MEMPHIS TO BE REPRESENTED IN PAG-EANT O' THE PLAINS

Miss Emma Foxhall Will Be Duchess To Feature of Tri-State Exposition, Amarillo.

Miss Emma Foxhall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Foxhall, has been selected to represent Memphis as towns in the Panhandle, New Mexico and Oklahoma already have asthe royal court to have about thirty members when the Pageant opens on the night of September 23. The Queen of the Pageant is to be chosen by popular vote, and the winner will be presented with the most lavishly equipped motor car in the great Plains region.

The Pageant ceremonies will continue four nights, with change of program nightly. The historical pageant, to be presented Tuesday and Wednesday nights, will trace the developments of the Plains region, from the time it was the habitat of the buffslo and the Indian, through the days of the longhorn, the covered wagon and the sod dugout, to the present era.

On Thursday night, the court of the duchesss will be assembled in full splendor, and will review a style show on wheels-the first ever presented in the nation. This will be a spctacular affair, the merchants' offerings being displayed on decorated floats, which move past the grandstand in a blace of light. During these three nights, each admission ticket is good for votes to determine the most popular duchess. Tuesday and Wednesday nights' tickets are good for one vote; Thursday night's for two votes.

Votes will be tabulated Friday night on a large blackboard in front of the grandstand. The most popular duchess will be crowned Queen

Youths Escape From Local Jail; Are Apprehended

L. B. Williams and Leslie King, youthful prisoners in the Memphis jail, escaped about 6:00 o'clock yesterday evening and left town immediately afterward on a Northbound freight train, each armed with a revolver which they stole from the sheriff's rooms below the jail.

The boys were lodged in the "runaround" of the jail, from which they managed to escape after prying off a bar by the use of a 4x4 piece of lumber. Sheriff and Mrs. Merrick were milking at the time, and Mr. Merrick had left his guns in a drawer in his room. The youths took the guns and made their way to the freight yards where they boarded a train which was leaving to the north.

The boys were forced to leave the train at Hedley, where an officer of the law made an attempt to arrest Voting in Hall County was not so missioner's race and Mr. Williams, Representative's Race Undecided. them, but was stood off by a display from the Representative's race in ed by Sheriff Merrick and appre-Cottle County has not been receiv. hended near Lelia Lake this after-hard of hearing. New radio expert are not in any Sunday School, or paratus for overcoming deafness. The cept a recival. Would it not be people being cured by radio are fairy tales, beautiful but untrue.

These und other unadorned facts shout the misunderstood subject of radio and hearing are related and explained by Miss Josephine Timberiake. who is the superintendent of the voital bureau, which Alexander Graham Bell founded "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge relating to the deut."

More than once the report has been circulated that some individual, deaf and mute from birth, picked up radio earphones and was enchanted to find that he could understand every word of a speech. This is not plausible. To a person who had never learned the sounds of English words, the radio's message, if heard, would be totally unintelligible. Other equally exaggerated stories are also current.

Effect Is Like Telephone.

The effect of radio upon the deaf person is neither mysterious nor su pernatural. It is not unlike the effect of the telephone. Every one knows some person who is hard of hearing. but who can converse comfortably over a telephone. The telephone sends the message concentrated and direct to the ear. Then, too, the receiver is usually pressed against the bone in front or back of the ear and this causes the message to be carried by what is known as bone conduction. Instead of traveling from the outer ear, through the middle ear passage to the inner ear, sound vibrations are caught by one of the head bones and carried direct to the inner ear. In consequence, if the person's trouble is in the middle ear, where so many hearing difficulties are located, he may be able to use a telephone with a success edating than the telephone. The individual who is hard of hearing generally requires a rather powerful and delicate set. Whether a deaf person can hear over a radio set depends on the extent and character of his deafness. Roughly speaking, if the apparatus in his head is sufficiently sensitive to catch the highly amplified

