CHINESE DRIVE MAY RESTORE HIS THRONE

Japan is pouring troops into North China strengthens the belief that Nippon's long program to extend the influence of Manchukuo is getting underway and will not halt until the Great Wall and the Yellow River, if not still further west, are brought under Manchukuan sway. Thus the way would be opened for restoring Henry Puyi, former ruler and former "boy emperor" of China, to the ancestral throne in Peiping, and for the extension of his domain, under Japanese influence, to all of North China, in addition to North China. Japan's failure to achieve economic domination in North China is regarded as responsible for the current campaign. The map shows how Japanese policies have already embraced Manchukuo and Jehol, and indicates the territories which Nippon's eyes now are turned.

PEACE ACCORD REACHED IN CHACO WAR

Say Three-Year-Old Conflict To Close Before June 15

By Associated Press
BUENOS AIRES, June 10.—A peace accord designed to settle the Chaco war was reached yesterday by representatives of Paraguay and Bolivia.

The agreement will be submitted to the respective governments, which are expected to give it hasty approval. Observers here believe fighting will definitely end before June 15, the third anniversary of the bitter warfare.

News of the accord was received with joyful demonstrations in both La Paz and Asuncion, capitals of the belligerents.

Thirteen days of mediation by five neutral American nations, including the United States, were crowned with success early this morning. An official communique announced the accord, arrived at by Chancellor Luis Briart of Bolivia and Tomas Manuel Elio, Bolivian foreign minister.

Although the agreement provides that the belligerents attempt direct negotiations before submitting to arbitration, it was expected the Hague Court would have to decide the territorial question.

The accord also includes provisions for demobilization and demilitarization in the Chaco Jungle and other measures to prevent a renewal of hostilities which have been sapping the strength of both nations.

Numerous previous efforts to end the war, including one by the League of Nations, failed. Carlos Saavedra Lamas, Argentine foreign minister, announced the successful conclusion of the negotiations yesterday.

Four Persons Injured In Crash Near Hedley

MAIN STREET IN MANHATTAN

Birds-eye view of a Venetian canal? That may be what this scene resembles, but it's really a picture taken during high tide on Manhattan's main street, and that doesn't mean Broadway. Poyntz avenue, principal thoroughfare of Manhattan, Kan., is shown under several feet of water after the nearby Kaw River had flooded. Damage done to the city's stores mounted to thousands of dollars.

Four persons received injuries of a more or less serious nature in a head-on automobile collision on Highway 5 two miles east of Hedley at about midnight last night.

C. T. McCartney, local salesman for the International Harvester Company, was the most seriously injured. McCartney suffered a badly crushed right leg, with a bad fracture near the hip, physicians said.

George Menninger, who was riding in a truck with McCartney, suffered a gash on the arm and severe bruises.

Charles Pierce, of Clarendon, driver of the car that collided with the truck, sustained head injuries, cuts and bruises. Pansy Graham, who was in the car with Pierce, suffered only minor bruises. Her small son was uninjured.

Mr. Pierce and Mrs. Graham were carried to the Memphis Hospital by a King Ambulance and others in the wreck were brought in by passers-by.

ROME, June 10.—Student army officers are to get less culture and more field practice under a new rule set down by Premier Mussolini for military schools.

Everything "excessively cultural" is to be banished from the scholastic program. Brass tuck training, an announcement says, is more in keeping with facism.

FOUR MEN DIE IN AIRPLANE CRASH

Fall 1,000 Feet Into Lake Ontario; Plane Cracks

By Associated Press
WATERTOWN, N. Y., June 10.—Four men were killed here last night when a cabin airplane crashed into Lake Ontario from 1,000 feet altitude at Henderson Harbor, approximately 10 miles northeast of Watertown.

The dead were Archie V. Laverty, about 40, Watertown, pilot, Francis E. O'Reilly, 32, Watertown, Gerald Conway, Evans Mills, and a man believed to be Francis O'Neill, 35, of Watertown.

