'S HOME

The fact that his supposedly adored big brother was returning home from college that day had been carefully concealed from ten-year-old Tommy until he came back from school. "Tommy," said his mother, after her younger son had gone upstairs to wash his face and the elder had been concealed in the pantry, "I have a big surprise for you." "I know what it is," replied Tommy unconcernedly. "Brother's back." "Why, how did you guess that?" "Cause my money-box won't rattle any more."

Had to Walk Back.

"You are an hour late this morning, Sam," said an employer to his negro servant. "Yes, sah, I was kicked by a mule on my way, sah." "That ought not to have detained you an hour, Sam." "Well, you see, boss, it wouldn't 't he'd only kicked me in this direction; but he kicked me de other way."

JUST REVERSED.

Doctor: Did he take the medicine I proscribed for him religiously? Nurse: No, sir, he swore every time.

Glom.

The camper huddled in his tent, Was gloomy as could be, He sang this song of discontent, "It's raining rain on me."

An Eye Opener.

Hartley had left a call for seven o'clock. "Hello!" he exclaimed sleepily, as the boy knocked on the door. "I swear I'm so sleepy I can't open my eyes." "I'll bring your bill if you like, sir," suggested the boy helpfully.

No Vacancy.

"So he's graduated from college." "Yep." "What's he going to do?" "Hasn't made up his mind. So far there doesn't seem to be any vacancy in the general managements of the big concerns."

Under Difficulties.

"Does your wife object to your smoking?" "No," replied Mr. Meekton; "but she takes a great deal of the pleasure out of it by compelling me to sit in front of the geraniums and blow all the smoke on them to kill the insects."

The Poor Lover.

He had exhausted the weather as a subject of conversation. He eyed his frayed hat as he turned it self-consciously on his knee. "It's about wore out," he apologized. "Why don't you wear it out?" she asked pointedly.

Appropriate Nickname.

"Here comes 'April Showers,'" said Tommy to his playmate as his sister May's bean came up the walk. "Why do you call him 'April Showers'?" asked the other boy. "'Cause he brings May flowers."

Grateful.

Gladys—My dressmaker wrote to dad that she would make no more dresses for me until her account was settled. Helen—And what did he say? Gladys—He just sent her a letter of thanks.

A Careful Wife.

"And her mean husband thinks she's extravagant!" "Why?" "Just because she insists on having Fido's monogram stamped on his dog biscuits!"—Literary Digest.

Sometimes Seems So. "I try not to feel that way either," said the man who tries to be fair. "What is it?" "My friends have so many shortcomings that whatever happens to them seems justified."

Figuring. Madge—What are you thinking about, dear? Marjorie—I hope bobbed hair went out of style before mine grows again.

Not Customary. "That's a big sum of money to entrust to a mere boy. Why don't you send an armed guard with him so he won't be held up?" "I suppose I ought to, but I hate to seem eccentric."

ON THE WING. "That new cook is a bird." "Yes, a bird of passage. She's going to leave tomorrow."