Indirect benefits of radio will be the pleasure they get from listening in, it is said. Radio receiving appuratus is very much like the portable electric devices which many deaf people wear to amplify sound for them. transmitter, and one or two receivers. BIG BROTHER

M I think it's nice, you will agree, brother's bigger, lots, than me. Atthough he's big, the way he plays With me, at least on rainy days. He's eight and I am only five, And he can swim, and almost dive, And do a lot of other things That I can't do, with water-wings. But he and I we romp and run And have an awful lot of fun. I'm little, but it's all the same, As long as he can pick the game

My brother's bigger, big and strong, And yet we always get along, As long as I will try to do The things that brother wants me to. When there is no one else around To play with, then he digs the ground And builds me castles big and grand, As long as I will bring the sand. And horse is something else we play A lot of times, most ev'ry day. He likes to play with me; of course He does if I will be the horse, (@ by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

SUPERSTITIOUS OVER VOLCANIC ERUPTIONS

Result of Pele's Wrath in 1824, Hawaiians Believe.

Hilo, Hawaii.-Science and superstition vie with each other in explaining the present unusual activity at the Halemaumau firepit of the Kllauca vol-

Science, in the person of Roy Finch, temporarily in charge of the volcano observatory at Kilauea, advances the theory that tons of rock, avalanched down from the sides of the crater, have choked the vent through which Mother Nature usually eases the pressure on the earth by pouring forth surplus lava into the great pit, raising the lava lake in the crater and withdrawing the flery substance from the crater when pres sure has been more than relieved.

The lava underneath the surface, unuble to find its way into the open, generates gas which blasts its way out of the vent, carrying with it tons of earthquakes shake down further avalanches from the crater sides, which again may block the vent in an unending circle, according to the theory.

But the Hawaiians have returned to history and tradition, to the act of the brave Kapiolani, the Christian princess who dared the wrath of Pele, the fire goddess, exactly 100 years ago. They say that Pele waited a century to be come "huhu" or angry, with the people of the princess and to vent her wrath for Kapiolani's impious act.

In December, 1824, the tale runs, the Princess Kapiolani, converted to Christianity by the first missionaries who came in 1820, forsook the worship of her people. She journeyed from Hilo on the brink of Halemaumau. She ate of the "tabu," or forbidden berries, of insult to the goddess. She stood on two years than I have in the past. the brink of the crater, with its everactive lava lake below, and cried to for the widow; Pele: "Jehovah is most powerful, Je best of luck, I remain hovah is my God. I defy thee, Pele.

Hawaiians stood in awe while she spoke. Pele, they said, would surel; rise in her wrath, make the earth tremble and cast forth the seething lava of her lake, as she did in 1790 when the army of the high chief Keous was annihilated. But nothing hap-

Kapiolani had won a great moral victory, but today the Hawalians shake their heads, some of them saying that Pele merely walted 100 years to open her campaign of vengeance.

Odd Time Recorder Familiar to Indians

A sort of primitive sundial was sometimes set up by a Bellacoola in dian traveler to record, for the benefit of those following him, the time which had elapsed since he had left This was used only where one fol lowed another, not as a true sundial to tell the time of day. The Carrier also used it. This time recorder consisted of a twig made into a circular hoop about six luches in diameter, by twisting the ends together, and fastened firmly to a slanting stick stuck up in the smooth earth. The Bellacoola, who so commonly traveled up and down the Bellacoola river, frequently put one of these upon the sandy river beach. Fire more or less circular shadow of the hoop was marked in the soil, and the distance that it had traveled from the mark indicated how long the recorder had been standing. If the one following was traveling in a river canoe and saw the shadow was near the mark, his canoe party might pole hard in an effort to catch up, but if the shadow were far away he knew that it was probably useless to try to overtake the one ahead.

OF THE WAR ALLIES

Yet It Is a Country of a Million People.

Washingon.-When France elects a new president or England reorganizes her cabinet the news is flashed around

"Yet Asir is a country of a million people, it was associated with the allies in the war, and it was playing its part in the ancient world when our European ancestors were dressing in skins and living in caves." says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

One Sure Boundary.

