Lovett Library Can Obtain Almost Any Book

Library in Austin and is free of charge to users of Texas public, academic and special libraries. You can get books, magazine articles, government publications and answers to almost any question through interlibrary loan.

The way it works is relatively simple. Say you want to read a book and the Lovett Library doesn't own it. All you have to do is ask the librarian to see if the book can be borrowed from another library. You will probably need to give the librarian as much information about the book as you can, including title, author, approximately when it was written, where you heard of it, and anything else that might be helpful in identifying and locating the book.

The librarian will then call the Interlibrary Loan office, located in the Amarillo Public Library, and tell them what you want. They will check the Amarillo Public Library to see if it is owned; if owned, it will be sent to the Lovett Library.

If Amarillo doesn't own it, the book's "vital statistics" will be typed into a computer terminal. That terminal hooks Amarillo up with approximately 2,000 other libraries in the United States. The main computer for this network of libraries, known as OCLC, is located in Ohio and contains records of about six million books.

Not only can the terminal operator of Amarillo find out in which libraries the book is located, but by typing in the right code, he can also ask them to loan the book to the Lovett Library. If the book is on their shelves and they are willing to loan it, they will send the book to your library. The librarian will call you and you can check out the book or use it in the library. When you are through with it, the librarian will mail it back.

If you contemplate using interlibrary loan, there are some things you need to know: 1. It takes time--an average of two weeks--to get materials. So plan ahead. If you have a deadline date, let the librarian know. 2. Not everything can be borrowed. Best sellers, inexpensive paperbacks, new, rare, very old and reference books will not be loaned by most libraries. 3. Not every request can be filled; most of them are, but some things just can't be found. 4. It's easier to find books or magazine articles on a particular subject than it is to find a specific book. So unless you specifically want a particular title, request "information about..." when talking to your librarian.

So the next time you can't find what you need in the Lovett Library, don't give up! Interlibrary loan's motto is "If we haven't got it, we'll try to get it."

In The Kitchen

I discovered last week that packages of boned chicken breasts are now available in McLean. If you have never cooked with this type of chicken, I can guarantee that you will find it a great delicacy. Try these recipes:

CHICKEN PARISIENNE
6 boned chicken breasts salt
1 can cream of mushroom soup
1/2 cup dry, white cooking wine
1 small (3 oz.) jar chopped mushrooms
1 carton sour cream
hot rice

Place chicken breasts skin side up in a greased casserole. Salt chicken. Combine wine, mushroom soup, and mushrooms. Pour over breasts and rooms. Pour over breasts and rooms. Bake in 350 degree oven for 1 1/2 hours. When chicken is done, remove breasts to platter. Stir in one carton of sour cream to soup mixture. Heat gently.

Pour over chicken and serve over hot rice.
(CHICKEN PLANKS)
4-6 boned chicken breasts salt
1 egg
milk
flour

Remove skin from chicken breasts. Cut chicken into strips about one inch wide. Salt. Dip chicken into egg and milk, and then roll in flour. Fry in hot grease.

Gone Fishin
by Jeanette Fish

Shakespeare and Amy Vanderbilt would not have got along with each other for five minutes. She would have asked him to leave the party or he would have had her killed. He goes for loud speeches which end in somebody getting run through with a sword, putting an end to meaningful conversation. She leans toward quiet, polite talk. "The pen is mightier than the sword," means getting marked off the society page.

Amy says, "If we ignore ceremony entirely, we are not normal, warm human beings. If we stand on ceremony in all things, we are rigid." Her 833-page book of etiquette is not for kings who tend to stand, lie, sit and die on ceremony.

Long, formal speeches have a purpose. Kings are usually on the ragged edge of being killed by a brother or nephew. If the killing deal falls through, they get poisoned by the queen. There aren't any rules of etiquette for poisoning. Get it done! If you are not going to kill him, you depose him. Kings cannot be ousted. They must be deposed or killed.

He cannot trust his family but usually has one loyal servant who addresses him as "my liege" and stands around with whatever the king might need in the way of equipment. SNATCHING AN AX FROM A SERVANT, HE KILLED HIM!" (quote from Richard the Second)

Amy's-Servant Rules-cover answering the door to ask, "Who is calling?" The chapter does not take in being hurled against the wall by a knight with a sword, taking the stairs three at a time. It wouldn't do any good to call up the stairs "my liege, hide behind the curtain." Shakespeare has stabbed through more curtains than politicians have said "In these troubled times." A seamstress would have steady work in a castle.

