Here's the menu: Broth, roast beef, mashed potatoes, green beans, sliced tonato, mayonnaise, ice cream, whole wheat bread, butter and jelly, and milk. That is a rather regular meal that is often served. If a guest with diabetes is to partake of the meal, sliced oranges or sliced banana with cream would be substituted for the ice cream, and the diabetic guest would not add jelly to his bread and butter. The problem of weighing and measuring the amounts of food need not concern the occasional hostess for a diabetic guest, since the guest himself is versed in that more detailed activity and has soon learned rather automatically to estimate the different amounts of different foods. Therefore that standard meal, minus the sugar, foods would normally be quite fitting for a guest with diabetes. The diet for epilepsy is also limited in sugar, and, like the diabetic diet, is carefully weighed. Just as the diet for each diabetic person must be set for the individual by his doctor, so the diet for epilepsy is a very personal thing based upon the activity and needs of each special patient.

Taking the basic roast beef menu, an epileptic child who is a dinner guest would probably require that the broth and potatoes be emitted, and dessert would consist of the special canned fruits such as water-packed peaches, served with heavy cream, and with no milk to drink. Just to be on the safe side, though whole wheat bread is often allowed, it would be best to serve the aerated gluten bread with butter. If your dinner guest who suffers from gout is completely off meat-and he would surely tell you if he is-you could substitute cottage cheese or egg for the roast beef in his menu, otherwise serve roast beef. Instead of broth, which he isn't supposed to have, his scup could be cream of potato with crackers. The only other change in the basic for a gouty guest would be the sliced tomatoes plain. When you have a child in the cuddly, crawling stage, you have the perfect reason for installing an automatic electric water heater-the safest water heater made. Your child can crawl right up to the water heater, pull itself up by holding on to its spotlessly clean sides, wrap its arms around the water heater and be perfectly safe, thanks to the complete insulation and no-flame features of an electric water heater.

These same features make an electric

In 1935, I started to college, thanks to the generosity of an aunt who allowed me to live in her home in Stillwater, Okla., where I attended one year. In 1939, I finished college, and received a bachelor of journalism degree, and in about two weeks I went to work on the Memphis He who gets hot under the Democrat. With the exception of about three months when I was employed on the Galveston Tribune, I worked there until I entered the service in February, 1942. I was released from active duty in December, 1945, returned to Memphis and again worked on the paper there until moving to McLean in October, 1946. You know the story from there. That is my biography, at least the facts of it. There are some tales in my life which might prove interesting to some of you, just as there are tales of any person's life. There are many which I would not even give orally, much less written in this column. Therefore, the interesting part of my life I will just leave out.

At 35, I do not consider myself as very old; as a matter of fact, just about half as old as the average man lives to be.

Yet in the 35 years I have been alive, there have been two world wars, and many, many other smaller struggles wherein man takes man's life and goods. Thirty-five years, and two world

Notice to Public

All citiizens are asked to place all garbage in a place which is accessible to the driver of the trash truck. All wet garbage is to be placed in closed

It is hoped by the council that all alleys will be kept open in the future to allow better facilities for handling trash and refuse.

Residents are urged NOT TO BURN TRASH OR WEEDS ON THE ASPHALT PAVEMENT, anywhere in town, since this is very damaging to the city streets.

Your cooperation in these matters will be appreciated.

Statement Concerning County Taxes

We wish to make the following statement concerning the equalization and proposed tax increases in Gray County property

For several months the Commissioners Court has been working toward the equalization of values and has employed skilled people to aid in this effort. A proposed change in values requires notice, and all cards have been mailed out to the taxpayers. However, upon completion of the survey, it is found that the total of such valuation exceeds the present needs of the county.

In view of this fact, the Commissioners Court has decided that value increases shall be not more than one-half of the proposed increases indicated on the eards recently mailed to each taxpayer.

The Court, serving as a board of equalization, for these properties, will be in session Monday, July 23, 1951, and continue through the week, or until all taxpayers who wish to meet the board shall have had an opportunity to be heard.

Bruce L. Parker, County Judge. Arlie Carpenter, Commissioner Precinct 1. J. W. Graham, Commissioner Precinct 2. Fred S. Vanderburg, Commissioner Precinct 3. Wm. Earnest Beck, commissioner Precinct 4.
