June 25 Vote Will Affect 1956
Wheat Price Support

The outcome for the wheat marketing quota referendum on June 25 will affect the price-support level and determine whether marketing quotas will be in effect for the 1956 crop of wheat.

Another point which wheat growers should have in mind when they cast their ballot is that if the vote is favorable, marketing quotas will be in effect and those who exceed the farm acreage allotment will be subject to a marketing penalty of 45 per cent of parity on their excess wheat. If the vote is unfavorable, marketing quotas will not be in effect and there will be no penalty for excess wheat. Acreage allotment will be in effect for price support purposes even if marketing quotas are disapproved.

Pink or Treated Wheat

A number of cars of pink or treated wheat have been seized by the Food and Drug Administration in the area served by the Chicago CSS Commodity office. This is an extremely serious problem. Pink or treated wheat may not be disposed of for human food or animal feed use. The only authorized disposition other than for seed purposes is certain commercial outlets for non-food and non-feed use. These commercial processors, as a matter of policy, will not buy treated wheat, so there is virtually no market outlet. Producers should not mix any

TO SAVE MONEY

HERBERT HOOVER'S latest nationally-broadcast address dealt with the work and goals of the Commission on Reorganization of the Government, which he heads. The Commissioner's reports have been coming out at frequent intervals lately, and more are due. Some 400 leading executives and professional men contributed their time and experience over a 20-month period to the 20 Task Forces which produced them. The magnitude of the job is indicated by the fact that there are about 1,400 different agencies in the government, spending a total of $63,000,000,000 a year.

The previous Hoover Commission of five years ago, which was authorized by President Truman, had 70 per cent of its recommendations adopted, and substantial improvement in the economy and efficiency of government resulted. The present Commission was given much wider authority than the prior one. It considers basic questions of policy as well as of administration. As an example, one of the reports deals with the problem of government functions which are competitive with private enterprise. There are between 2,000 and 3,000 of these. Most of them, former President Hoover said in his address, "were created in wars and emergencies for some special needed task. But when the task was completed, each had aboard it an empire-seeking bureaucracy and a large pressure group which benefited from it." He added that all of them are exempt from Federal taxes, that very few pay any interest or amortization on the capital the government has invested in them, and that they have other special advantages. He also said: "The loss is not wholly the taxpayers' money. It is also a loss by injury to the vitality of the private enterprise system. It is a destruction of freedoms."

The Commission's reports make recommendations of two sorts. One consists of recommendations to administrative agencies which can be carried out within their present authorities. The other is recommendations requiring Congressional action. In the first nine reports, there are about 250 of the administrative recommendations and about 170 of those involving legislation. Mr. Hoover emphasizes that this does not mean 170 separate laws—about nine would be sufficient.

How much can be saved from all this? In the reports so far completed, to quote Mr. Hoover again, "Our separate Task Forces estimate that an aggregate of $6,000,000,000 of savings could be made to the taxpayer. And beyond that there could be returned to the treasury about $7,000,000,000 of money which could be provided otherwise. And there are still more to come." Here he stated that the savings would result from the elimination of waste, and "not the strangulation of either our defense or the stifling of public welfare."

Finally, the former president emphasized that there is more at stake than saving money and improving governmental efficiency. At the end he said: "Our job is to show a safe road to a balanced budget. And this is no trivial job. Its accomplishment is vital to every cottage in this land."

"But over and above even that, many of these reports spell out ways to strengthen the foundations of the Republic."

James E. and Miriam A. Ferguson of Texas were the first husband and wife to be elected governors of any state.

LES
By LESTER

Could be that I appear to be very prosperous, with plenty of money to invest; but I don't think so. Perhaps instead, it's the growing trend toward returning to the days of "get-rich-quick" schemes.

At any rate, I have had three or four opportunities within the past three weeks to invest money (which I haven't any of), and reap a big reward in a short period of time with no effort on my part.

Investment companies are springing up everywhere. Their salesmen are hitting the doors of America with regularity. It is not within my knowledge to know whether all of them are legitimate and trustworthy. Some of them are, I'm sure, while other newly-organized companies are probably far from trustworthy.