Amy says backbreaking chores should not be labeled WOMEN'S WORK. She knows a man "father of seven children who CHEERFULLY takes on the family laundry chores, sits and reads a book as it runs through the washer.

Kings do not have time to do the laundry. They are usually busy getting dressed to go to war. When everybody is ready to leave, they say "to horse, to horse!"

Wars and duels are late getting started because of the praying that has to be done. War prayers are short due to legions of knights riding over the hill who prayed on their way over. They are ready to fight.

Duel prayers are longer to give God time to get there if he is not at a war. If the King "throws his warden down" this stops duels and wars.

Amy settles anger without all this commotion.

"Dear Mr. Robbins. You will be sorry to hear that our baby was snapped at yesterday by your dog. I am sure it was the baby's fault as the dog is normally a friendly animal, but your children do bring him here unleashed. I wonder if you can ask the boys to leave Rags at home, at least until the baby is old enough to understand he musn't pull a dog's tail. WITH kindest regards to you AND MRS. ROBBINS Cordially, John Doe.

Shakespeare beats Amy out on this point by giving the dog his own lines. Rags and Mr. Robbins would get their compensation if the Royal Dog knocked on the door with "I am her highness, Dog of Kew. Pray tell me sir, whose dog are you?" The answer to all this is a warden. Get one if you can.

Soil Conservation Making Study

USDA's Soil Conservation Service is currently making a study of alternative ways in which a National Plant Materials Centers Program can be conducted that responds to resource conservation needs. Lee McDonald, SCS District conservationist at Pampa, says his agency is asking the public for their views on alternatives under consideration and for other proposals.

McDonald says SCS, in cooperation with other Federal and State agencies and through other arrangements, presently operates and maintains 22 plant materials centers in the United States. Each center develops new plants for conservation purposes in the geographic area it serves that are released jointly with the State's agricultural experiment station and other State and Federal agencies to commercial growers for production.

The plant materials center serving Texas and Oklahoma is located at Knox City, Texas. Plants that have been released from the Center in the past are Mason sandhill lovegrass. Selection -75 kleingrass, Alamo switchgrass, Shoreline common reedgrass, and Aztec maximilian sunflower. Each of these new plant varieties has proven most successful. Their benefits have reached many farmers, ranchers, and other land users. These newly selected plants have provided improved production on range and pasture lands, allowed for a more stable vegetative cover on critical eroded areas, and help to support wildlife habitat.

"The range of alternatives being studied for conducting a National Plant Materials Centers Program vary from continuation of the program as is to transferring complete operations and management of the centers over to nonfederal entities," McDonald said. "First, we need to know what the public needs and wants-and possible alternative plant materials needs might be met."

Additional information concerning the plant materials program may be obtained at the SCS office in Pampa at Gray County Courthouse Annex. McDonald said that SCS would welcome concerned citizens inquiries and expressions of interest.

Interested persons wishing to comment about the direction they think the future plant materials program should take are being encouraged to write letters by April 1 to George C. Marks, State Conservationist, Soil Conservation Service, P.O. Box 648, Temple, Texas 76501.

Energy Savers Save Dollars

Installing insulation, storm windows, solar heating, and other devices can reduce the energy used to heat and cool the home. These expenditures can also reduce the taxpayer's federal income tax bill if he qualifies for residential energy credits.

There are two kinds of residential energy credits available to individuals: a home energy conservation credit for money spent on equipment to conserve energy in a personal residence; and a renewable energy resource credit for alternate energy sources such as solar, wind or geothermal devices. These are available to both renters or owners of a dwelling, provided they actually pay for the items.

Probably the most common ways to save energy are to install storm or thermal windows and doors, insulate the roof, floors, walls, and then the outside of the hot water pipes and water heater. Or the taxpayer may decide to spend money modifying the furnace to burn fuel more efficiently, or adding an automatic set back thermostat to save energy when he is not home.

The money spent on these types of components is eligible for the energy conservation credit. The taxpayer is entitled to a credit of 15 percent of the first $2,000 spent on components—that's a maximum of $300.

The credit is based on the cost of items installed after April 19, 1977, and before Jan. 1, 1986. The $2,000 limit applies to each new principal residence. But remember, in order for the home to qualify, it must have been built or substantially completed before April 20, 1977.

Some persons might install alternate energy equipment, such as solar collectors, windmills, or geothermal devices which are eligible for the renewable energy sources credit. This is 30 percent of the first $2,000 and 20 percent of the next $8,000. Unlike the energy conservation credit, this may be claimed for equipment installed in a personal residence no matter when it was built.

