Those who play second fiddle seldom become leaders.

The less a man knows, the longer it takes him to tell it.

Indulge in a luxury a few times, and it becomes a necessity.

It is too bad that war does not kill the ones who need killing.

Some mighty small things can cause mighty big quarrels and big wars.

Only things that have actual merit can survive during depression times.

Evils in the minority are repugnant, but evils in the majority are respectable.

The man who accuses another wrongfully is only admitting what he would do if he were in the other's place.

According to the Scriptures the love of money is the root of all evil, and a man may have that love without having any too much money. Money in itself is a useful thing and should not be confused with the love of it.

Mayors of different Panhandle cities have selected different days to proclaim official straw hat days, but this spring up to now, they have had little influence on the weather. We would suggest that June 1st be as soon as any time set, in order to be sure of a warm day.

It was said a long time ago: "Self-interest demands that you be interested in the well-being of others." This is more true today, perhaps, than at any time in the world's history. We cannot live by ourselves, and everything that affects the other man affects us to an appreciable extent. We must have a measure of cooperation in most things, whether we desire it or not.

There are over 8 million dogs in the United States, and we guess that not one of them knows there is a depression on, for regardless of their owner's income they probably get their three squares a day. The food they consume would keep as many pigs, but it is not fashionable to raise pigs any more. It's a funny world where we kill pigs to keep food prices up and maintain an army of dogs to consume good food.

Some people are content to leave all the advertising of the town and community up to the newspaper, and while it is generally up to the newspaper to carry this burden, a little consideration for the newspaper in placing advertising and printing orders can always be appreciated. In fact, if the newspaper does not make some money, it is impossible for anyone to do much advertising for the community.

Printing is a highly special-ed craft and cannot be bought on price alone. Too many things enter into a finished piece of printing for a comparison of prices to mean anything. The kind of paper used, the grade of ink, the design of the copy, the style of type, and, what is the greatest item of all, the workmanship of the job. Many times a printing buyer will think to save a few cents, when he is actually losing dollars on the job. Wise buyers choose their printer as they do their doctor, and pay no attention to chiselers.

Henry Ford said about the NRA that "an industry to be successful should be run by somebody that understands it." This is the reason that the great majority of cases of government competition in business fail. We all know of cases where private citizens have attempted to operate a business about which they did not know enough to make a success of it. Few politicians know anything at all about business success and in many cases care as little. The NRA is to be commended in trying to prevent chiseling, but that is something that we will always have with us, just so long as suckers can be found who want something at the expense of the other fellow.

Household Hints

By Betty Webster

All of us have had trouble making silk stockings last a reasonable length of time. Those of us who have learned to care for fragile hose fail to get good service from them—when they are not actually defective—only when we fail to do our part.

To start a pair of stockings in the right way we ought to give a preliminary rinse in clear, cool water before wearing. Then there should be a washing in lukewarm suds, a rinse in water of the same temperature, and careful drying after each time the stockings are worn.

How to Put Them on

Another important factor in giving life to hosiery is the method of putting on the stockings. The proper way is to grasp the seam at the top and the front top and roll the entire length to the toe and then smooth so gently. "Snags and runners" are thus almost entirely done away with. If these instructions are followed and the stockings are purchased large enough, none of us will complain about the wearing qualities of most of the hosiery of today.

REAL FLOWERS CHARMING

The smartest flowers nowadays are the real garden variety instead of the artificial ones which have been popular so long. These lovely, fragile blossoms are dainty and delicate nestled in fur collars or perched on the shoulders of the lovely spring dresses or coats.

Of course, they do wilt but they are charming while they last.

DO YOU KNOW THAT:

1. Baby's angora bonnet should be washed in warm water to which soap flakes have been added rinsed in clear water of the same temperature, wrung out in a turkish towel, shaken well, pulled into shape and the hung by the corners to which the bonnet strings are fastened?
2. Marble should be washed with clear water only?
3. Phonograph records should be kept free from dust to get the best results when playing them?
4. A bottle may be thoroughly sterilized by boiling it for five minutes?
5. Orange marmalade makes an unusual filling for cake?

PLYMOUTH HASH

1 pound of hamburger steak
1 package of cooked spaghetti
1 tablespoon of chopped onion
1 can of tomato soup
1/2 pound of grated cheese
Salt and pepper
Brown the hamburger steak and onion in a little butter in a frying pan; mix the spaghetti with the meat; add to the soup and the cheese; season to taste.

Place in a casserole and cook for about half an hour in a moderately hot oven.

RESPECTS DUE THE FLAG

Since today is Memorial Day, it is fitting that this, the last of a three article series which has been published in the Scouting column, should deal with the everyday respects which should be accorded the flag of our nation.

The question often arises as to the proper disposition of old and worn out flags. The flag is an emblem of our living nation and as such should be at all times treated with due respect and reverence. When a flag is no longer a fitting emblem for display, it should be destroyed, preferably by burning. Flags of historic value, no matter how tattered and torn are often carefully preserved, together with the historic record.

Flags are not properly flown on civilian properties before sunrise or after sunset. It has been noted that in McLean the merchants are more or less lax in the display of their flags on national holidays, permitting their privately owned emblems of their nation to fly as they will, from any time in the morning to any time that evening.

The flag should always be hoisted briskly, and lowered slowly and ceremoniously. At no time should any part of the flag be permitted to touch the ground.

The flag represents the living country and is in itself considered a living thing. For that reason the union of stars of the flag is the honor point and the flag should always be displayed so that as you look at it the union is in the upper left, or in other words, so that the flag's right is your own left.

Following are a few cautions to be shown to the flag of the United States of America:

1. Do not permit disrespect to be shown to the flag of the United States of America.
2. Do not dip the flag to any person or any thing.
3. Do not display the flag with the union down except as a signal of distress.
4. Do not place any other flag or pennant above or, if on the same level, to the right of the flag of the U. S. of America.
5. Do not let the flag touch the ground or the floor or trail in water.
6. Do not place any object or emblem of any kind on or above the flag.
7. Do not use the flag as drapery in any form whatsoever.
8. Do not fasten the flag in any manner as will permit it to be easily torn.
9. Do not drape the flag over the hood, top, sides, or back of an auto.
10. Do not display the flag on a float in a parade except from a staff.
11. Do not use the flag as a covering for a ceiling.
12. Do not carry the flag flat or horizontally, but always aloft and free.
13. Do not use the flag as any part of a costume or of an athletic uniform. Do not embroider it upon cushions or handkerchiefs, nor print it on paper napkins or boxes.
14. Do not put lettering of any kind on the flag.
15. Do not use the flag in any kind of advertising, nor fasten an advertising sign to a pole from which the flag is flown.
16. Do not display, use or store the flag in such a manner as will permit it to be easily soiled or damaged.

(These cautions are taken from the Handbook for Boys).

RAIN

By A. T. Wilson

One of the old Grecian philosophers had a fuss with his wife and she got so furious that his better judgment prompted him to get out of the house, and as he went out the door she threw a bucket of water on him and he said, "After thunder comes rain," and went on his way rejoicing for having gotten off so lightly.

Now, after so many high winds, sand storms and dust clouds, the three inches that we just had was a manifold blessing and the person that can't go on his way rejoicing after this has a bad case of indigestion and won't eat anything that agrees with him, and if he drowns you will find his body upstream instead of down the river. It was not only a boon to the human race but to the brute creation as well, for humans are more free moral agents and livestock just have to put up with the scarcity of food.

These surpluses of food and feed never did bother me like they do some other folks, and this drouth is kind of a burlesque on our crop plow-up campaign and Mother Nature, by withholding the rain, sure has reduced the surplus in double quick time. If you will travel around over this western country and look in the farmers' barns you will find not enough feed for the rats to keep fat on; then go to his auto parked by the side of the house and find a sack or two of shipped in feed, and then you will see how badly we needed the recent rain. An oil well is good and helps a favored few, but a good general rain is more democratic and helps everybody. The farmers as well as other people's faces were as long as a Panhandle winter, but the rain shortened them up remarkably and put the smile on them that won't come off. Before the rain, lots of folks wanted to sell out and go back east, but now back east is washed away and they lose as much soil by blowing.

Rains are a lot like women. You will find the big floods and thunder storms that come down like the ones that came on the two houses that were founded on the sand and on the rock that the Bible speaks of, and you may compare them to the Jezebel type of woman and either one can make a man say, "Woe is me, for I am all undone" and make him run for the cellar or the tall timber. Then there is the rain that just hangs on in a fog or drizzle like Delilah hung around Samson's neck and we will call them the clinging vine type, and they don't do you any good and generally get you in bad like Delilah did Samson.

Last but not least come the gentle but copious and steady rains that fall softly and without wind and strike deeply into the soil and give us what we call a bottom season. This last type of rain we will call the Ruth type of rain and is to be desired above great riches and is as far ahead of the Jezebel type, which often brings a hail with it, as the gentle soothing hand of a woman is to a lion's paw. Since we have had a good general rain we should have the courage of Joshua and Caleb, but remember the San Jacinto when they cried as they rushed to battle, "Remember the Alamo!"

CHAPTER I

Monday

"Listen," his father said to Hal Ireland downtown—in the large office of the bank that was all soft carpets, soft lights, soft paneling, and enough floor-space rental to keep five families in comfort for a year; "listen."

"I've been listening, sir," said Hal, "for twenty minutes."