"Where is Asir? The one certain statement on that point is that its western boundary is the Red sea. It lies between the southern border of Hedjaz-wherever that border isand the northern frontier of Yemenwherever that is. Even more hazy is its eastern delimitation from Nedi. "Asir's vague boundaries comprise one of the least nomadic peoples of the Arabian peninsulas. Its mountains make it as independent as little Montenegro once was; its fertile valleys offer every inducement for the roving Arab to settle down.

"There are Nomads in Asir, how ever, notably a tribe who, theologically, are fundamentalist Moham medans and, from their appearance have been called the 'hairy heretics. They declined to recognize any caliphs after the death of All, the prophet's son-in-law. They let their heavy hair grow in huge, bushy mops, suggesting the fluffy American girls' 'bob,' be cause it protects them from the blistering sun. This style of headdress is not peculiar to Asir. It prevails among the Arabian desert nomads. "Yemen, to the south of Asir, is known because of Mocha, its one-time coffee center. Hedlaz, to the north, is widely advertised, if not known, be cause of its holy city, Mecca. No Eurepean had visited some of Asir's towns until the little district made common cause with the ailies in the hope of throwing off the Turkish yoke.

Capital le City of Hute.

"It was only recently that an offi cial in India visited Asir's capital Sabiyah, and gave the outside world the first description of this curious seat of government-a city of huts. squalid; they are circular, bee-hive structures, made of clay laid upon a palmleaf base. A recent Emir denesday evening with S. G. Hinton cided to build a more distinctive and family. Delicious ice cream and executive mansion, so he chose mud brick and had erected a three-story palace. A few wealthy merchants copled this innovation.

"The coast of Asir is a lowland one 20 or 30 miles wide, and back of this strip lie the mountains and valleys which are virtually unknown."

Deer Learn Quickly

Washington.-The bureau of national parks reports that the deer in Glacier National park, quick to learn the advantage of the immunity furnished by Uncle Sam's protective arm, have remained in the vicinity of the park administration buildings all winter. About 150 of the white-tailed variety came down from the inaccessible Rocky mountain recesses when winter first set in and they have depended on rations given them daily by the forest rangers,

Tricked by Gypsies

Mahanoy City, Pa .- Mr. and Mrs. Lesco Chubak of Trenton, N. J., reported to state police that while visiting here they had been swindled by gypsies out of their life savings of more than $3,000. One of the fortune tellers, they asserted, predicted that Chubak would die and that his wife would go insane unless the fates were propitiated with money. The couple said they turned the money over to win the gypsies' intercession.

"What's in a Name?" By MILDRED MARSHALL

HILDEGARDE

HILDEGARDE is very popular in this country, though her origin is almost lost to sight in Norse mythology. The name means "battle maid the warrior maidens of the wild North.

Hildegarde's direct predecessor was Hildur, chief among the Valkyrier. In England there was a Deiran princess Hildur who became the boly abbess of Whitby, succeeding St. Begga.

The mother of Rolf Gangr, pro genitress of English royalty, who vainly besought Harald Harfagre not to banish her sons from Norway, was named Hildr. Hildelidis is a popular Anglo-Saxon name Hildegarde was first bestowed upon an abbess in the Palatina who was noted for her sanctity and who died as late as 1004. In honor of the holy woman, Hildegarde is still very popular and in common use among German ladies. In Denmark, the same name has been corrupted Ollegard The Gothic queens of Spain bore a name almost identical, Hilduara, mean ing battle prudence.

Amber is Hildegarde's talismanic stone. It is said to protect her from danger and disease, and to strengthen the health of her mind and body. It is particularly lucky for singers, preserving and clarifying the voice, according to old superstition. Friday is her lucky day and 7 her lucky number.

F. L. U. Of A. Picnic Is Well Attended Despite Rainfall

Several Hundred Persons Attend Picnic Friday Afternoon. Vis-iting Speakers Are Present.

