School Bond Election Carries Three to One

The school bond election held Wednesday carried with approximately three to one majority, 154 voting for, to 53 against.

The election means that the tax rate for the McLean Independent school district will be $1.50 per $100 valuation instead of the $1.00 rate heretofore charged, but it is understood that the valuations for the current year will be reduced one-third, which means that the taxpayers will not pay any more under the new setup.

"The newspaper is the community's strongest influence," said the speaker, "in that it leaves no community activity without record. The responsibility to the civic, commercial and cultural life of the community is reflected in each issue of the weekly newspaper."

The speaker closed his remarks by saying that there is no commodity that the newspaper cannot make a market for. "The old, the new, or the oddity can all be sold through the advertising columns of the newspaper."

Following Rev. Huber's address, the tail twister insisted upon fining the News editor as chairman of the program committee, and several Lions offered to pay the editor's fine, saying that the speech was one of the best heard in the club for some time.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—It has been only in the last year or two that this country began to realize that the Germans had done a vast amount of research in Blueprinting Ways and Means of the Dictators His Job over many years, in preparing for their world aggression. Devising ways and means to meet it on many fronts, military and political, our government belatedly discovers Dr. Calvin Bryce Hoover, dean of Duke university, who was away out in front in studying dictatorships, trying to understand them and find out what to do about them.

Dr. Hoover is an important member of Col. William J. ("Wild Bill") Donovan's new diplomatic brain trust, which recruits men of specialized knowledge who have disclosed a timely awareness of the more or less declared war against civilization.

Colonel Donovan's title of coordinator of information does not reveal the exciting character of his bureau which is in reality a somewhat mysterious ideological and political Scotland Yard, studying the origins and techniques of Nazi power, evolving plans to meet it in its under-surface penetration everywhere in the world, recruiting against the dictators some of the same psychological forces which they employ.

So far as the public record shows, Dr. Hoover scored a clean beat on our lavishly staffed state department in trying to understand dictatorships and to make an accurate appraisal of their intentions and possible outreach. It was in 1931 that he wrote "The Economic Life of Soviet Russia"; in 1933, "Germany Enters the Third Reich"; and in 1937, "Dictators and Democracies." Through the pre-war years of planetary complacency, he was writing, in his books and articles, an outline of Adolf Hitler as "genius and fanatic."

These studies were not philippics against Nazism. They were searching and studious inquiries into the origins and inducements of dictatorships. They now provide invaluable analyses of the Nazi cultural, economic, military formula for world conquest.

Dr. Hoover, born in Berwick, Ill., in 1897, was conditioned to patient, methodical work by working on farms and railroads in his youth. He attended Monmouth college and received his Ph.D. degree at Wisconsin university in 1925. When he was an undergraduate at the former school, he joined the National Guard and served two years in France in the World war, taking part in two battles. He joined the Duke university faculty in 1925, becoming a full professor of economics in 1930.

In the above clinical studies, Dr. Hoover does not find dictatorships blue-printed in any patterns of societal evolution. They can be fended off if we're "up and at 'em" without losing too much time—but, above all, they must first be understood.

CALEB S. BRAGG, manufacturer of the new plastics-and-mahogany airplane, which meets successful tests at Roosevelt field, was the matinee idol of early-day In Airplanes, Now auto racing Cuts Cost of 'Em

A handsome chap, rich, venturesome and a Yale man. In 1912, he won the Fourth International Grand Prix automobile race, and was awarded the Vanderbilt cup, by covering 409 miles at 89.3 miles per hour. In that day, a mile a minute had been put down as the limit of safety for automobiles.

Newspapers threw a fit over Mr. Bragg passing this deadline and living to tell the tale. Time flitters on. In 1918 he left the country breathless by flying from Dayton to Washington, 430 miles, in 2 hours and 50 minutes. In 1919 he set a new altitude record of 20,000 feet for seaplanes.

He was born in Cincinnati in 1886, the son of a manufacturer and businessman, and was graduated from Yale in 1908.