The Old Man seemed to wait a little for the slow draining of humor from Hal's alert, gray eyes. Then he said in quiet irony:

"I dare say you've been told about your charm—"

"Never by you, sir," said Hal with a faint bow, checked gently for fear of starting the slow, heavy throb in his head again.

"I dare say you've been told that when you bow that way, and let your eyes twinkle, you're apt to get your way. But I venture to point out what I can't convince myself you've learned for yourself: that the business world is not made up of pretty girls or susceptible matrons—social or theatrical; that the business of the country, about which you know nothing, is carried on by men who think more of persistence and application than they do of capacity to hold whiskey, or acquaintance with speakeasy proprietors or hand-caps at golf or the fit of white flannels.

"The San Francisco job is open till the first of the month—because they need somebody, not because I've asked them to let you coast in on my name. You've got your last penny from me—for transportation or anything else—till next quarter's allowance. If you want the job, get yourself out there. If you don't, don't."

Hal's quick, mobile face was set, and he met his father's steady look with bright, impersonal steadiness, rather as if he had a peevish, disappointing child before him. Then he got up and straightened his good shoulders with a deep breath.

"That all?" he said.

"That's all," said the Old Man, briskly casual.

"Right," said Hal, with a practiced clipping of the word. "Well—bye."

He swung his back on his father and walked over the thick carpet to the door. In the silence, he could feel his father expecting him to turn there for another word—of hope, or of opening. So he pulled the door, caught the other knob behind him, and stepped out, leaving only the soft, efficient click of the latch for comment.

Dalrymple—known downtown as Frederick Ireland's knife and fork—was waiting unoptimistically outside, where he couldn't be seen from the banking floor. "Bad?" he asked apprehensively.

"Bad," said Hal, letting his gray eyes light again with their welcoming humor. "Race-making. D'you know anything about bromo-seltzer? Does it really work?"

"They say so, but I've never needed it."

"And I'm never going to again—never, never—probably. How do you get to California on six dollars?"

"Lord, Mister Hal," said Dalrymple, "is six dollars all you've—out of the, that cheque?"

"Fraid so," Hal reached into an inside pocket and brought out the zig-zag length of the railroad ticket, with a couple of pullman slips pinned to the top. Dalrymple looked relieved.

"Oh, but you've got transportation," he said.

"On a train that's now probably simply whooshing through northern Ohio. Here, take 'em, and if you can get an adjustment, credit the Old Man's account, with my compliments."

"If I could—if you'll let me—"

Hal smiled, and his eyes wrinkled in the corners. "You're a h—l of a nice guy, Dimples," he said, "but I'm so mad—so mad, for the first time in my life, that I wouldn't borrow a Confederate nickel from anybody who paid taxes in the same state with that—that with my father. He told me—if you'll believe it, Dimples; he told me I knew nothing about money or life or this country or him or myself or modern plumbing or brokers' loans or God-knows-what—that's of the most quivering importance to a young man's career. He even made me the simply astounding revelation that I was an only child. Had you heard that, Dimples? He sat there and told me—but what the h—l; you're busy. And I've got to get to the Coast. Bromo-seltzer couldn't make it any worse, could it?"

Dalrymple looked worried, confused, pathetic, and he murmured: "No, no," helplessly. So Hal patted his arm, promised to let him know what happened, and started uptown again.

It was in the subway that he remembered the sign that had laughed at last night. In the West Forties, it was, and if he could remember from which place they had been going to which other place, he would remember the street. "California... $33" was the line he recalled, among a list of fares to Chicago, Miami, Detroit, Pittsburgh, and other destinations which he had no faintest desire to reach.

"There," Tony had said, grabbing at him; "go out to the Coast that way, boy. Rub elbows with the people; see life; know your native land."

Just west of Broadway—in the Forties, he'd find it; by G—d, he'd find it. He wouldn't borrow a nickel from any one of fifty people who'd lend him money in the next half hour if he went to them. He'd hock something—the curly ugly silver dressing-table set his father had given him. He'd get to the Coast on fifty dollars and tell his father what to do with any insufferable future fight-talks that occurred to him.

CHAPTER II

Tuesday

Hal's headache was gone next morning, but so—nearly—was the warming sense of triumph in his inspiration. And that went entirely at nine o'clock when he walked into the bare, dingy, and crowded garage office from which decrepit carful of share-expense travelers were dispatched about the country. He hadn't stopped to think what the mechanics of the thing might be; but here the possibilities of dreariness seemed promptly infinite. Eight July days of four hundred miles' driving each, through country reputed to be hotter than outside. Forty-eight street already promised to be; crowded into an unwashed derelict of a fine car among a selection from this assembly of desolate, if not actively objectionable looking people. . . . The first rough cartoon of these vistas nearly had him back on the street again—to telephone Dalrymple for the easy loan that would put him on this afternoon's Century.

A decent looking man in a clean shirt looked at him across the shabby desk firmly. The telephone rang. "Yes. This is Larsen," said the man, frowning. "Call me later, I'm very busy."

"How Far You Going?" Larsen Asked Her.

Hal unopened his old suitcase against the wall near the door and sat on it. Larsen started pawing over the piles of little slips before him. "Now—" he said twice, almost looking up, but each time thinking better of it. Then suddenly, "You can't take that dog." Hal looked around for the dog, then up quickly to examine who it should be in this place with so smartly bred a fox-terrier.

"I've got to take the dog," said the girl in soft, almost-husky gravity. "He'll sit in my lap; he'll be no trouble." Pretty, quite pretty, Hal saw; perhaps a little tough, surely self-conscious—the even solemnity in her large eyes aware that unauthorized people were looking at her, might any minute speak to her and have to be rebuffed. But pretty, really quite pretty.

"How far you going?" Larsen asked her.

"Los Angeles," said the girl steadily.

"Oh," said Larsen, as if Los Angeles were just this side of New Rochelle. "If you keep him in your lap, all right." He turned to the man whose crossed legs Hal could see beyond her. "Does he bite?"

"I don't know," said a lazy, careless voice.

Larsen was startled. "You two're together," he said.

"No," said the man.

Larsen looked at her; she made a slight negative motion with her head and dropped her eyes to the dog. Larsen fumbled through the slips of paper, stopping to frown at one. "You're going to L. A.," he said to the girl. "Yes," she said, barely looking up to him for an instant. "And so are you," Larsen said to the man. "Yes, but I'm not with her." "Then who is?" said Larsen. Hal let half a smile come through his moodiness as he shook his head. And Larsen was saved from further astonishment by his telephone, into which he said again he was very busy, loading three seven-passenger cars for Chi and the West.

Hal's eyes kept coming back to the girl. She seemed not to hear what was going on in the room—stayed quietly, solemnly sure that some one would speak to her. Periodically that annoyed Hal and he looked away. Then he would find himself looking at her again, seeing how the smooth, slight dip of her cheeks under high cheek-bones seemed to be pursing her lips a little, adding solemnity to her wide, possessed mouth.

"Hello, hello," said Larsen impatiently into the telephone: "I'm very busy. I'm loading seven three-passenger cars for Chi and the West." Larsen was sweating. He called suddenly over his shoulder, as if taking a desperate remedy. "De Soto!" A small, cheerful, soft-eyed man, without a hat and looking as if he had just crawled from under a car, came in expectantly.

"Take her bags," said Larsen, pointing his pencil at a woman, "and take her to Dallas." The lady's shocked disapproval of little De Soto lost some of its imperiousness when he grinned at her eagerly and said: "Like a fast ride, lady?" She glared down, her pince-nez quivering. "Hope y'do, 'cause anybody rides with me gets a fast one."

"Now," said Larsen more happily, as if their disappearance made it a family party again. But the telephone rang, and Larsen began his wreny piece about Chi and the West almost before he had lifted the receiver. "Now, that dog—" he started again, and Hal saw a sort of quick pride take the girl's face as she raised her head. "No, that's right," Larsen added. "We settled that. We settled about the dog. Now Los Angeles—everybody going to Los Angeles goes with Jake Miller. Miller!" he shouted at the garage door. "Where's Miller?"

After an hour Hal went across the baking street for a glass of ginger ale. When he came back the slight, tidy man smoking beside the doorway gave him a lazy smile and in a voice that was oddly unsure of pitch said, "Goin' to L. A.?"

"Guess so," said Hal, trying to be neither discourteous nor encouraging. The trip was going to be bad enough without entering into relations with anybody.

"So'm I," said the man. "My name's Crack—Mar'tin Crack." His eyes seemed dreamily looking for the effect of this on Hal.

Hal leaned against the wall, facing the street, and lighted a cigarette. "I'm d—d if I'll offer him my name. Hal said to himself; if he's interested, he heard it in there.

"You any relation to Frederick Ireland—the big shot downtown?"

Hal looked at him with cool amusement in his gray eyes. "Sure," he said.

"Couldn't be closer," Crack gave a slight, polite laugh. From his side pocket he drew a bright, new golf ball, dropped it to the pavement where it clicked smartly and leaped up to his waiting hand again.

BLACK WALNUTS EXCELLENT CROP IN DROUGHT AREA

One neglected tree which offers possibilities not only of a sure financial return, but an excellent solution of drought conditions is the black walnut.

This type of tree roots deeper than most and because of its habit of sending its roots far down into the lower soil can maintain its life and produce its crops when all the surface crops around it fall.