The plane was seen to go into a spin over the water by Harry W. Green, Watertown architect who has a summer home on the lake shore. He said he heard the engine sputter and saw the machine dive to the water.

The machine seemed to crack up when it reached the water, Green said. Laverty was a mechanic in the United States Air Corps during the World War.

'Beetle' Passes Tests, So You'll See It Whizzing By

If you think you've seen the "limit" in startling automotive design, prepare for a surprise. For this re-engineered innovation with advanced streamlining is reported to have passed a 22,000-mile road test so well that a production schedule of 100 cars in 1935 has resulted. Designed by William B. Stout, famed Detroit engineer, the auto resembles a huge beetle. Hence its name, the Scarab.

Ex-Army Officer Shot; Wife Held

By Associated Press
ALICE, Texas, June 10.—A 35-year-old former army officer was found critically wounded in a Catholic church here Sunday, and his estranged wife was taken into custody.

Father Stodder, a priest at the church, was attracted by the sound of a shot and found the wounded man and his wife. The man had been shot twice and physicians said he likely would not recover. There was no one else in the church.

Officers said filing of formal charges would be delayed until the seriousness of the wounds was determined.

THE VOICE OF THE UPPER RED RIVER VALLEY

HERO FLED FLAME, CHERISHED LIFE PERHAPS the most interesting thing about this man Lawrence of Arabia was the fact that he turned down wealth and ran away from fame.

Here was a man who gave the twentieth century a unique flareback to the age of chivalry. In a time when men in the mass seemed to be all that counted, he restored the worth of the lone individual. He took one little corner of a war in which machinery and swollen battalions were all-important, and made it a one-man show.

And then, having done all this—having helped to remake the map of the world and written an epic of old-fashioned, knightly achievement—he voluntarily stepped out of the spotlight.

He dropped out of the service of the British colonial office and buried himself in the anonymity of an army enlisted man. He wrote one of the most absorbingly interesting books of modern times and withdrew it from circulation after it had paid his expenses—although it might have made hundreds of thousands of dollars for him.

He retired to an obscure country cottage and—at a time when newspapers and magazines would gladly have paid him fabulous prices for anything he cared to write—put in four years translating the Odyssey.

Now a man who could do all that can be set down as a freak, if you wish; but a verdict like that doesn't begin to cover the ground.

What is apparent when you think the matter over is that this Lawrence somehow learned something about life and the rewards it can give a man which most of us never quite discover.

It is as if he had quietly told us that all the things we prize most highly—wealth, fame, high position, leisure, and the acclaim of our fellows—do not, after all, amount to a pint of beans.

The things that make the difference between a good life and a failure lie deeper; they take place inside a man, deep in the recesses of his own heart, and the outward, visible trappings are less than the dust.

This, to be sure, is not a new discovery. Great men of all times and places have usually reached the same conclusion, have discovered that if a man can square matters between his own soul and the mysterious, God-given impulse that drives him forward, that is all that counts.

But the rest of us seldom get more than a suspicion of it. We want the outward, visible signs of success—even if these signs be no more than a fine home in the suburbs, or a 12-cylinder car, or our picture in the newspapers.

That, to us, is what makes victory complete—until a man like Lawrence comes along and tells us that we don't know what we're talking about.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

KATHARINE STRYKHURST, beautiful, 20, is in love with MICHAEL HEATHEROE who runs a riding school. Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother, BERTINE, is snobbish.

SALLY MOON, local coquette, tricks Michael into an engagement. Katharine hears he is to marry Sally and is broken-hearted.

She overhears two detectives asking for Michael's address and, thinking him in danger, rushes to warn him. Michael sets off with Katharine in her car. He tells her he loves her and asks her to marry him. Impulsively Katharine agrees. They are married in an obscure little town. Then Michael goes back to face the detectives.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI

The grim-faced men met Michael on the steps. "You're Heatheroe?"

"I am," Michael faced them easily. There was a casual poise about the tall young man in the worn tweeds. The elder of the strangers said, "Born at Castle Donegal in Ballymenia?"