The two-day Farm Labor Union Picnic at Deep Lake hat Thursday and Friday was, in many ways, a success, notwithstanding the unfavegable weather conditions. But you, Mr. Merchant, must go after it if you are to get your share. The people of this community must live, and to live they have to buy what you have to sell. If you were the only man in the world selling your line you might get by without advertising it, but you are not. This being true, it is equally true that people will go to the merchant who tells them about his merchandise, his prices and service, rather than to a merchant who has so little pride in his business that he seems afraid to advertise what he has for sale.

"We'll not need that," he said. One of the miners gathered up their extra blankets while the other took a load of firewood.

As soon as they had gone Joyce cried breathlessly, "You fought them." Jack looked at her and his eyes softened. All men answered to the appeal of her beauty. "We had a little argument. They couldn't see it my way. But they're satisfied now." Moya bit her lower lip. Her eyes were shining with tears. A queer emotion welled up in her heart. But It was Joyce who put their thanks into words.

"You saved us. You're the bravest man I ever saw," she cried.

A deeper color rose to the embarrassed face of the young man. "I expect you didn't need any saving to speak of. The boys got too ambitious. That's about all." He was thinking that she was the most beautiful creature he had ever set eyes upon and thanking his lucky stars that he had come along in the nick of time

"You can say that, Mr. Klimeny, but we know," she answered softly. "All right. Have it your own way, Miss Seldon," he returned with a smile. "You'll let us doctor your wounds. won't you?" Moya asked shyly.

"But I don't want you to go. I'm afraid to be alone. Stay here with us, Mr. Kilmeny. I don't care about sleeping," Joyce begged.

"There's nothing to be afraid ofand you need your sleep. I'll not be far away. You couldn't be safer in Goldbanks. I'll be on guard all night. you know," he reassured.

It escaped him for the moment that Joyce was thinking about her own safety, while Moya was anxious about his, but later he was to remember it.

He had not been gone ten minutes before Joyce was sound asleep. She trusted him and she trusted Moya, and for her that was enough. All her life she had relied on somebody else to bear the brunt of her troubles. But the girl with the powdered neckles beneath the dusky eyes carried her own burdens. She too had implicit confidence in the champion who had come out of the storm to help them and had taken his life in hand to do it. Her heart went out to him with all the passionate ardor of generous youth. She had never met such a man, so strong, so masterful, and yet

Her brain was far too active for slumber. She sat before the stove and went over the adventures of the past two hours. How strange that they had met him again in this dramatic fashion. Perhaps he lived at Goldbanks now and they would see more of him. She hoped so mightily, even though there persisted in her mind a picture of his blue-gray eyes paying homage to Joyce. The storm had blown itself out before morning. A white world sparkled with flashes of sunlight when Moya opened the door of the cabin and gazed out. Looking down into the peaceful valley below, it was hard to believe that death had called to them so loudly only a few hours earlier. Kilmeny emerged from the shafthouse and called a cheerful goodmorning across to her.

"How did you sleep?" he shouted as he crunched across the snow to-"Not so very well. Joyce slept for both of us." Their smiles met. They had been comrades in the determination to shield ber from whatever difficulties

"I'm glad. Is she quite herself this morning? Last night she was very tired and a good deal alarmed."

"Yes. After you came Joyce did not worry any more. She knew you would see that everything came right." The color crept into his bronzed face. "Did she say so?" "Yes. But it was not what she said. I could tell."

"I'm glad I could do what I did." The eyes that looked at him were luminous. Something sweet and mocking glowed in them inscrutably. He knew her gallant soul approved him, and his heart lifted with gladness. The beauty of her companion fascinated him, but he divined in this Irish girl the fine thread of loyalty that lifted her character out of the commonplace. Her slender, vivid personality breathed vigor of the spirit wholly engaging.

Joyce joined her friends in the door-With her cheeks still flushed from sleep and her hair a little disheveled, she reminded Jack of a beautiful crumpled rose leaf. Since her charm was less an expression of an inner quality, she needed more than Moya the adventitious aids of dress.