Heavy yields of walnuts were reported last fall from practically the whole commercial range of the tree, from Pennsylvania to Arkansas, says the Chicago Tribune. One dealer in walnuts in western Arkansas buys an average of 600,000 pounds of nuts each season. Two years ago he purchased 1,000,000 pounds, and had a heavy carry over, when the walnut crop was short. The nuts keep very well stored in cellars.

Commercial cracking plants have been established in many parts of the country. The farmer, however, has certain advantages over the large operator. By careful cracking and removing of the kernels on the farm, an average of 14 pounds of kernels may be obtained from 100 pounds of nuts. The industrial plants using machinery net about ten pounds. The hulls make excellent fuel.

Food and confection concerns consider black walnut kernels a staple product, and some place single orders for as much as 10,000 pounds.

Farmers and state forestry departments planted millions of walnuts and large numbers of nursery raised seedlings last year, especially in the Ohio valley states. A dual purpose tree, the black walnut is a favorite for farm planting over a wide range. Once plentiful in the hardwood forests, walnut was used prodigally for fencing, fuel and building. Later demands for gun and furniture stock further depleted the supply. Fortunately the walnut tree is a fairly rapid grower, and excellent for farm forestry purposes. Foresters are urging more extensive plantings of both nuts and seedlings where remaining old trees indicate the walnut will thrive.

The Road to Better Health

By Dr. William J. Scholes

LOW BLOOD PRESSURE

So much attention is given to high blood pressure that we are prone to overlook the fact that there is such a thing as low blood pressure, and that its consequences are manifold.

What is Blood Pressure?

The pressure of the blood against the walls of the vessel in which it is circulated must be of a certain degree at all times. The vessel walls, being elastic, expand and contract just enough to keep the tension within at a proper level. Needless to say, the vessel is always completely filled with blood regardless of the actual volume of blood it contains.

The degree of the pressure as expressed in figures on the glass tube of mercury or the dial of other types of instruments used for registering the tension is entirely arbitrary. It was arrived at by observing what the average was in a large number of normal individuals of a given age. It was likewise observed that in certain diseases this pressure is higher or lower than in normal persons.

Natural Rise of Blood Pressure

As the individual grows older and rigidity replaces the elasticity of youth, the blood vessels do not so readily expand and contract in proportion to their blood content. There is "hardening of the arteries." The result is an increase in the tension within the vessels.

The constant amount of blood in various parts of the body causes a static condition in those parts. That is to say, it works at a fixed rate—the same at all times—and at a lower basis of efficiency. The individual slows up both mentally and physically. Which explains the axiom that "a man is as old as his arteries."

When the Pressure is Low

When the pressure is low we find several accompanying conditions: The heart action is slow and inefficient; there is a feeling of lassitude; the temperature is sub-normal. The subject lacks ambition—he has no "pep." Sometimes this becomes so extreme that he loses consciousness. Generally however, he is just "low."

Two underlying factors seem chiefly responsible for a low blood pressure: A focal infection and low endocrine activity. The first is to be found generally in the colon (large bowel) and can be remedied by changing the intestinal flora through implantation of acidophilus bacillus. The second, a disfunction of the ductless glands (adrenals, thyroid, gonads) is overcome through administration of extracts of these glands until the general condition of the patient has been improved to a point where these glands perform their work properly. The focal infection may be situated in other localities than the colon—in the teeth or tonsils.

High blood pressure is unquestionably more dangerous to life than low blood pressure. However, whether to feel half dead is preferable or not is an individual matter of choice.

Richard Hoffmann was the first to see the splendid plot possibilities in this new mode of travel. To gather material he embarked in one of these cars with very little money, but an observing eye. The result was "Watch the Curves," as hilarious and exciting a tale as you'll ever read, which appears serially in the columns of this newspaper. It strikes a new high in American fiction.

Hoffmann, also author of "The Prodigal Duke," was born in New York in 1901, and educated at Lawrenceville, Williams and Oxford. A yachting amateur, he has sailed in the Queen's Cup race to Spain and the Fastnet races in England. He has traveled widely through Europe. He writes with a fresh, youthful pen, as you will see in "Watch the Curves."

Shirtwaist Wedding Gown Is Chic

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

ing out over the conventional long satin train. The other bride in the picture yields to the lure of lace which is what most everybody in fashion's realm is doing this season. This lovely gown is most enchanting—an aristocrat among wedding gowns. The coronet of pearls and tulle plantings is attached to one of the very new and smart long-back and short-front wedding veils.

NEW, thrilling news! Spring and summer brides-to-be will please take notice. It's about the white satin shirtwaist dress which is the very newest thing in wedding gowns. See this perfectly charming new fashion as worn by the lovely bride standing to the right in the picture. More news! You would never guess unless you were told, namely, the shirtwaist and train are built in one and worn over a sleeveless evening gown of the identical satin. Which we think is a decidedly practical two-in-one costume proposition of which every style-seeking bride ought to know. As to looks, isn't it adorable? After the nuptial day when the happy newlywed is invited to parties and formal she just leaves the white satin shirtwaist on train with the tulle veil en masse done up in their wrappings of tissue and sachet while she dons the sleeveless dress which served as the foundation of her wedding gown. The captivating simplicity of this exquisite shirtwaist bridal gown is its big appeal. The trim row of neat little satin-covered buttons and the girlish wide turnover collar with its pleatings of satin about it and at the wrists are beguilingly youthful in aspect. From a coronet of pleated tulle falls a halo and short cape supplemented with yards and yard of tulle trail-

COLD BEVERAGES FOR WARM DAYS

Expert Gives Pointers on Preparation of Tea.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE first warm days all of us welcome call back to our table the refreshing cooling beverages which we Americans like so much. The clink of ice in a pitcher of cold tea, the slight of a glass of iced coffee are welcome at lunch and dinner or in the afternoon. "A barbarous custom," remarked an Englishman to me the other day as he passed them by and demanded his usual cup of hot, scalding tea. "It's very strange that you people have never discovered that hot tea is much more cooling than all these iced things." Perhaps he is right! Indeed, I have had this fact explained to me scientifically, but custom influences likes and dislikes.

Just a word about tea, hot or cold, and its preparation. First of all, there is the tea itself. Your final beverage will be influenced by your choice of type. Whatever kind you choose, it must be steeped in fresh boiling water which should stand about five minutes upon the leaves and then preferably poured into another heated pot. If it is to be served hot, if it is to be served cold it should be poured immediately over ice, as the quick chilling insures the best flavor. If you know the tastes of your family and friends you may add lemon, lime or orange juice and a few sprigs of mint to the pitcher in which you serve. It should not be sweetened as there are usually some people who prefer tea without sugar. Tea, by the way, makes an excellent foundation for punch, to which it gives body.

When coffee is to be served iced, it should be also made fresh and poured over ice as soon as it is dripped. You may pass plain or whipped cream or both at the table. Of course, it should never be sweetened. Iced cocoa or chocolate may be cooled before they are served with ice cubes or chopped ice in tall glasses. Whipped or plain cream is always served with them. You may like to add a bit of almond flavoring to the cream. A combination of coffee and chocolate makes a delicious beverage, which is known as mocha or Russian chocolate.

Special Iced Tea.

- 3 teaspoons tea
  - 3 cups boiling water
  - 1/2 cup lemon juice (2 lemons)
  - 1/2 cup orange juice (2 oranges)
- Sugar
- 1 pint ginger ale
  - 6 mint sprigs
  - 6 slices orange
- Pouring boiling water over tea, cover and let steep five minutes. Strain and cool quickly by pouring over chopped ice or ice cubes. Add orange and lemon juice and the sugar if desired. When ready to serve add ginger ale. Serve with ice in tall glasses with a sprig of mint and a slice of orange in each glass.

Chocolate Syrup.

- 1 cup cocoa or 4 squares chocolate
  - 2 cups cold water
  - 2 cups sugar
  - 1/2 teaspoon salt
  - 1 teaspoon vanilla
- Put cocoa or chocolate, cut into five or six pieces, into large saucepan and stir over a low fire until the mixture is thick and smooth. Add sugar and salt and stir until dissolved. Let boil three minutes, add vanilla and pour into two pint jars and seal. If cocoa is used, the syrup will keep indefinitely.

This syrup can be used as a basis for any number of cold drinks.

Frosted Chocolate.—Allow 2 teaspoons syrup and 1/2 cup milk for each serving. Beat together. Put in tall glass, add 1/2 cup ice cream and fill up with ginger ale or charged water.

Iced Chocolate.—Allow 3 tablespoons syrup and 1 cup milk for each serving. Beat together, pour over cracked ice and add plain or whipped cream.

Iced Mocha.—Allow 3 tablespoons syrup and 1 cup fresh hot coffee for each serving. Beat together, pour over cracked ice and add plain or whipped cream.

Kidney Beans and Corn.

- 2 cups canned kidney beans
  - 1 1/2 cups canned corn
  - 1 tablespoon minced green pepper
  - 1/2 teaspoon salt
  - 3/4 teaspoon pepper
  - 1 egg
  - 1/2 cup fine bread crumbs
  - 1/2 cup grated cheese
- Mix beans, corn and green pepper; add salt, pepper and well-beaten egg. Put in greased baking dish and sprinkle top with mixture of grated cheese and bread crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) about thirty minutes.

Paint When Dry

Be sure to allow time after a rain for outdoor woodwork to dry before painting, says an experienced painter. This is especially important if the woodwork is new. Don't hurry your painter if he thinks it best to wait a day longer before starting a job or putting on another coat. Start your painting as early as you can in the spring, so that the painter can adjust his work to the weather.