He is a former head of the Early Birds, an organization of aviators who flew before 1916. At one time he beat Barney Oldfield in a race in California. He had the crowds whooping for him whenever he entered a race. In 1920 he helped finance the Glenn L. Martin company and moved into less exciting but no less exacting details of scientific plane-building. He and many engineers think he has pioneered new strength and economy in airplane construction with his soybean job—or whatever it is.

Joe DiMaggio, San Francisco's stellar contribution to "murderer's row," is shown sliding into the home plate with the winning run in the Yank half of the ninth inning of the fourth game of the world series, at Ebbets field, Brooklyn, N. Y. Henrich, who scored before him, stands by as umpire Goetz calls the play. Dodger catcher Owen got the ball too late. In this game the mighty Yankees beat the Brooklyn Dodgers 7 to 4.

Brawn and Co-ordination for Flying Men

It might be just another physical ed class on another college campus, but this time it's aviation cadets at the "West Point of the Air," Randolph Field, Texas, who are building muscular co-ordination and body control. An hour a day of calisthenics and outdoor games keeps these prospective flying officers in trim.

Guarding the Life Line to British Shores

A striking photo is the above, taken somewhere in the Atlantic, and showing the guns of the British destroyer Holderness on guard over a convoy of British supply ships as they make their way across the sub-infested waters of the Atlantic. These ships with their holds laden with war supplies and food are the lifeline of the British.

A CYCLE OF HUMAN BETTERMENT

ADVERTISING gives you new ideas, and also makes them available to you at economical cost. As these new ideas become more accepted, prices go down. As prices go down, more persons enjoy new ideas. It is a cycle of human betterment, and it starts with the printed words of a newspaper advertisement.

THE SMALL TOWN EDITOR

By Harlan Miller, Columnist for the Des Moines (Iowa) Register

He influences, in the aggregate, more people than the snarkest big town columnist . . . He is so close to his readers an editorial controversy can have the impact of a quarrel with his wife . . . So it takes real courage to speak his mind.

If he had wanted to, he probably could have had a shot at big town journalism . . . He has seen lesser men acclaimed as journalistic prima donnas . . . In his low moments, when readers and advertisers gang up on him, he sometimes regrets he didn't go after that job with the AP or UP or the big town sheet.

But at heart he prefers the more spacious life of the old home town . . . He likes the familiar faces and knows he would be unhappy among crowds of strangers . . . Like another doughty warrior, he would rather be first in a little village in the Alps than second in Rome.

His newspaper reflects the intimate life of his town more accurately than the New York Times' pages reflect New York's . . . His modest income probably buys him more solid satisfaction than Ray Clapper's, and his writings win him more intellectual integrity than Pegler's.

Probably he does not realize fully the high esteem and honor with which the title "small town editor" strikes the ear around the press clubs in Washington and New York . . . No, how many high-priced correspondents and columnists, cornered in treadmills, wish they were small town editors.

He is something of an oracle along Main Street, but he must perforce accept on equal terms, if necessary, the opinions of the village idiot . . . If he ever cut loose and wrote all he really knows and thinks, some of his neighbors might be surprised . . . Sometimes he must even conceal his book-larin'.

If anything, the small town editor is too modest, too humble . . . He gives as big a dollar's worth as any man in town, and plays as vital and indispensable a role in the town's life—as well as in the state's and nation's . . . But he must be mighty careful to give the bride her due in a wedding story.

When someone who inserts a $1 ad acts as if he were endowing the paper, the editor can only look inscrutable . . . Sometimes he amuses himself by writing mentally a Windelshelque column—but only in fancy—about the follies of his neighbors . . . But it wouldn't do. Indeed not. Especially when he's apt to have coffee with 'em Friday morning at the cafe.

Secretly he has done a little writing on the side, and feels he has a good novel or biography in his system . . . But the only editor who's had time for that lately is an editor on Martha's Vineyard, where things are quieter than they are in an Iowa town. At heart he's an impatient reformer and crusader, but he's close enough to nature to be patient.

