There were files of farm papers piled about, and racks of agricultural bulletins. In one corner of the room was a typewriting machine, and in another a sewing machine. Parts of an old telephone were scattered about on the teacher's desk. A model of a piggery stood on a shelf, done in cardboard. Instead of the usual collection of text-books in the desk, there were hectograph copies of exercises, reading lessons, arithmetical tables and essays on various matters relating to agricul ture, all of which were accounted for by two or three hand-made hectographs-a very fair sort of printing plant-lying on a table.

The members of the school board were there, looking on these evidences of innovation with wonder and more or less disfavor. Things were disorderly. The text-books recently adopted by the board against some popular protest had evidently been pitched. neck and crop, out of the school by the man whom Ronner had termed a dub. It was a sort of contempt for the powers that be.

Colonel Woodruff was in the chair. After the speechifying was over, and the stereotypeit, though rather illogical, appeal had been sinde for voters of the one party to cast the straight ticket, and for those of the other faction to scratch, the colonel rose to adjourn the meeting.

Newton Bronson, safely concealed behind tailer people, called out, "Jim Irwin! speech

There was a giggle, a slight sensation, and many voices joined in the call for the new schoolmaster.

Colonel Woodruff felt the unwisdom of ignoring the demand. Probably he relied upon Jim's discretion and expected a declination.

Jim arose, seedy and lank, and the volces ceased, save for another suppressed titter. "I don't know," said Jim, "whether this call upon me is a loke or not. If it is, it isn't a practical one, for I can't talk. I don't care much about parties or politics. I don't know whether I'm a Democrat, a Republican or a Popuiist."

This caused a real sensation. The nerve of the fellow ! Really, it must in justice be said, Jim was losing himself in a desire to tell his true feelings. He forgot all about Jenule and her candidacy-about everything. except his real, true feelings. This proves that he was no politician.

"I don't see much in this county that interests me," he went campat on-and Jennie Woodruff reddened. while her seasoned father covered his mouth with his hand to conceal a stulle. "The politicians come out into the farming districts every campaign and get us hayseeds for anything they want. They always have got us. They've got us again! They give us clodhoppers the glad hand, a cheap cigar, and a chesper smile after election; and that's all. I know it, you all know, it, they know it. I don't blame them so very much. Newton's mother had a mother's confidence that Newton was now a good boy, who had been led astray by other boys, but had reformed. Jim Irwin had a distinct feeling of optimism. Newton had quit tobacco and beer, casually stating to Jim that he was "in training." Since Jim had shown his ability to administer a knockout to that angry chauffeur, he seemed to this hobble dehoy peculiarly a proper person for athletic confidences.

Newton's mind seemed gradually filling up with new interests. Jim at tributed much of this to the clear mountain atmosphere which surround ed Raymond Simus, the ignorant barbarian driven out of his native hills by a feud. Raymond was of the open spaces, and refused to hear fetid things that seemed out of place in them.

As the reason for Newton's improve ment in manner of living. Raymond, out of his own experience, would have had no hesitation in naming the school and the schoolmaster.

New Wine and Old Betties In the little strip of forest which divided the sown from the sown wandered two boys in earnest converse. They seemed to be Boy Trappers, and from their backloads of steel-traps one of them might have been Frank Merriwell, and the other Dead Shet Dick. The boy who resembled Frank Merriwell was Raymond Simms. The other, whose overails were fringed. who wore a cartridge belt about his person, and carried hatchet, revolver, and a long knife with a deerfoot handle, and who so studiously looked like Dead-Shot Dick, was our old friend of the road gang, Newton Bronson.