Blue Chases Devil

In Mexico there's a superstition that painting the windows of a house blue will keep the devil away. Many home owners in the United States are adopting the custom—if not the superstition—and are selecting blue as a trim color for the exterior of their homes.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THIS is one of the great seasons of giving, not of new things, but of an accumulation of unwanted articles. Spring is the greatest season for this with autumn as a good second. With the house-cleaning orgy in process or recently over, the homemaker realizes that during the previous months many articles have accumulated; clothing, furniture, dishes, utensils of various sorts, etc., and some must go to permit space for another period of accumulation. With new frocks, what is to be done with the old? With new equipments discarded ones are in the way. With replenished linens, etc., the others may prove only a care to save. It is because of such circumstances that spring and fall become seasons of dispensing.

There are few persons who do not find a certain pleasure in giving, and this is a not unworthy enjoyment. But it has to be done with tact when the things belong in the personally unwanted group. Yet these same things, unwanted by present owners, may be just the things wanted by someone else. When the giver can find the right person for the right thing she is fortunate. It is not easy. Oftentimes there are articles the owner appreciates are really worthwhile, but can be dispensed with, and she tries to find someone she knows who would like them.

Hesitation.

Then comes the hesitation lest offense be taken by an offer of them. Often those in most need are the most difficult to help. There is the reluctance of equals to accept from equals. An interchange would be different.

If the person who wishes to present the articles will put herself in the place of the receiver, she can get some idea of the reluctance mentioned. Also she may be able to find an acceptable way to give. How would she like to be approached with the gift if the other wanted to give the thing to her, knowing the means were less. The pinch comes with the realization of the last clause, the question of difference in pocket books. However a kind heart will find a way.

For most of the things, there are avenues of dispensing, such as through the church, or benevolent societies. These know of needs, but the articles will scarcely go where you so wish them to. So it is worthwhile to puzzle the matter out and give what you want to give, where you want it to go, if possible. It is by so doing that giving becomes more than dispensing. It takes on a human interest.

Closet Convenience.

When closets are having their changes of contents from winter to summer apparel is a good time to add such equipment for caring for the fresh wardrobes as can be easily installed. For example there are graded hanger holders which screw into the back or side walls, and which not only provide space for many coat hangers, but which prevent garments from getting crushed by pressing against each other. The grades are like steps of a single rod of metal, the garment nearest the wall being hung a trifle higher than the one farthest out. When screwing these or any protruding suspension rods into walls, enough space must be left between them to permit arms of coat hangers to swing free of each other when garments are on them. Many homemakers prefer several of these, or other models of elongated hanger rods, in a closet to the long pole extending the whole width or length of the closet.

© Bell syndicate—WNU Service.

Barrel Upholstery

A present type which is in evidence today, is termed barrel upholstery. In this there are sections resembling tubes rather than barrels, although the staves of a barrel are suggested in the lengthwise lines. The bulging highly padded portions between the indentations suggest the rounded form of a barrel. Barrel upholstery is used for curved contours found in backs of chairs which often curve about to form arms. It is for such uses that it is practically reserved.

New Closet Space

How to fit new closets in old houses when they are being reconditioned is often a perplexing problem which may be solved in a bedroom by building one in each of the two corners in a wall. This forms an alcove in which the head of a bed may be placed. In the French fashion, pastel-hued walls, gray or rose, for example, are appropriate in such a room. Another good place for closets is the space on either side of a fireplace chimney.

Spare the Wax

When polishing hardwood floors be careful not to use too much wax. Put on too thick it is hard to polish. Let the wax remain on the floors for 24 hours and it will be much easier to polish them.

Says WILL ROGERS

BEVERLY HILLS.—Well all I know is just what I read in the papers, or what people tell me they heard over the Radio, as I never hear it. I don't dislike it. In fact I like it, but I just never think of it. It's a habit and a good one, but you got to acquire it and keep it up. But you can keep mighty well informed by just listening to it.

Opening up a lot of mail here, some of it turned almost yellow. Haven't got any idea answering any of it, but I do look through it sometimes. I wrote an article here not long ago admitting that I didn't answer things, but it didn't seem to have much effect. They just kept right on. I think they thought I was kidding. I was kidding on the level.

One night on the Radio I was yapping about all these people who are criticizing Mr. Roosevelt and saying he was spending too much money, yet admitting that the Government was the only one who was spending money, and that if that was the case that everybody that was making any must be indebted to the President for making it, for it was evidently Relief Money that we were in a round about way getting, and that a person to really be consistent, he should refuse to take any of it, that is if he was so critical of the Government policies.

Well there was a little too much truth for that to set very good, I guess I brought it out a little too crude and bare faced, folks don't like to be told they are living off the Government, but that's about what we are all doing. But among the letters were some which said, "Will should stick to his comedy. He knows nothing about economics." Every time you write something that don't agree with some body they write that you should not venture in fields where you know nothing, that you are funny in a way but stay on things that are funny.

But they are not by any means all like that. I mean the letters I get. Now when I said all this that I am telling you here about taking Government money about a dozen people sent me the following article. Its from Fort Gay, West Virginia.

"Mose Maynard, 84 years old, and his wife, 90, a widowed daughter and four children are living in a cave. They were removed to a house in town and given Government relief. $3.50 a week for food was supplied them, but they went back to the hills. Said he wouldn't live on Government money, they had always lived without it, and they would continue it."

Yes but we haven't got enough with that spirit. We talk more independence than we practice. Here is an interesting letter from an old friend of mine, Harry Oliver. He was art director for our movie company (Fox). That's the man that arranges all the "Sets." That's the houses and scenes that we shoot. Well he is quite a desert rat, and has a place away out on the desert, and he is head of the big amusement place called Gold Gulch at the big San Diego Exposition, which you don't want to miss. Its going to be a big fair. He is putting on a "Mule Swearing Contest." That is its prizes for the man that can curse a mule the best, or worst.

Then he has a special contest just for residents from Florida, who can tell the biggest lie about California, (or maybe it won't be a lie, but the Californians will call it a lie). I can't imagine what it would be if it was a lie. California is a hard state to lie about.

Now here is a nice letter from a college, the President of it. He wanted to give me a degree, said they had given the Cabinet, the Supreme Court and leading Industrialists, degrees, and had been hooded and gowned. I have had this same play come up a time or two and I think these guys are kidding. If they are not they ought to be. This fellow kept an awful straight face in his letters to me, and I believe he meant well, but here is where the catch is. None of em knew what to call the Degree. Hamilton College down in Florida had some pretty good name but it didn't seem to have much to do with me. I forget what this one was going to make me "Dr" of. I will take one for "Applesauce." I would take one for hooey, but they would say I was too close to Huey.

Degrees have lost prestige enough as it is, without handing em around to second hand comedians, and its this handing em out too promiscuously that has helped to cheapen em. Let a guy get in there and battle four years if he wants one, and don't give him one just because he happens to hold a good job in Washington, or manufactures more monkey wrenches than anybody else, or because he might be fool enough to make people laugh. Keep em just for those kids that have worked hard for em. Keep em believing in em. They are stepping out in the world with nothing but that sheet of paper. That's all they get, our civilization don't offer em anything else. We offer him nothing. He steps into a world not of his making. So lets at least don't belittle his ladder.

FOODS OF THE 'GOOD OLD DAYS'

No Longer "Regional," but Still Enjoyed.

Any reminder of the good old days when American cooking traditions were being formed is sure to warm our hearts and make the gastric juices run a little swifter but it is safe to assert that we'd have a gastric reaction of a more painful sort if we were actually to return to the daily fare of our ancestors. We do not want to revive the mistakes and the deficiencies of the early American diet, but there can be much pleasure and benefit from renewing our acquaintance with some of the dishes which derived from the early days in this country.

Indian cooking lore has been combined with and modified by the customs and traditions of each separate group of settlers. In Charleston, S. C., the cookery is a very special mixture of French and negro art. Certain of the favorite old-time dishes of the Middle and Far West were evolved during the covered wagon pilgrimages. Thus the beginnings of camp cookery, although much of it was far less healthful than present-day camp food, as the frying-pan was the most extensively used implement over those open fires. It is no accident we associate clam bakes and blueberry puddings with Cape Cod, chile con carne with Texas and New Mexico or fish plaigs with Charleston, where the rice fields used to stretch in every direction. Now all these regional dishes may be enjoyed at any point of the compass.—Little Gay in the Parents' Magazine.