The young woman's smile came out warmly at sight of Kilmeny. It was her custom always to appropriate the available man. Toward this bronzed young fellow with the splendid throat sloping into muscular shoulders she felt very kindly this morning. He had stood between her and trouble. He was so patently an admirer of Joyce Seldon. And on his own merits the virility and good looks of him drew her admiration. At sight of the bruises on his face her heart beat a little fast with pleasurable excitement. He had fought for her like s man. She dld not care if he was a workingman. His name was Kilmeny He was a gentleman by birth, worth a dozen Verinders.

"Mr. Kilmeny, how can we ever thank you?"

He looked at her and nodded gayly. "Forget It, Miss Seldon. I couldn't have done less."

"Or more," she added softly, her lovely eyes in his.

No change showed in the lean brown face of the man, but his blood moved faster. It was impossible to miss the appeal of sex that escaped at every graceful movement of the soft sensuous body, that glowed from the deep still eyes in an electric current flashing straight to his veins. He would have loved to touch the soft flushed cheek, the crisp amber hair clouding the convolutions of the little ears. His eyes were an index of the man, bold and possessive and unwayering. They announced him a dynamic American, one who walked the way of the strong and fought for his share of the spoils. But when she looked at him they softened. Something fine and tender transfigured the face and wined out its sardonic recklessness,

"The pressing question before the house is breakfast. There are bacon and flour and coffee here. Shall I make a batch of biscuits and offer you pot luck? Or do you prefer to wait till we can get to Goldbanks?"

"What do you think?" Moya asked. "I think whatever you think. We'll not reach town much before noon. If yourselves comfortable till morning if you can rough it for a meal I should advise trying out the new cook. It really depends on how hungry you

> "I'm hungry enough to ent my boots," the Irish girl announced keep them apart.

"So am I. Let's stay-if our hosts won't object," Joyce added. "I'm quite sure they won't," Kil-meny replied dryly. "All right. A camp breakfast it is."

"I'm going to help you," Move told

"Of course. You'd better wash he dishes as soon as we get hot wa,er.

They're probably pretty grimy." He stepped into the cabin and tool off his coat. Moya rolled up her sleeves to the elbows of her plump dimpled arms. Miss Seldon hovered about helplessly and wanted to know what she could do. The miner had not "batched" in the hills for years without having learned how to cook. His biscuits came to the table hot and flaky, his bacon was done to a turn. - Even the chicory coffee tasted delicious to the hungry guests.

With her milk-white skin, her vivid crimson lips so exquisitely turned, and the superb vitality of her youth, Joyce bloomed in the sordid hut like a flower in a rubbage heap. To her bronzed vis-a-vis it seemed that the world this morning was shimmering romance. Never before had be-en joyed a breakfast half as much. He and Miss Seldon did most of the talking, while Moya listened, the star flash in ser eyes and the whimsleal little smile on her lips. Joyce was as gay as a lark. chattered with the childish artiessness that at times velled her sophistication. Jack was given to understand that she loved to be natural and simple, that she detested the shams of social convention to which she was made to conform. Her big lovely eyes were wistful in their earnestness as they met his. It was not wholly a pose with her. For the moment she meant all she said. A delightful excifement fluttered her pulses. She was playing the game she liked best, moving forward to the first skirmishes of that sex war which was meat and drink to her vanity. The man attracted her as few men ever had. That nothing could come of it beyond the satisfaction of the hour did not mitigate her zest for the buttle,

They were still at breakfast when one of the Cornishmen pushed open the door and looked in. He stood looking down on them sullenly with-

"Did I say I wanted to see 'ee?" demanded the other roughly.

"Better come in and shut the door. The air's chilly."

The battered face of his companion comed over the shoulder of Peale. To Kilmeny it was plain that they had come with the idea of making themselves disagreeable. Very likely they had agreed to force their company upon the young women for breakfast. But the sight of their dainty grace, together with Jack's cheerful invitation, was too much for their audacity. Peale grumbled something inaudible and turned away, slamining the door as he went.