His desk is cluttered with innumerable details which require his personal attention, but he mustn't say no to any civic demand . . . Somehow he manages to get a lot of reading done, though . . . I think a congress composed of 531 small town editors wouldn't do so badly by the country.

He's bombarded with a lot of propaganda, and often he wishes he could scrutinize the men behind it with his own eyes . . . But he must stay home to keep an eye on the printing press and see that the income equals the outgo.

Sometimes these smart-aleck big-town columnists give him a pain in the neck and he cuts loose at them trenchantly . . . It kinda relieves his feelings, at that . . . He aims to phone every one in the telephone directory at least once a month, but that's a lot of telephoning.

Occasionally he permits himself a little humorous or poetic flight under a set of initials or a pen name, and I'd like to see a good anthology of these literary adventures . . . He has become a pretty good orator because of the demand for his speeches, though he's still secretly nervous on his feet . . . But he's affectionately regarded by the townsfolk and even respected by those who slap him on the back, and he can say more truth in jest than an outsider could get away with in earnest . . . He survives as an idyllic figure in an idyllic life, maybe one of the last.

I AM THE COUNTRY WEEKLY

I am the Country Weekly.

I am the friend of the family, the bringer of tidings from other friends; I speak to the home in the evening light of summer's vineclad porch or the glow of the winter's lamp.

I help to make this evening hour I record the great and the small; the varied acts of the day and weeks that go to make up life.

I am for and of the home; I follow those who leave humble beginnings; whether they go to greatness or to the gutter, I take to them the thrill of old days, with wholesome messages.

I speak the language of the common man; my words are fitted to his understanding. My congregation is larger than that of any church in my town; my readers are more than those in the school. Young and old alike find in me stimulation, instruction, entertainment, inspiration, solace, comfort. I am the chronicler of birth and love and death—the three great facts of man's existence.

I bring together buyer and seller to the benefit of both; I am part of the market place of the world. Into the home I carry word of the goods which feed, and clothe, and shelter, and which minister to comfort, ease, health, and happiness.

I am the word of the week, the history of the year, the record of my community in the archives of state and nation.

I am the exponent of the lives of my readers.

THE RAIMENT OF ROYALTY

Several times we have made the statement that there is nothing finer in a business way than the relation existing between an American business firm and a regular customer. Two incidents occurred within three hours of each other last week that possibly suggest that phrase might just as well apply to a firm and a customer whether he be a regular customer or not.

While parking, head-in, to pick up a pressed suit, a delivery truck stopped behind us. The proprietor saw our predicament and without saying anything or without fuss he began looking for the driver of the truck to ask him to move on. He had pressed a suit, delivered it, collected the money and had other work to do, but the sight of a customer being discomfited on the street near his place of business suggested he was not yet through. The driver was located. He, too, was a business man and was glad to back up his truck so the cleaning and pressing man could serve a customer without the customer having to wait to get away. We drove off thinking what a fine spirit a simple little 25-cent purchase had set up.

Three hours later we bought a drink at a lobby stand. As we were taking the last swallow, the elevator door closed. "Hold it, Frank," shouted the stand proprietor, and the door was reopened that we might walk in without waiting—a king among men because we had become a customer of a man who was a customer of the building.—CAPS and lower case.

People Don't Stop Buying...

EVEN IF PRICES ARE ADVANCING

They keep right on doing things day after day, week after week, month after month, just like they did last year and the year before . . . They're playing, working, buying, wearing out and replacing all kinds of merchandise this year, the same as before . . . and with surprisingly little variation from month to month.

THEY GET PAID OFF PRETTY STEADILY; FOOD PURCHASES ARE REGULAR, TOO; DRUGGISTS CAN'T LOAF MUCH; THEY REPLACE CLOTHING . . . AND BUY NEW CARS

So . . . folks don't stop buying. They buy things consistently the year 'round. Consumption is steady, month after month. The business is there twelve months of the year. So keep your advertising going in order to secure your share.

WHY ADVERTISE SPASMODICALLY WHEN CUSTOMERS BUY STEADILY?