CAR EQUIPMENT ADDS PLEASURE AND SAFETY

"Next to having a car well-tuned and in perfect mechanical condition, there is no greater contribution to the pleasure, safety and comfort of a summer vacation tour than to have the car fitted with equipment that guarantees the tourist against minor difficulties and discomforts that may be met with on a long distance trip," says Chas. E. Cooke, of the Cooke Chevrolet Co., quoting the chief engineer of the Chevrolet Motor Co. "Most of the accessories in this class are equally useful in ordinary city driving, but become particularly important and valuable when the tourist is in a strange region, traveling over unknown roads, and driving maybe for hours at a time. Then his pleasure depends on his being free to observe the country and the scenery, to avoid enforced halts, and to be at his ease physically and mentally. "Probably the most universally valuable accessory for city use or for touring in all seasons of the year, is the spotlight. However, very few motorists whose cars carry spotlight use them to their full advantage; they seem to reserve them for the sole purpose of searching out house numbers, or for reading cross-road signs. Actually, a spotlight properly used is a safety device, especially when traveling in strange country. It should be set to direct its beam on the right hand edge of the road, well ahead, ready to be snapped on whenever it is necessary to dim the main headlights. Some motorists make this automatic, by wiring their spotlight circuit to the dim terminal of the regular lighting switch. Again, in overtaking a car at night, the spotlight is a better signal than the horn; you direct its beam to the left margin of the road ahead of the car in front, who thus is warned that you are about to pass, while the beam illuminates any obstruction that might endanger your car. This signal is especially valuable in passing heavy trucks with trailers, whose driver might not be able to hear your horn, but are sure to see your spotlight beam alongside (if they don't a quick flash on and off the rear view mirror is certain to be noticed). Spotlights are useful also for flashing a beam ahead at street or highway intersections to warn drivers approaching from either side; for signalling cars behind you when you are going to make a left turn; for illuminating your own left front fender as a warning to cars approaching from the rear when you are pulling out from a curbside parking place, and for numerous other uses besides their main purpose. "Both safety and comfort are served by insect screens in all ventilator openings. Most current model cars are regularly provided with screens in the cowl ventilators, but screens may be had also for the window openings of no-draft ventilating systems. "Since on most vacation trips the driver is not the only one whose comfort and pleasure is to be considered, accessory manufacturers have offerings of special value and utility for the passenger. For example, an extra windshield wiper may be installed at the right side of the car; also an additional adjustable sun visor, which may be equipped with a snap-on vanity mirror for the benefit of the feminine passengers. "In strange towns, strange parking places, and in regions where service stations are far apart, it is good economy to take precautions against petty thefts. The loss of a tankful of gasoline does not involve much money, but may cause hours' delay in sparsely settled regions; while the loss of a spare tire is costly and also may be disastrous. Hence, locking gasoline tank caps, and spare tire locks are good investments and insurance against loss, delays, and discomfort. The locking gas tank cap, incidentally, may save your car if it should be stolen, for they will be unable to renew the gasoline supply, and his lack of a key when he stops at a filling station usually arouses the suspicion of the attendant and leads to tracing the car."

S. S. LESSON

By Rev. Cecil G. Gott
Pastor First Baptist Church

OUR DAY OF WORSHIP

Lesson text, Psalms 100:1-5; John 4:20-24; Colossians 3:15-17. Golden text, "God is a spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth." John 4:24.

There are six things to be noticed about the Sabbath. First, it is a universal day of rest. In the beginning God created the Sabbath, or one out of every seven days, to be used as a day of rest. God rested from His labors upon the seventh day and recommended it to man as a day when the normal industry of his hands should be laid aside. This was to give his body and mind rest that they might recuperate from six days of strenuous labor. God in His great foreknowledge saw the need of it in the operation of human life.

Second, God continued the institution when He laid down the decalogue and gave His laws to His chosen people, the Hebrews (Exodus 20:8-11). Here God commanded that all labor should cease. The individual is responsible not only for the labor of his own hands upon the Sabbath, but also he is responsible for the labor of his family or any one who is employed by him. God leaves no loopholes. A man either obeys the commands of God or disobeys them. Going on in the laws God gave His people, there was the definite command to worship Him. God goes on the assumption that worshipping Him is restful to the human soul. God is right. Men may not agree with Him but they are at fault, and not God. Their fault will fall under the judgment of God. Therefore, the Sabbath day was known as a day of worship for the Hebrews.

Third, the Christian Sabbath as we know it is likewise to be a day of rest and worship. There is no place in the New Testament where the followers of Christ were commanded to change their day of worship from the seventh day to the first day. Nevertheless, we find Christ rising upon, and appearing to His followers in the first day of the week, in most instances after His resurrection, and we find His followers regularly and continually worshipping on the first day of the week. There seems to be no question that this change was the will of Christ. The early followers were in the main Jews. They continued, as is told in the New Testament, to worship in the temple on the seventh day of the week, and on the following day met for their worship of the Master, prayer, breaking of bread, and calling men to penitence and faith. (Acts 20:7). Christ honored His followers in their observance of the first day of the week.

Fourth, the day is to be a day of rest. Rest is needed by everything. Rest even makes machinery last longer and give better service during its operation. In the early laws God commanded that the land should rest every seventh year. In the days of old Hebrews they saved enough from their crops in six years to last the seventh, and the land was not wanted during the seventh year. The rest made the land enough more fertile to care for the difference. In that way it was never "farmed-out." It had another matter of "rest" that cared for many of the social and economic evils we face today. He commanded that every man be given a portion of the land when the promised Land was inhabited. If a man bought the land of his neighbor at same land reverted back to the original family estate on the year jubilee, or the fiftieth year from the settlement of the land. Upon this day all land also remained idle, which made two years in succession of rest during each hundred years. Slaves were freed upon this year, therefore no underprivileged race of every was raised up as in later years. Rest was a great principle of God.

Fifth, the Lord's day is a day of worship. By that He does not mean the recital of memorized forms or the going through with stilted ceremonies. The Master says in the lesson that God is a Spirit, and that we are to worship Him in spirit and truth. Worship, real spiritual worship, is the motion of the heart of a man through respect, gratitude, and love for God through Christ for what He has personally done for us. It may be expressed in many forms. Prayer, reading the Word, shouting, meditation upon God and His Word, and with many others, are forms of true worship. The thing a man does because he has to, for appearance, or even because of mere duty, should not be called true worship. True worship may be expressed both privately and publicly. Much of our worship among Christians is of a selfish nature because of the fellow-ship attachment. This has been true since the coming of the Master. Sixth, worship, if it is true, sincere from the heart, always has the quality of inspiration as a response from God to assist us in doing good. It will inspire what James defines as true and undenied religion, visiting the fatherless and the widows, and keeping unspotted from the world. It seems that each of us needs to examine himself and find there in the heart depths just how deep the roots of our worship go, and through God's Word prepare the soil that these roots may go deeper.

Text: "The truth shall make you free"—John 8:32.

FROM TRUTH TO FREEDOM

To know the real value of religion in the lives of men is a great asset to religious and medical workers. It is true, every Christian knows why he is a Christian and is aware of the value of Christianity to himself. But pastors, deaconesses, doctors and nurses not only have the opportunity of knowing the genuine value of the Christian religion but also in seeing the Christian doctrines work, produce marvelous results in their patients—both spiritual and physical.

The saving of souls, Christian healing of mental and bodily ills are stupendous tasks which many people do not realize. Workers in this line perform their important duties obediently and faithfully. They do not seek to crash the headlines of newspapers and be acclaimed by sensational crowds. The work of soul saving and physical healing is difficult and at times quite tedious, yet it must be done. The fundamental medium in all cases is the Word of God.

The Word must be taught and applied to all people: rich, poor, middle class, employed, unemployed, healthy and ill—be the ill temporary or chronic, curable or incurable.

The sick are ever with us. Most of us have been ill sometime or other. While suffering the agony of pain we clearly realize the value of health.

Physical health is a gift of God. We may keep it if we follow the simple rules of sane and clean living as outlined in the Bible, the truth of God. "The truth shall make you free. It makes us free not only from sin and damnation but also in earthly, physical problems, governed, of course, by God's holy will. There is freedom through the truth of God.

A Lutheran deaconess who took the opportunity to hear lectures on Mental Health and Psychology by the senior physician in charge of the New York Hospital for Mental Cases, gave the following Christian testimony:

"One thing the course has done for me," she stated, "and that is, it has strengthened my convictions as to the value of religion in the lives of men. Although we did not touch upon this phase of it as many would, no doubt, be reluctant in expressing themselves, and it may have been out of place in an audience of this kind, is it not a fact, nevertheless, that the direct cause of much mental illness has its roots in the one little word—sin? We may paint it with all colors to hide its ugly meaning—but it is there if the one admonition of the Savior of mankind were heeded: 'Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?'—what a marked decrease in the syphilitic psychosis cases and alcoholic mental diseases now crowding our institutions! If we are to believe that the premature senile psychosis and psychosis with cerebral arteriosclerosis are due to the stress and strain of modern living, then the God-fearing man who has come to accept and believe, 'What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?' is not likely to fall a prey to these destructive diseases. He is 'building castles above' and consequently does not chase after earthly riches, gain and pleasure, in other words, he is content.

"With the Christian, the conflicting urges of thought, feeling and action are all under control, for 'Thou God seeest all things'—is his daily thought. He feels that he is here to serve his Lord and Creator, and out of love to Him, wants to serve his fellow-man. The spirit of projection, dissociation, repression and rationalization cannot gain ground in his life, because with the help of God, the source of his strength and inspiration, he strives against these tendencies also. And who will dispute the peace of mind, the solace and blessings that flow from prayer?"

These sincere words of the deaconess are truthful indeed! A testimony of one who has obtained first hand information in actual work of mercy in a large city. Regardless of where we are we are confronted by sin. And not only that, we must fight against it, against our own sinful bodies, the devil, and the world. This we can do only with the Word of God, the truth. We must apply this truth to ourselves and to others at all times, for the Lord Jesus says: "The truth shall make you free."

Uncle—"Engaged to four girls at once! How do you explain such shameful conduct?"

Nephew—"I don't know, unless Cupid shot me with a machine gun."

Atty. and Mrs. Sherman White and son, Billy, of Pampa visited in McLean Friday.