The young miner laughed softly. If he had shown any unwillingness they would have pushed their way in. His urbanity had disarmed them.

"They're not really bad men, you know-just think they are," he explained casually.

"I'm afraid of them. I don't trust them." Joyce shuddered.

"Well, I trust them while they're under my eye. The trouble with men of that stripe is that they're yellow. A game man gives you a fighting chance, but fellows of this sort hit while you're not looking. But you needn't worry. They're real tame citizens this morning."

"Yes, they looked tame," Moya answered dryly. "So tame I'm sure they'd like to crucify you."

"I daresay they would, but in this world a man can't get everything he would like. I've wanted two or three pleasures myself that I didn't get."

His gaze happened to turn toward Joyce as he was speaking. He had been thinking of nothing definite, but at the meeting of their eyes some thing flashed into birth and passed from one to the other like an electric current. Jack knew now something that he wanted, but he did not admit hat he could not get it. If she cared for him-and what else had her eyes 'old him in the golden glow of that electric moment?-a hundred Verinders and Lady Farquhars could not Move looked at her and then turned her eyes away. She had understood the significance of what she had seen and a door in her heart that had been open for weeks clanged shut. "I don't know, unless to get the horses," she said quietly. A few minutes later he returned, leading the animals. From the door of the shaft-house the Cornishmen watched them mount and fide away. The men smoked in sullen silence.

Before they had ridden a hundred yards Joyce was in gay talk with Kilmeny. She had forgotten the very existence of the miners. But Moya did not forget. She had seen the expression of their faces as the horses had passed. If a chance ever offered itself they would have their revenge.

It was a day winnowed from a lifetime of ordinary ones. They rode through a world shot to the core with sunlight. The snow sparkled and gleamed with it. The foliage of the cottonwoods, which already had shaken much of their white coat to the ground, reflected it in greens and golds and russets merged to a note of perfect harmony by the Great Artist. Though the crispness of early winter was lo the air, their nostrils drew in the fragrance of October, the faint wafted perfume of dying summer.

Beneath a sky of perfect blue they pushed along the shoulder of the hill, avoiding the draw into which snow had drifted deep. Life stormed in their veins, glowed in their flushed cheeks, rang in the care-free laughter of at least two of them. Jack broke trail, turning often in the saddle with a little twist of his lean muscular body, to suggest a word of caution at the bad places. Always then he discovered the deep violet eyes of Joyce Seldon with their smobiering fire. To let himself dwell upon her loveliness of fine-textured satiny skin, set off by the abundant crown of lustrous brouze hair, was to know again a quickened pulse of delight. When he spoke it was with the lan guid drawl of the western plainsman every turn of her pliant body. They reached the road, where two ould ride abreast. Sometimes he was with the one, again with the other. Moya, who had not much to say this morning, made it easy for him to be with Joyce. She did not need to be told that he was under the allure of that young woman's beauty; and not alone of her beauty, but of that provocative stimulating something that can be defined only as the drag of sex All men responded to it when Joyce chose to exert herself, many when she did not.

Once he turned to point out to Mova some snow-covered mounds above the road.

"Graves of a dozen mule-skinners killed by Indians nearly thirty years ago. My father was the only one of the party that escaped."

Half a mile from town they met two men on horseback and exchanged news. All Goldbanks had been searching for them through the night. The Farquhar party were wild with anxlety

Kilmeny gave prompt quiet orders. "Get back to town, boys, and tell Lady Farquhar that it's all right. We'll be along in a few minutes."

The news of their safety spread as by magic. Men and women and children poured into the streets to welcome them. It was as much as Kilmeny could do to keep back the cheering mob long enough to reach the hotel. Verinder, Lady Jim, and India came down the steps to meet them, Captain Kilmeny and Lord Fargubar both being away at the head of search parties. India and Lady Farquhar broke down without shame and cried as they embraced the returned wanderers.