Certain items are specifically excluded from the residential energy credit. For example, drapes, carpeting, wood paneling and exterior siding may have an insulating effect, but are primarily structural or decorative. Other items that are not eligible for the credit include wood or peat burning stoves, heat pumps, fluorescent lights, and hydrogen fueled equipment.

For more information, see the free IRS Publication 903, "Energy Credits For Individuals." It can be ordered by mail using the order form in the tax package, or by calling the IRS number listed in the phone book.

A.G. RICHARDSON, EDITOR
John Carpenter and Dick King were among the visitors in the city Saturday afternoon.

F.M. Faulkner had the misfortune Monday afternoon to get both the bones in his right leg broken just below the knee, resulting from his horse falling with him. Dr. Montgomery set the bones and at the present the gentleman is resting easy, although it will be several days before he can again be out.

Dick King, while riding on the Carpenter ranch, Tuesday morning was thrown from a wild horse, receiving injuries that will disable him for some time. His collar bone was broken, and his ear and face badly disfigured, which apparently resulted from a kick from the horse after he had become unmanageable. Dick came to town Wednesday morning where he will remain a guest of the Hindman Hotel until he becomes able to return to the ranch.

Pampa Antique Show Planned

The 20th Century Cotillion Study Club will hold its 18th Annual Antique Show and Sale March 28, 29, and 30 at M.K. Brown Auditorium in Pampa. The show will be open Friday and Saturday from 10:30 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Tickets to the Antique show and sale may be obtained at the door for $1.50 donation. Advanced tickets may be obtained for $1 until March 27 from collector's corner in Pampa or from any club members.

Opportunity plan, Inc. will receive all proceeds from the sale. OPI is a student loan program which assists students throughout the panhandle area with financial assistance in continuing their education. Students attend the college of their choice, there are presently over 100 college and technical vocational schools attended by students participating in this program.

The offices of Opportunity Plan, Inc. are located in Canyon. OPI president, Buff Morris, states that money used for operations of OPI are raised independently of the funds secured for student loans so that every dollar given to assist in this program goes to the students. As of March 1, OPI has a capital value of $1,300,000 and has assisted approximately 4,200 students. At present about 380 students are receiving loans.

Cheryl Smith Places In Bowling Tourney

Cheryl Smith of McLean placed seventh in singles and eleventh in all events in the Top Of Texas Bowling Tournament in Pampa recently. Mrs. Smith was one of 200 women entered in the event.

She will receive a 200 patch for bowling a game of 235, and a century patch from the National Bowling Association for bowling 122 pins above her average.

The 20th Century Cotillion division of OPI has a capital value of over $30,800 and has supported 71 students through the plan amounting to loans of $186,956. Students from 27 area towns and two foreign countries have used funds from this division.

Farmers Planning Fewer Acres Of Potatoes, Onions in Texas

AUSTIN—Total acreage for both spring potatoes and summer onions are expected to be down in the state this year, according to Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

Spring potato acreage is expected to be down 13 percent while nine percent fewer acres are to be planted in summer onions. Total estimates for spring potatoes is 6,200 acres, compared to 7,100 harvested last year. Summer onion producers have announced planting intentions of 7,500 acres, down from 8,200 a year ago.

Potato harvest in the Lower Rio Grande Valley is expected to begin in mid-April. Except for a light freeze March 1, growing conditions have been favorable, Brown said.

Mild temperatures in the Winter Garden area promoted growth that was set back temporarily by the March freeze. Harvest will begin there around May 1. In the Knox-Haskell area planting is underway.

Brown said most onion transplanting should be completed this month on the High Plains with harvest expected in July.

Onions are making good growth at Presidio where harvest should begin in early May. The Pecos harvest will start around June 1.

from the Texas Energy Extension Service

What is a Trombe wall and how does it function in terms of passive solar gain within a building? T. W., Houston.

The Trombe wall is named after Professor Felix Trombe of the French Solar Energy Lab in the French Pyrenees who tested a mass solar wall system two feet thick in 1967. The principle behind the Trombe wall is that of indirect solar gain through a storage mass in the form of a wall which collects and stores heat directly from the sun and then transfers it to the living space. The wall's storage mass intercedes between the sun and the living space.

One of the major features of the Trombe wall is the reduction of temperature swings through a time lag effect between the solar gain and the living space. This time lag effect is about 6 to 12 hours for masonry walls 12 inches to 16 inches thick.

Thus maximum heating occurs in the evening at a time when it is needed most. This makes the Trombe wall ideal in climates which experience large temperature swings between day and night.