A drive about the city will convince the most skeptical that the denizens of this little city are preparing some mighty pretty front yards, and in some instances, the back yards are not hard to look at. Of course there are a number of rent places that no effort of beautification is being made. However, we know some renters that are seemingly taking as much pride in their abode as if the place belonged to them. It is truly great to have a renter of this calibre, but alas! they are scarce. Most of them don't think they are getting their money's worth unless they have wrought destruction about the place. Some of them appear never to have had anything themselves, and don't want the other fellow to have anything. Such renters are easily spotted, however, as they are constantly on the move.—Terry County Herald.

We Owe It All to Them!

MEMORIAL DAY . . . the day consecrated to the patriotism, the devotion to Flag and Country, of this great nation's defenders. In our hearts and our memory their deeds live again . . . their sacrifice an inspiration to nobler thoughts of duty and service to our fellow man. Verily, a reminder that Life is, more than merely the pursuit of worldly gain . . . more than living for ourselves alone.

Let us express our gratitude to the Veterans in time-honored custom. Where'er they rest in consecrated ground, cover them over with Spring's prettiest blossoms. And, to their living comrades, extend a word of cheer. For, it is to them all, that we owe our present PEACE, FREEDOM, SECURITY and HAPPINESS!

TVA CHARGED WITH WASTEFUL AND IRREGULAR DOINGS— SMITH BOOM GROWS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD © Western Newspaper Union.

SECRET hearings were opened by the house military affairs committee to investigate charges that the Tennessee Valley authority already has squandered $1,000,000 of government money in questionable awards of contracts for dynamite and powder and through other irregularities. Arthur E. Morgan, head of the TVA, and his two fellow directors, David Lillenthal and Harcourt A. Morgan, were summoned before the committee.

The charges are contained in an audit of the TVA made by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl. Some of the irregularities he claims to have uncovered are:

The awarding without competitive bidding of a contract which obligated the government for an indefinite sum of money, estimated at $615,000.

Overpayments of an original contract by as much as 120 per cent.

Awarding of contracts, in contravention of law, to firms which were not the low bidders, with one contract going to a bidder who was seventh from low.

Failure to require one large contractor to post performance bond and at the same time the payment of fees to this contractor in advance, despite a legal prohibition against advance payments.

Solicitation of bids by telephone or circulars among a certain group of private business houses, or in irregular ways.

The TVA directors were said to be prepared to disprove the worst of the charges, and to be ready to make some disclosures of their own, especially concerning the submission of uniform bids by nine munitions companies.

The inquiry came as the administration was trying to get the house committee to report favorably the bill, recently passed by the senate, providing more money for the TVA and enlarging its scope of operations.

HOUSE leaders were hurrying toward passage the administration's amendments to the AAA act, enlarging the powers of that organization, the demand of opponents for long debate being denied. It was certain this measure would arouse controversy in the senate. Jobbers and retailers of foodstuffs, of whom there are about 111,000 in the country, are much disturbed by these proposed amendments for the measure extends to them the processing taxes now imposed on food manufacturers, makes them subject to regulations not yet specified and requires that each one be licensed by the AAA.

FIRST of the list of projects to be undertaken under the works relief program is the Passamaquoddy tidal power scheme, and there is a lot of grumbling because it was placed at the head of the line by the President himself. This project was once turned down as uneconomic by Secretary Ickes, the assertion being that it would cost too much in comparison with the returns that might be expected, would take too long for completion and was in a region where so much work relief was not needed. But Mr. Roosevelt, whose Campobello summer cottage is near the location of the proposed dam site, is said to be personally interested in the project, believing it will bring new industries to the area. Another argument in its favor is that the old question of the practicability of harnessing the ocean tides may be settled by it.

Anyhow, this big Maine project is to go ahead, and Maj. Phillip B. Fleming of the army engineers corps has been chosen to take charge of the construction. Major Fleming has been serving in the PWA for some time but has been released for this Eastport work.

IN AN executive order the President established pay rates under the $4,880,000,000 work-relief measure, dividing the country into four sections in setting regional wages. Pay will range from $19 a month for unskilled laborers in the South to $94 a month for professional and technical workers in the East. The wages will be from 20 to 30 per cent below the prevailing wage rate structure throughout the country.

WHEN Dennis Chavez was brought into the senate to be sworn in as successor to the late Bronson Cutting of New Mexico, six "liberal" members silently walked out of the chamber in protest against the efforts that had been made to unseat Mr. Cutting. Those who participated in this unprecedented action were: Senators Hiram Johnson, California; William E. Borah, Idaho; George Norris, Nebraska; and Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota, Republican Independents; and Robert M. La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive; and Henrik Shipstead, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite.

CERTAIN Republicans, most of them business men and financiers, have started a movement for the nomination of Alfred E. Smith for President by the Republican convention. The idea seems rather fantastic but its sponsors profess to believe that such a fusion nomination would attract great numbers of conservatives and offer the best chance to defeat Mr. Roosevelt. Other Republicans are talking about making Lewis Douglas of Arizona, former director of the budget, their candidate; he also is a Democrat.

Charles C. Hellinger of New York is chairman of a Smith-for-President committee, a non-partisan organization, and he reports that the Smith boom is gaining headway and that national headquarters will be opened this summer. Membership in the committee, he asserts, has more than doubled in the last month, much of the enrollment being voluntary. Mr. Smith has neither assented to this boom nor discouraged it.

SENATOR WAGNER of Ohio offered in the senate and house identical railroad labor pension bills drafted in a way to meet the objections of the Supreme court to the law it declared unconstitutional. Because of the "must" list of measures demanded by the President, this bill may not be acted on in this session.

As re-drafted, the Wagner-Crosser bill seeks to meet specifically the ruling of the majority of the Supreme court that congress had exceeded its authority by legislating for the welfare of the workers; by invading the field of intrastate commerce, and by imposing drastic pensions provisions.

FOUR thousand farmers, gathered from all parts of the country, invaded Washington and told President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace that they were enthusiastic believers in the efficiency of the AAA program and supporters of the amendments which the administration asks congress to make in the agricultural adjustment act.

Mr. Roosevelt addressed, from the south portico of the White House, what he called a "surprise party," and prefaced his remarks with the statement that "a great many of the high and mighty" have been deliberately trying to mislead many people by "lying about the kind of a farm program under which this nation is operating." He went on to deny emphatically that the government has "wastefully destroyed food in any form."

Next day many of the visiting farmers were in the senate gallery and heard Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware, Republican, score the President for characterizing critics of the AAA program as liars.

Senator Hastings then introduced a resolution calling upon the secretary of agriculture to submit all correspondence between the department and the visiting farmers, together with any instructions sent out to county agents with a view of producing the "spontaneous" visitation. Mr. Hastings also demanded to know how the delegates were selected and what financial assistance "directly or indirectly" was extended to them by the agricultural officials.

Over in the house Representative Fish of New York started a lively debate on the same topic, and he was even more outspoken than Mr. Hastings.

Rieberg has let it be known that he intends to retire from government work by July 1 and, after a long rest, to resume law practice. It is believed that W. Averill Harriman, NRA executive officer, and Sol Rosenblatt, head of the compliance section, also will resign.

RUSSIA'S immense airplane, the Maxim Gorky, largest land plane in the world, was destroyed when it collided with a small training plane over a Moscow suburb, collapsed at a height of 2,000 feet and fell in ruins. All on board, 48 in number, were killed, as was the pilot of the small plane. The victims were mostly engineers and workers of the Central Aerodynamic Institute and members of their families who were being taken for a pleasure ride.

The Maxim Gorky was a show plane rather than a practical ship and was used for spreading Soviet propaganda. It was built by popular subscription in 1934 and was an all metal, eight-motored monoplane with a wing spread of 200 feet and a fuselage 100 feet long, and was most elaborately equipped. The Soviet government announced immediately after the disaster that it would build three more giant planes of the same type.

NEVER recovering consciousness after a motorcycle accident, Col. Thomas E. Lawrence—the glamorous "Lawrence of Arabia" of war days—died in a military hospital in Dorsetshire, England. Yet in his twenties when he organized the revolt of the Arabs against Turkey, Lawrence gained undying fame. When after the peace King George sought to reward him, he refused on the ground that injustice had been done to his friends the Arabs. He changed his name to T. E. Shaw and devoted himself to experimental work in aeronautics. His writings included a brilliant account of his experiences in Arabia and a translation of the Odyssey.

ITALY is willing to make peace with Ethiopia, agreeing to arbitrate their disputes and to cease from further military measures, but on terms that Emperor Haile Selassie probably will not accept. These terms, as reported to London by Sir Eric Drummond, British ambassador to Rome, are:

First—The integrity and independence of Ethiopia are to be respected. Second—Ethiopia must accept a division of the country into three zones of influence. One-third of the country, the Anglo-Sudan frontier, would be in the British zone. It would include Lake Tsana, which is the source of the upper Blue Nile which flows into the Nile at Khartoum. Another third would be within the French zone of influence. It would cover the railway from Djibouti, French Somaliland, to Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia. The third zone, under Italian influence, would include all highlands, which are suitable for Italian immigration and which comprise the only fertile section.

One of Italy's complaints against Ethiopia has been that slavery was still in existence there. This has been rectified by an edict of the emperor setting free the serfs. He also has abolished ancient and unequal taxes on 60 per cent of the land, substituting a fixed and regular payment.