"We thought . . . we thought . India could not finish in words, but Moya knew what she meant.

"It was very nearly that way, dear, but everything is all right now," her friend smiled through a film of tears. "It was Moya saved us-and afterward Mr. Kilmeny," Joyce explained between sobs.

The crowd below cheered again and Moya borrowed India's handkerchief to wave. It touched her to see how glad these people were to know they had been rescued.

Lady Farquhar thanked Kilmeny with a gulp in her throat. "We'll want to hear all about it and to get a chance to thank you properly. Will you come to dinner this evening? Joyce and Moyn should be rested by then."

Jack accepted promptly. "I'll be very glad to come.

CHAPTER X

"Prove It! . . . Prove It!"

Sam Bleyer, superintendent of the big Verinder mines, had been up to see his chier at the hotel and was passing the private sitting-room of the Farquher party when a voice halled him. He bowed inclusively to Lady Farquhar, Miss Seldon and Miss Dwight.

"You called me?"

"I did. Are you in a very great hurry?" Joyce flashed her most coquettish smile at him.

"You are never to be in a hurry when Miss Seldon wants you, Bleyer,' announced Verinder, following the superintendent into the room.

Bleyer flushed. He was not "a lady's but there was an arresting leveliness about Joyce that held the eve. "You hear my orders, Miss Seldon," "Awfully good of you, Mr. Verinder, Joyce acknowledged with a swift slant smile toward the mine owner. "Just now I want Mr. Blever to be an information bureau." "Anything I can do," murmured Blever. He was a thin little man with face as wrinkled as a contour map of South America. Thick glasses rested on a Roman nose in front of near sighted eyes. Frequently he peered over these in an ineffective manner that suggested a lost puppy in search of a friend. But in spite of his appearance Bleyer was a force in Goldbanks. He knew his business and gave his whole energies to it.

We're all so interested in Mr. Kitmeny. Tell us all about him, please. "That's a rather large order, isn't it?" The wrinkles in his leathery face broke into a smile. "What in particular do you want to know?"

"Everything. What does he do? How does he live? How long has be been here?" "He has been around here about five years. He has a lease in a mine. There was a ffinty dryness in the man ner of the superintendent that neither Joyce nor Moya missed. "And he makes his living by it?"

Above his spectacles the eyes of Bleyer gleamed resentfully. "You'll have to ask Mr. Kilmeny how he makes his living. I don't know." "You're keeping something from us. I believe you do know, Mr. Bleyer."

With a swift turn of her supple body Joyce appealed to Verinder. "Make bim tell us, please," Moyn did not lift the sturlike eyes that were so troubled from the face of Blever. She knew the man implied something discreditable to Kilmeny The look that had flashed between blm and Verinder told her so much. Red signals of defiance blazed on both cheeks. Whatever it was, she did not intend to believe him. Verinder disclosed a proper reluc tance. "Blever says he doesn't know." "Oh, he says! I want him to tell what he thinks." "You won't like it," the mine owner paused, then looked straight at Joyce with a visible harshness. "I'll tell you what the common gossip is if you want to know, Miss Seldon. They say he is a highgrader."

"in be the best judge of that."

Joyce swung upon Bleyer. "You bear, sir. You're to tell me what you

"I don't mean anything."

"And what is a highgrader?" demanded Moya.

"A highgrader is one who steals rich ore from the mine where he works," answered Verinder smugly, Moya, eyes hot and shining, flashed her challenge at him. "I don't believe it-not a word of it, so far as Mr.

Kilmeny is concerned." "Afraid that doesn't change the facts, Miss Dwight. It's a matter of general knowledge." Beneath Verinder's bland manner there lurked a substratum of triumph. "General fiddlesticks! Don't believe it, Joyce," cried Moya stormily, "He doesn't even work as a miner. He owns his own lease." "He used to work in the mines, even if he doesn't now. There are stories "Ridiculous to think it of Mr. Kilmeny," exploded Moya. "We've done nothing but insult him ever since we've known him. First he was a highwayman. Now he is a thief. Anything else, Mr. Verinder?" "Everybody knows it," retorted Verinder sulkily.