The latest opportunity I have had to make some easy money came last week-end. A salesman from Amarillo heard that we had had some hair here; so he came down to see whether he might be able to sell some paint and roofing material. I didn't want any of that type of material. It so happened that he also represented (he said) a certain investment corporation. Shares in the firm are now selling for $7.50 each. The corporation has been negotiating recently to sell its stock to a much larger investment firm back East. The sale will be concluded July 31, and shares will then be worth $10 each—the eastern concern buying this Texas outfit will be willing to pay that much. So, you see, should I buy 100 shares for $750 on July 31, these shares would automatically be worth $1,000. That's a $250 profit. And the thing about it is that I could buy this $750 worth for only $150 down. At least that's what the man said.

However, I didn't buy. I didn't have the $150. Besides that, I didn't believe all I was told.

The above was not written to discourage any person from investing in corporate stock. Far from it. But it was written so that perhaps you will investigate before you invest. Stock in a good corporation is stock well worth owning. It isn't a get-rich-quick deal at all, but it will generally pay fairly good dividends. Then if the stock is split later on, your shares will, of course, increase greatly in value. That happens every day.

I do not claim to be any authority whatsoever on any type of stock; as a matter of fact, I probably know less about stocks than almost any person in the area. But if I ever do get enough money to buy any stock as an investment, I am going to make certain that the deal is legitimate.

No doubt, most of these salesmen who are making the rounds today are very legitimate. But it would be just my luck to get one who wasn't.

So don't hesitate about investments; but do investigate first.

The strength of America has been built on the idea of the people owning the large companies. In Russia, the government owns the large companies, and the Russian people are told, consequently, that the people own the companies. But the trouble is that the government does not represent all of the people in Russia; only a handful of people are represented.

I have just received a pamphlet, entitled "The Story of Creative Capital," put out by the Du Pont company. The foreword in the pamphlet is worth your reading time. It is as follows: "Once there was a man named Karl Marx, a brooding man whose sleep was troubled, a man who looked darkly at the world about him. He was a thoughtful man, and, as he viewed the rise of mill and factory, he devised a theory. His theory was simple: Ownership of the mills, as with ownership of the land, was the key to the future. Ownership should, therefore, be vested not in the hands of the few, but with something he identified as The People.

"A hundred years later, in the United States of America, something that Marx hadn't figured was going on. Ownership by the people? Yes, indeed; by the thousands, by the millions of people. Millions owned the homes they lived in, millions the land they tilled. Millions owned a share of the possessions Marx valued highest, the tools of production. Young people, old people, rich people, poor people. An up-and-coming couple in Manhattan. A quiet widow in Virginia, tending by her doorway roses she had planted so long ago. A giant steel puddler in Gary, proud of his strength and his skill. A gentle nun in Nebraska, as trustee for a hundred orphaned juniors, owners themselves tomorrow. A lobsterman in Maine, a stevedore mate in Louisiana, an oil driller in Texas. People in droves, people in throngs, people in hordes, people in multitudes. The people.

The people of the United States. "Yes, the people own the tools of production. By his own definition, Karl Marx' prophecy has been realized. How odd a quirk of fate that in Russia, where he is revered, his dream should have been shredded on the jagged shards of state bureaucracy. How odd to find that it is here, in the capitalism he reviled, that the promise of the tools has been fulfilled."

Antibiotics in Industry
Millions of lives have been saved by antibiotics, but these earth-mold drugs may also be put to such diverse uses as keeping food fresh longer, prolonging the life of leather, and revolutionizing the cosmetics industry.

Such antibiotics as penicillin, streptomycin, polymyxin and bacitracin are finding startlingly broad applications. By serving as efficiency experts, for example, they may help raise our standard of living. Experiments show the antibiotics make silkworms produce silk more quickly, and speed up the honey output of bees.

Some antibiotics are proving successful in reducing the mildew on surface coatings, and making shoes and purses wear longer. Others are useful in eliminating bacteria that clog up machinery.

In agriculture, antibiotics have been spectacularly successful in increasing the production of food animals and crops. Poultry and hogs are being produced more cheaply, because animals raised on an antibiotic-supplemented diet grow faster and healthier and are ready for market sooner.

Agri-mycin field trials were recently conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The trials proved the effectiveness of this antibiotic combination in drastically cutting down on the bacterial diseases that ravage whole crops.

Current experiments raise hope that the drugs also will help keep food fresh longer. Terramycin, tested on fish, greatly reduced its "spoilage" rate.

The day may soon come when antibiotics will be as valuable for non-medical use as they are today for fighting infections.