BISHOP John Fisher and Sir Thomas More, who lost their heads four hundred years ago for opposing the marriage of Henr. VIII to Anne Boleyn, were canonized by Pope Pius XI in a magnificent ceremony in St. Peter's, Rome, and about 50,000 persons were in attendance. The chief interest in the proceedings was in the sermon delivered by the pope, in which he urged the audience to pray that England might return to the Roman Catholic faith. The Holy Father said:

"We desire that with your ardent prayers invoking patronage of the new saints you ask of the Lord that which is so dear to our heart—namely: that England, in the words of St. Paul, 'meditating the happy consummation which crowned the life' of two martyrs, may 'follow them in their faith' and return to the father's house 'in unity, faith and knowledge of the son of God.'"

"Let those who are still separated from us consider attentively the ancient glories of their church, which were at once the reflection and the increment of the glories of the church of Rome."

BY ADOPTING the resolution of Senator Bennett C. Clark of Missouri, Democrat, the senate gave the NRA life only until April 1, 1936, considerably curtailed its powers. The expressed wishes of the President and NRA chairman Donald Richberg for a two year extension with enlarged powers were ignored. The changes called for in the Clark resolution provide for prohibition inclusion of business firms engaged wholly in intrastate commerce under NRA codes or regulations; banning price fixing except in mineral resource industries, and directing the President to revise all codes within thirty days to conform to the provisions of the resolution. Majority leaders in the house were prepared to fight for the two year extension, but admitted the Clark resolution was likely to prevail there also. In that case, in the opinion of many observers, the NRA will be practically dead.

While the senate was debating the matter, Mr. Richberg told a mass-meeting of NRA workers that the Clark resolution was "complete folly." This aroused the Missourian to wrath. He called it "the most brazen exhibition of impudence on the part of a bureaucratic official which has fallen under my observation during my lifetime," and next day, in a set speech, he told his fellow senators at length just what he thought of Mr. Richberg and "his ambition to be a Mussolini in the United States."

An organization called the industry and business committee for NRA extension was called into action, as were the farmers for AAA, and its head, Ward Cheney, silk manufacturer, announced that a meeting of delegations of industries would be held in Washington May 22.

SENATOR HUEY LONG's resolution for an investigation of Postmaster General Farley was rejected by a vote of 62 to 20, the "Kingfish" being the only Democrat recorded in favor of it. The senate then passed the Norris amendments to the Tennessee Valley Authority act, increasing the TVA's bonding authorization from fifty to one hundred million dollars and protecting its electric power activities from court interference.

Next on the senate program was the Wagner labor relations board bill which its author declared was "responsive to the ominous industrial disturbances of last summer when blood ran freely in the streets and martial law was in the offing."

After several amendments designed to limit the power the measure inferentially gives the American Federation of Labor had been rejected, the bill was shoved through by a vote of 68 to 12.

PRESIDENT SMETONA of Lithuania saved from the firing squad four Nazis convicted of plotting to restore Memel to Germany, commuting their sentences to life imprisonment. Germany had been making a terrific row about the case, and was not at all satisfied with Smetona's action, holding that it did not correct the injustice.

Jane Addams of Hull House
What Is Reality?
Ludendorff Said No
A Woodpecker Sermon

Miss Jane Addams "of-Hull House" is dead. She set an admirable example before men and women. She devoted her life and her fortune, all of her time, effort and money, to the welfare of unfortunate women and children. She was one of those that make it difficult not to believe in heaven.

If there were no future rewards for such goodness the entire universe, with its relativities, quanta, electrons and light-years, would be one ghastly joke.

Learned Professor Einstein, with the also learned Professors E. Podolsky and N. Rosen, all of Princeton Institute for Advanced Study, makes a deep announcement that will interest those that can understand it.

This is it, condensed: "A scientific theory can be devised which will completely describe reality."

It seems the present scientific theory, supposed to give a description of physical reality by the "quantum-mechanical" method, does not work out satisfactorily, and you are sorry you learned it.

It is pleasant to see scientists on the shore of the ocean of knowledge, playing with one or two little pebbles. Science is far from any "scientific theory" that will completely describe reality, for science cannot tell what "reality" is.

In a universe without limits of time or space, made up of particles of electricity variously grouped, in electrons, atoms and molecules, no man-microbe can hope "completely to describe reality."

Chancellor Hitler of Germany conferred upon the fighting German General Ludendorff the title "field marshal general," highest rank in Germany's army. General Ludendorff, greatest, after Von Hindenburg, in the big war, declined with thanks, announced his retirement to a small hunting lodge in the Bavarian mountains. It is suggested that Germany's most distinguished living general did not feel that his glory could be increased by Chancellor Hitler, who was a corporal in the army of Austria.

"Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

There must be a sermon in the Chicago woodpecker that every morning woke his neighborhood drumming on a copper drainpipe.

The copper resisted, but the woodpecker drummed on until a boy with a slingshot stopped him forever. What is the sermon?

Does it deal with modern efforts to ignore the nature of man, stand old "Supply and Demand" on his head, and prove that super-intelligence can make the world over in ten minutes?

Professor Kemmerer, financial expert, of Princeton, worrying about inflation, "too much money in circulation," says the government is spending money twice as fast as it comes in. This, he says, is done by "pumping the banks full of artificial credit." Having done that, the government borrows its own money from the banks and pays them interest, which seems mildly amusing.

President Roosevelt may be right about professors. An eight-year-old girl missing in New York; all police detectives, plus 60 policemen, especially assigned, and troops of Boy Scouts searched the neighborhood vainly for 61 hours.

Prof. Taylor Putney, Jr., of New York university, said to the police: "I saw boys and girls digging a cave in the sand late on the day of the girl's disappearance; look there," and pointed. There at the foot of the concrete wall the girl was found, apparently smothered by sand that had caved in. There is much in knowing how to look for what you want to find.

In New York city racketeers collect $10,000,000 a year from poultry dealers, having, by way of persuasion, killed a few of them.

To discourage the racketeering, Police Commissioner Valentine tells merchants to "slug racketeers" at sight and offers to help them get revolvers for shooting.

An old poker player when he "raised" used to say: "The best way to discourage vice is to make it expensive."

Very old is the story of the fish in which was found a precious ring that the tyrant of Samos had dropped into the sea. And new is the story from Sydney about a captured shark that disgorged the tattooed arm of a man. The man had been murdered, his body dismembered, the parts thrown into the sea. The shark swallowed one arm, returned it as evidence and the murderer may hang. Invent something more improbable than that.

EVERYDAY NEW YORK

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK—Thoughts while strolling: The blarney of those Irish bus conductors! To old and middle-aged ladies they chirp: "Hurry up girls!" Nuisance name to write: Woolcott. Billy Rose has become better known than his wife, Fannie Brice. Look alike: Jack Lait and Ed Wynn.

Mrs. Allan Ryan might have just drifted down from the Milky Way. Who remembers when braces were galleases? Silver would skyrocket with most of us down to the last dime. Cholly Knickerbocker's sky blue Rolls. Jimmy Durante suggests a drawing by Steig.

Add names that come up like a hiccup: Bernard Baruch. Best contributed joke of the month: John Chapman's yarn of the lady screaming "Someone has taken my pay and my aunt's pay!" And the cop yelling: "Cut out the pig Latin and tell what happened!" Most talented of the Bennetts—Joan.

Modern Katharine the Great: Cornell, Hepburn and Brush. What's become of the wink? No present day sculptor so widely discussed as the eccentric George Grey Barnard. Does anyone buy one of those canes you can make into a prop-act? Cyrena Van Gordon has Maxine Elliott's real walk.

Modern Damon and Pythias: Lee O'welly and George Buckley. Marc Connelly used to stand twice to make a shadow. Now look! Speaking of iron constitutions, there's Norman Kerry. And still the life of parties. White wet edgings again. I used to go for them. Those mincing decorates around Automats.

City Interlude: On the elevated platform at Sixth avenue and 42d street is a penny in the slot for salted peanuts. When someone operates it the pigeons from Bryant Park swoop around in sudden cloud. And nearly everyone feeds the pigeons instead of himself.

William Rhinelandier Stewart is probably New York's best known beau. The most intimate friend of Vincent Astor and best man at his wedding, he swirls with the top drawer set as well as attending the off-hand Bohemianisms sponsored by A. C. Blumenthal. He squires a blueblood to one first night and the next day a many splendored beauty of the stage or cinema. The superbly valeted type of man about town, wearing the mask of boredom but never quitting the chase. He is of illustrious ancestors and when there used to be rich persons he was one.

The popularity of Gene Tunney grows steadily. It is reflected by the sports writers who razz him gently at every opportunity—jibes about his bookishness, tall words and friendship for George Bernard Shaw. That phase has passed. Today the tone is of sincere respect. He has not the easy going approach of the lovable Dempsey or the picturesque background but respectable fans of boxing believe he did more to give the game class than any predecessor since Corbett. Champions from Sullivan down have, with minor exceptions, been loud-mouths, blow-hard. Tunney said he was going to quit when he fought Heeney and did. As to his ability, he licked the champion of champions, Dempsey, twice. Such an astute historian as Bill Corum believes Tunney in top form could slash the bungling Baer to ribbons in a few rounds. Jack McAuliffe says he could have licked Sullivan. Tunney's aloofness is largely shyness. He has stuck by old friends.

The most spectacular yet shortest lived success among theatrical team-ups continues to be Gallagher and Shean. No alliance before or since has equalled it. Obscurities out of burlesque, they rode the top waves on the notes of an exquisitely mediocre but amazingly catchy song. Shean continued a life of exemplary habits with fame and fortune but Gallagher, then in his 50's, went a pace that soon cracked him up for permanent in vaudeville and the wheel chair. I was a press agent during his last professional days when he was led half blind to the wings to wait his cue in agony. Their sons, incidentally, are now carrying on over the radio with the original song.