Michael shrugged his broad shoulders. "I was born in Ireland. My father never said—"

"Raised at Bar-X ranch, five miles out of a town called Watson's Gully, Montana?" the man pursued, quite as if the other had not spoken.

"What's this all about?" Michael asked, with a hint of steel in his quiet voice. "I find you fellows in full charge of my house, asking questions, taking possession without by your leave or—"

"Hold your horses, young feller!" the heavier, taller of the two intruders interrupted. "We've orders to find a Michael Heatheroe, aged 26, born to Frances Albert Drayton Heatheroe and his wife, Muriel, at Donegal in Ireland."

"Well, I've told you I'm he," said Michael in some impatience and it would seem, disgust. "What about it?"

"Much about it, young feller me lad." The detective rolled the words on his tongue with unctious enjoyment, the flash of anger in his opponent's eyes. "You've come into money, and that's the straight of it. 'Tisn't often we get a job like this and get the back of y'er hand for it, like. Mostly it's crooks we're after—

"We're a very well known firm, d'ye see?" He extended, between a rather soiled forefinger and thumb, a business card which Michael accepted with every evidence of distrust.

"Malley & Gerhardt, detectives," he read aloud. "All right, Malley & Gerhardt, tell me about it."

"That's talking," approved the elder, motioning his partner to a seat. "They come to us in Omaha where we have our headquarters. They says, 'Find this young Heatheroe if ye can.'"

"Who's they?" demanded Michael impatiently.

"The English fellers. Two of them. 'Solicitors,' they call themselves. Seems they'd been in Watson's Gully and nobody knew hair nor hide about where ye'd taken off to. Said ye'd picked up and beat it last year when y'er partner made off with the money—"

"Oh, they did, did they?"

"We traced ye to Texas," continued Mr. Malley, crossing one plump leg over the other and allowing the ashes of his cigar to sift carelessly all over the floor of the porch. "We lost it there for some months, saved ye'r money and were sober they said—"

"All right, all right, now you've got me. Where do we go from here?" demanded Michael. "Not that I put much stock in this inheritance yarn. It sounds fishy. Nobody," he added with a darkening face, "ever gave me a penny. It sounds like a pipe dream."

"It's no pipe dream if we're the sole heir of Francis Albert Drayton Heatheroe," pronounced the detective with unctious. "He was the younger son of a lord. Put that in your pipe and smoke it! His older brother inherited the place—seems like they're partly English. They've 'holding,' the solicitor fellers said, in England, too. Anyhow in June this older brother died. He was," said the detective, consulting a slip of paper he had fished from his wallet, "named Hilary Edward Heatheroe, Lord Carden—"

Something flashed across Michael's face, hitherto dark and unresponsive.

"Ah, we've heard that name before. I'll be bound," murmured Mr. Malley triumphantly. He was finding this client an extremely irritating subject. What he expected he could not have said, but something like enthusiasm, at least, it wasn't every day in the week he told himself, that you walked up to a feller and told him he had come into a castle and a title and God knew what all that it meant much on this side of the pond; titles were going begging from all he'd heard. Still it was something. Funny this kid couldn't seem to get the idea.

"I have heard it before," Michael said slowly. "There was a creel—on a scrap of paper in my father's collar box. I remember asking about it when I was a kid. My father said, I remember, that the Cardens had always had it, since the Wars of the Roses or something."

"He died—when?" queried Mr. Gerhardt who had been silent up to this very moment. Michael stared at him, considering.

"When I was 10. My mother a year later. I was raised—I grew up, I mean—on the place."

"Well, that's the story," finished Mr. Malley with relish. "Now we can turn ye over to Mister James William Downrigg of London, England, and collect ours. It's been a long drag, Tom," he told his partner, "but we always get our man."

Gerhardt nodded. They both eyed Michael curiously. Malley rose with some ceremony. "Well, we'll get in touch with Downrigg tonight. He's at the Waldorf. Don't go away, young feller—"

Michael grinned. "I won't, pal. Thanks for the trouble."