"Then prove it. Put him in prison Aren't there any laws in the state? If everybody knows it, why isn't he arrested?" the Irish girl flamed.

"Moya," chided Lady Farquhar

Her ward turned upon Lady Jim a flushed face stirred by anger to a vivid charm. "Can't you see how absurd it is? He owns his own lease. Mr. Bleyer admits it. Is he robbing himself, then?"

The muscles stood out on the cheeks of the superintendent like cords. He stuck deggedly to his guns. "I didn't say he stole the ore himself. The charge is that he buys it from the men who do take it. His lease is an excuse. Of course he pretends to get the ore there."

"It's the common talk of the camp," snapped Verinder contemptuously. "The man doesn't even keep it under

"Then prove it That ought to be easy-since everybody knows it." Moya's voice was low but her scornful passion lashed the Englishman as with a whip.

"By Jove, that's just what I'm going to do. I'm going to put our friends behind the bars for a few years," the smug little man cried triumphantly. The red spots on Moya's cheeks

The flashing eyes of the girl defied her discarded lover. "If you can," she amended with quiet anger.

The soft laugh of Joyce saved for the moment the situation. "Dear me, aren't we getting a little excited? Mr. Bleyer, tell me more. How does aa highgrader, didn't you call him?how does he get a chance to steal the

"He picks out the best pieces while he is working-the nuggets that are going to run a high per cent of goldand pockets them. At night he carries away on them." "Is it as bad as that, Mr. Bleyer?" asked Lady Frencher in surprise.

"Sometimes they take two or three hundred dollars' worth at once." "They don't all steal, do they?" de manded Moya with an edge of sercasm in her clear voice. Bleyer laughed grimly. "Td like to know the names of even a few that don't. I haven't been introduced to them." "One hundred per cent dishonest," murmured Moya without conviction. "I don't guarantee the figures, Miss Dwight.". The superintendent added grudgingly: "They don't look at it that way. Bits of highgrade ore are their perquisite, they pretend to think," Verinder broke in. "They say your friend Kilmeny took ore to the value of two thousand dollars from the Never Quit on one occasion. It ran to that amount by actual smelter test, the story goes. I've always rather doubted it.

"Why-since he is so dishonest?" Mova flung at bim. "Don't think a man could carry away so much at one time. What d'ye think, Bleyer?" (Continued next week.)

Last year 700 persons were killed in London street accidents, while there were 72,000 non-fatal accidents.

INDIAN MAIDENS NOW ELIGIBLE TO MARRY

Oil Men Are After Them to Get Leases to Land.

Waurika, Okla.-Several hundred Indian maidens of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes in Oklahoma, who were babes cighteen years ago when allotments were made in these nations, reached their majority, by virtue of an act of congress, on March 4, 1924. Generally the fact had been overlooked in this territory, but an oil man revealed his recollection of it when he began searching for some of these maidens that he might obtain oil leases to their lands.

The number of such maidens appears not to be known outside the agency office at Muskogee. Nor is the residence of many of them generally known. Some are fullbloods and live among their kind in the recesses of Pushmataha and McCurtain countles. A few live with parents, or guardians. on, or near, their allotments.

But wherever they are, they are now competent to get married and make disposition of their lands, some of them subject, of course, to provisions of laws governing fullbloods and mixed bloods. The lands of many are in Jefferson, Carter and Stephens counties, where oil fields exist and wildcatters are seeking to identify new fields. Some of them have been rich from oil incomes for several years.

The making of a common birthday for several hundred Indian children was one of the many curious provisions of law governing these Indians. They were bables when allotments were made, but lands were set aside for them. Congress said the female babes should have their eighteenth birthday on March 4, 1924, and male babes their common majority birthday on March

An illustration of the forgetfuliness of fortune-seeking and adventurous young men of the country is revealed by the fact that the number of June weddings in the Indian country was only normal for the season.