There's fun in a prow in one of those only-for-the-rich specialty shops where O, so diffident clerks in their haberdashed glory have to detach themselves from day-dreaming to wait on customers. They sell such dodads as waterproof cigaret cases for bathing, twin face clocks for between beds, compasses for cross country drives, pedometers for golfers and such. But what fascinated me was one of those long bell yanks they use to summon butlers in English dramas. I'd like one for the Gallipoli stiltin' room if I dared.

Wheel of Mystery Quilt Picturesque

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This quilt dates back many generations and there are possibly several reasons why it is called the "Wheel of Mystery." Each 18-inch block is composed of 4 9-inch blocks set together in reversed color combinations. Two small blocks are light on dark material and the other two dark on light material. When the 18-inch blocks are set together, as illustrated above, you will see dark wheels with light colored material and light wheels with dark colored material. Count the circles from left to right in the above assembled quilt. The colors seem to reverse as the eye travels across.

When making the quilt use two contrasting solid colors for patches to get the proper effect. Twenty 18-inch blocks with a 4-inch border will make a quilt 81x99 inches. This is one of the 33 patchwork quilts in book No. 23. All illustrated, with instructions, cutting charts, and showing different ways for assembling, will be mailed to you upon receipt of 15c.

Women from the 'teen age to the change of life have found Cardui genuinely helpful for the relief of functional monthly pains due to lack of just the right strength from the food they eat. Mrs. Critt Haynes, of Essex, Mo., writes: "I used Cardui when a girl for cramps and found it very beneficial. I have recently taken Cardui during the change of life. I was very nervous, had head and back pains and was in a generally run-down condition. Cardui has helped me greatly; testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician."

CHAPTER 3 WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Paroled from the galleys after a five year sentence for stealing a loaf of bread, Jean Valjean, with revenge in his heart, stumbles into the home of kindly old Bishop Bienvenu and finds in him at least one man with faith in the world and willing to trust an ex-galley-slave. With renewed faith, confidence and vigor he starts out to conquer the world anew.

The Road Back With courage born of the bishop's words, Jean's progress in the next five years bordered on the miraculous. Under a new name, he has established himself in a town in Alsace, and step by step has worked his way up in the respect and esteem of the small community.

As M. Madeleine, he has changed completely. There is a streak of grey in his hair, but otherwise he is clean shaven and is smiling, cheerful, good-humored. He has been eminently successful in turning an absolutely bankrupt manufacturing firm into a thriving business organization. We find him in the best of spirits as he bids good-night to a group of prominent townfolk who have come to inform him of his appointment as mayor and magistrate.

Left alone with the aftermath of a successful and happy day, Jean turns to the fireplace. On the mantelpiece are the bishop's candlesticks. He smiles at the thought of all these symbols have done for him. "We've come a long way together, haven't we?"

There is a knock at the door, and the housekeeper shows in a man in police uniform. As the man comes forward, Jean's hands, still holding the candlesticks, drop slightly. It is Javert, warden of the prison-ship. The two men come face to face, but Javert is precise and also deferent.

"I have denounced you, sir, as an ex-convict."

...tial, showing no sign of recognizing Jean. "M. Madeleine?" Jean nods. "My name is Javert. I am the new inspector of police assigned to this district, reporting for duty to the new mayor and to pay my respects." Jean remains thoughtful for a moment after Javert's departure. He looks up at the candlesticks and then at the door. The sudden appearance of Javert has troubled and disturbed him.

It is shortly after that Jean actually buys little Cosette, daughter of Fantine Lesroules, employed in his factory, from the proprietor of the Sergeant of Waterloo Inn and his grasping wife to look after until her mother is well and able to take care of her herself. Jean and Cosette are playing checkers on the floor. Cosette suddenly dives her hand on the board and makes an obvious move. Jean laughs: "You win!" "The two are the picture of contentment."

Javert Again Toussaint, the old housekeeper, comes into the scene. "M. Javert is here." "Javert?" "He wants to speak to you privately. I asked him if I could take a message, but he said it concerned you only. He spoke in such a peculiar way."

Javert is not the calm, stoical, austere person one would expect. He is apparently under stress of emotion. He wipes the sweat from his forehead; his hand is trembling. He hears the noise of the latch and the two men come face to face. Javert speaks in a husky undertone: "I am sorry to disturb you at this hour, but I have a duty—an urgent duty to perform." "Go on." "As soon as I was sure—I had to act at once." "Yes?" "M. Madeleine, a criminal act has been committed." Jean nods to him to go on. "An agent of the government has committed a crime—a crime against a magistrate." Jean is surprised and puzzled. "Agent? Who is this agent?" "It is I."

"And who is the magistrate?" "You." To Jean's surprise, Javert takes out his official police passport and puts it on the table, continuing: "You must prefer charges against me. You have a right." As Jean protests, Javert continues, his words tumbling over one another, brokenly, breathlessly. "Yes, yes, yes, I tell you, you must prefer charges. I, who demand justice of others, must demand it for myself. You see, I denounced you to the prefect of police."

"As what?" "A former convict." "Well?" "After that incident with the woman, Fantine, when you so oddly distinguished between the law and justice and refused to prosecute, I began to ferret out your past. I resented your interference with my carrying out my duty. I questioned your authority, so I went to work. Secretly I traced you. By studying the records of escaped criminals and those who had failed to report for parole and by an exhaustive process of elimination, I finally became convinced that you were a convict named Jean Valjean."

"What was that name?" "Jean Valjean." "Ah. And what was his crime?" "As an ex-convict he was ordered to report to the police at Pontarlier. He has never reported. I traced him to the Bishop Bienvenu. He stole silver, but the bishop would not charge. The trail ended there, and although I had no positive proof, I was so sure—I denounced you."

"Real" Valjean Found "And—what—what answer did you get?" "That I was mad. I must have been mad to make such a mistake—worse, I was a fool, for the real Valjean has been found." Jean looks at Javert in amazement.

"Yes, they arrested him last week at Arras. He goes by another name, Champmathieu, but he was caught for theft. The dates of his disappearances are identical with Valjean's records—witnesses will swear to him—a fellow-criminal recognized him. Undoubtedly they have the man, Valjean." "Well?" "I made the mistake. I allowed a personal grievance to interfere with my duty. I must be dismissed." Jean now takes a different tone and says: "You did your duty—it is your place to suspect."

Now for the first time we learn something of Javert's creed. His confession is in a husky whisper, a man deeply and sincerely ashamed and broken by his failure. "No. There is more to it than that. I, too, have my creed, M. Madeleine. They call me hard and brutal, but I am not—I am just. But I've always said to myself, 'Yes, you're hard, you're ruthless when you are in the right, but look out—one day you, yourself, will trip. Then will you be just?' I swore I would. That time has arrived, M. Madeleine. I have caught myself. I have committed a crime. I have been unjust from anger, resentment, jealousy—what you will. I stand for justice—I have failed."

Seeing Jean is about to protest, Javert goes on: "What I have always demanded for others—the law, good or bad, but the law to the letter—I now demand for myself." Jean looks closely at Javert, and now it is Javert who is tormented and Jean who is almost consoling him. "I make no charge against you." "You must. If you don't, then I must." "You have your creed, Javert; I have mine. As mayor, I refuse to accept your resignation. I order you to think it over." Javert bows to authority. "You are too lenient, M. Madeleine, but I will do as you say." Jean moves to the door with him and stops. "When and where is this Jean Valjean to be tried?" "Arras, Monday." "Tomorrow? There is no doubt about the case?" "None. Everything is clear—he will be convicted. Goodnight, sir."

"JUNK MAIL MATTER"

State and Federal Government departments, corporations, universities and colleges and other institutions and interests certainly do waste a lot of money on junk mail matter that they send to newspapers. Most of this stuff is long winded articles that no newspaper would print—and nobody would read if it were printed. They seem to have no conception whatever as to the kind of matter the reading public demands and that the newspapers therefore can use. We do not know how much these interests pay for extra clerk and stenography hire, but the postage bill alone must be enormous. But we guess it has one redeeming feature. It furnishes employment for a lot of folks that otherwise would be out of a job.—Lynn County News.

Junk mail matter clutters the desk of every newspaper in the land. And also fills every waste basket in every print shop.

It is truly amazing how little of the matter is used and yet how much continues to arrive on every mail. It would seem as tho the investigators would get wise. There seems to be no count kept on matter used. The stuff is tossed into a mail sack and sent on its way to land in the discard when the final destination is reached.

In most cases the money represented in the deal is absolutely thrown away so far as publicity is concerned.

In the days of yore when the Congressional Record came to newspaper offices, the "devil" found the Record handy for single wraps. And editorial opinion of the government handbook was judged, not by the contents of the government publication, but by the number of paper wrappers that could be gotten out of the "government blatter."

If you heard somebody snorting when the singles were being put up for mailing, you made a good guess that the "blatter" had gone shy before the mailing was finished.

But the junk sent out in this day and age of free publicity-seeking is worthless. It is not even good for kindling.

Here is the remedy at a great saving to publicity hunters: A few lines, tersely told, would be far better than a lot of junk. A rate with papers for space used would insure publication. Money would be used wisely because the subject matter would reach the reading public.