"That's the stuff," Malley's great paw came out and whacked the tweed-covered shoulder resoundingly. "Sure it wouldn't be natural if ye didn't get a kick out of it. And the papers will have it tomorrow. I'll be bound. Or the next day anyway. Ye'll have reporters on yer doorstep."

A shadow crossed the young man's face.

"Ye don't like the notion much?"

"Not reporters—no. A nuisance." "Well, well, it's all in the day's work," averred Mr. Malley comfortably. "If they should happen to ask—and they will, no doubt about it—mention our names, Malley & Gerhardt, Second National Bank Building, Omaha, Nebraska. We always get our man."

Presently they left in a cab ordered over Michael's telephone. The young man watched them stow their plump, satisfied selves away in it. There was a puzzled look almost a disturbed one, on his sunburned face.

Then Michael went into the shabby living room where riding crops and week-old newspapers mingled with pipes and dust and disorder over which Clarence, Tip's father, never seemed to gain control.

Michael stared at the room with some distaste as he juggled the telephone receiver. He was trying to fit into it the picture of Katharine with her smooth, fair head, her exquisite skin, her delicate shoes and frocks and the scent that always clung about her. It was fantastic. . . . the afternoon's happenings themselves were sheer fantasy.

"Innicock 0021? May I speak to Miss Strykhurst, please?" He grinned to himself. That wasn't, really, her name. But only he and a shabby minister and a woman with floured hands were aware of it.

Katharine—Lady Carden, Lady Katherine of Donegal Castle. Would she like that? Oh, it was a pipe-dream, a bubble that would presently burst . . .

Her cool voice on the telephone. A voice soft and sure and real like herself.

"Darling, this is me." She had to be careful—he knew that. "Yes," she said. "Yes."

"It's all right," Michael told her, speaking low. "It's perfectly all right. They were detectives, but they had good news for me. Can't tell you now."

"Michael, I'm frightened of what we've done." Her voice came hurriedly, almost broken. "I must see you. Oh, I can't talk now. Someone's coming . . ."

He had to ring off then. Had to be content with that. Perhaps she would call him later.

He was going out into the stable yard, hands in pockets, brooding over the strange day he had just lived through, when Sally came rushing up to him.

"Michael, precious!" she cried. "Daddy says there's just no use your saying you can't get away. He's got a man to put in charge. We can leave for South America any moment."

He stared at her. He had forgotten her completely. But Sally would not allow herself to be so easily forgotten. She was a force to be reckoned with—and soon.

Only Five Strokes From Medalist in Championship

Thomas Hampton, a former Greenbelt champion, led the way of 31 golfers in qualifying play yesterday in the annual city championship of the Memphis Country Club.

Rufus Greene gained a position opposite the medalist with his 73, and was followed by O. B. Smith and Carl Harrison with 74s.

Winfred Swift was drawn into the championship on his 75, while George Loveless was forced into the second division with a like score.

J. B. Wright, the defending champion, who lives at Ahlens, but retains his membership in the local club, entered the tournament but was unable to qualify and attempt to defend his crown.

Matches will get underway this afternoon and run throughout the week, with the final round coming Sunday.

WELLINGTON TRAMPLES PADUCAH

Came Is Protested By Leaders After 17-9 Setback

By WOODROW MURRAY (Democrat's Wellington Correspondent)

WELLINGTON, June 10.—Staging a great comeback after last week's slip-up at Memphis, the Wellington Gassers set the Western Divisions leaders from Paducah on their noses here yesterday afternoon, 17 to 9.

The game was played under protest filed by Paducah. The subject of the protest was not ascertained.

The battle was one of the wildest affairs in the league this season. Wellington outhit the visitors, 18 to 15, and the combined efforts of the players netted 17 errors, 10 of which were against the loop leaders.

Paducah started with four runs in the first, but Wellington countered with seven tallies in its half, added two in the second, as did Paducah, and then four in each the fifth and sixth. Paducah was held scoreless following the second, with the exception of the sixth, when three runs were chased across on two hits and two errors.