Although the Trombe wall has many desirable features, one of the drawbacks is its high initial cost because of the extra mass of concrete, masonry, or water.

We are thinking about incorporating passive solar features in the design of a new home we will be building. Can you suggest some good sources on designing a passive solar home? E. R., Wichita Falls.

The following are sources on passive solar design: Design with Climate, Victor Olgyay, Princeton University Press, 1963. Earth Sheltered Housing Design, University of Minnesota, Van Nostrand Reinhold.

Energy and Form, Ralph Knowles, MIT Press, 1977.

Regional Guidelines for Building Passive Energy Conserving Homes, AIA Research Corp., Washington, D.C.

Solar Control and Shading Devices, Olgyay & Olgyay, Princeton University Press, 1978.

Solar Energy, Bruce Anderson, McGraw Hill, 1978.

The Architecture of the Well Tempered Environment, Reynes Banham, The Architectural Press, London, 1969.

The Passive Solar Energy Book, Edward Mazria, Rodale Press, 1979.

For a more complete bibliography, the Texas Energy Extension Service office has available free copies of a bibliography on passive solar energy designs and systems put out by the National Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center.

We have just moved into a brick home with aluminum windows, sheetrock walls and ceiling, and a minimum amount of insulation in the attic. We are having problems with sweating windows. We use open space heaters, although we do have central heat. Would some of the sweating be reduced if we started using central heat?

Should we put up storm windows on the north side where the problem is so severe that the water runs over the aluminum ledge of the window and drips onto the wood on the inside? As an emergency measure we have folded newspapers which help, but looks untidy. Can you suggest some way to remedy the situation? J. W., Bryan.

To correct the moisture in your home, the building construction advisor for the Texas Energy Extension Service recommends that you discontinue using open flame heaters and begin using your central heating instead because the open flame heaters produce and distribute water vapor in the house. It is also recommended that you add more insulation to help alleviate the problem.

If condensation continues on the north side, it might be a wise idea to add the storm windows, as you suggested.

Do you have free information on solar and wind energy? What type of material does the Energy Extension Service distribute on these topics? B. E. W., Abilene.

The Texas Energy Extension Service has available free packets of information on solar energy and wind energy.

The solar packet includes listings of solar manufacturers, distributors, contractors, designers and architects in Texas; listings of solar courses offered in Texas universities and colleges; listings of solar homes available for visitation (by appointment) in Texas; general bibliographies on active and passive forms of solar energy; and a bibliography of solar information available in the supplemental collections of the Dallas, Houston, El Paso, and San Antonio public libraries.

The wind energy packet contains listings on wind energy researchers, manufacturers, and distributors in the region; basic facts on wind energy for the home, and a bibliography of wind energy sources.

The Energy Extension Service office at Texas A&M University also has available a packet of information on earth shelters.

I built an all electric home which is brick in 1973. It has 6 inches of insulation in the attic and insulation in the outside walls. The house has aluminum windows which freeze on the inside whether the drapes are open or shut. As a remedy, I put storm windows on the outside over my regular windows, but it still sweats and drips water on the windows. What can be done to alleviate this condition and what causes the problem? G. G., Clyde.

The moisture problem that you describe results from more water vapor being generated inside the house than can escape through normal structural openings. This can be reduced by decreasing the water vapor produced inside the house and allowing it to escape.

Reducing the amount of water vapor generated inside can be accomplished in a number of ways. When cooking, utilize an externally vented range hood to allow moisture to leave the house. After showering and bathing, briefly use a bathroom exhaust fan or raise the window to allow moisture to exit the house.

If you have a humidifier, avoid using it with the heating system. Try to reduce vapor from laundering. Make sure your clothes dryer is properly vented to the exterior and do not hang laundry in the bathtub or bathroom.

I am planning to buy a new air conditioner, and I would like to know the efficiency rating (EER) of several models that I am considering. Does the Energy Extension Service Office at Texas A&M have this type of information? J. T., Arlene.

The Texas Energy Extension Service Office at Texas A&M University has the current copy of the Directory of Certified Unitary Air-Conditioners and Air-Source Unitary Heat Pumps. The Directory lists air conditioners and heat pumps by manufacturer, type, and model providing their individual EER ratings. When requesting ratings on equipment, be sure to specify the manufacturer and tonnage or Btu capacity, as well as the type and model, if possible. If you have a question about energy conservation around the home, send it to ENERGY ANSWERS, Texas Energy Extension Service, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas 77843.
