BY A 50 PER CENT VOTE

Whether the light vote cast in Saturday's election on the $170,000 school bond issue was the result of indifference, silent opposition or insufficient publicity on the issue is a matter of conjecture. If it was the first, it is inexcusable on the part of the non-voters when an issue of this importance is before the people for a majority decision. If it was the second, it was carrying finesse or politeness or whatever it was a bit too far. If it was the third, it was willful neglect on somebody's part and an inglorious victory.

But thus the matter stands, that fifty per cent of the voters of the county approved the issue for the purpose of building and equipping a modern school building. If the powers that be learned something of drawing up petitions, orders, etc. in bond elections in three attempts to pass a road bond issue, then this issue should be approved by the attorney general and the bonds should be ready for sale in the near future.

Then, if a decision can be reached on what material is to be used in building the structure and the matter of a location on school-owned land settled, we might hope for awarding of a contract on the building early next year.

West Texas is a place where natives bog their automobiles to the running board and like it.

THE AMENDMENTS

Three weeks from next Tuesday, November 4, is the general election. A general election in Texas ordinarily does not create much interest over the state for the reason that the dominance of the Democratic party allows for few interest-creating contests.

But this coming general election should be one of particular interest by reason of the fact that four important constitutional amendments are to be voted on in that election. And West Texas should be intensely interested in the election by reason of one of those amendments, that which permits taxing of University lands, located in 17 West Texas counties, for county purposes. Passage of this amendments would secure justice for these West Texas Counties, remove a burden from the few and place it on all, thus securing equality in support of a Texas institution that redounds to the benefit of 253 counties in the state.

This amendment is known as "House Joint Resolution No. 11," which was passed unanimously in the Senate and lacked but two votes of passing unanimously in the House of Representatives at Austin. This resolution provides that Article VII of the constitution be amended by adding section 16, which reads as follows:

"Section 16--All land mentioned in Sections 11, 12 and 15 of Article VII of the constitution of the state of Texas now belonging to the University of Texas shall be subject to taxation for county purposes to the same extent as lands privately owned: Provided they shall be rendered for taxation upon values fixed by the state tax board and providing that the state shall remit annually to each of the counties in which said lands are located an amount equal to the tax imposed upon said lands for county purposes."

This amendment will appear on the general election ballot in approximately the following words: "FOR THE AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF TEXAS SUBJECTING THE LANDS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS TO TAXATION FOR COUNTY PURPOSES, AND PROVIDING FOR THE PAYMENT OF SAID TAXES TO THE PROPER AUTHORITIES OF THE COUNTIES WHERE SAID LANDS ARE LOCATED.

And "AGAINST" to same amendment. Scratch out the "AGAINST" clause to vote FOR this amendment. Certainly every voter in Crockett County and each of the other 17 West Texas counties should cast a vote on this amendment, and more certainly there should not be a negative vote in all these 17 counties.

This amendment has been endorsed by Governor Dan Moody as "just and fair," by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, by the County Judges Association of Texas, by the County Judges of West Texas, by the members of the Board of Regents of the University of Texas, and by the Texas Legislature, unanimous in the Senate and lacking only two votes of unanimity in the House.

The "University Land Amendment Association," organized at a meeting in McCarney of representatives of the seventeen counties is sending out educational literature over the state through its publicity director, Jean Chenoweth, editor of the San Angelo Standard-Times, waging a campaign to educate the voters of the state to the justice and fairness of this amendment.

Among other intelligent information concerning the amendment contained in a folder just issued by the association and circulated all over the state are the following paragraphs:

"The university exists for all counties, not just the seventeen where its holdings lie, and it is therefore just that all the counties help to bear the cost. Spread over 253 counties in Texas, the amendment means only a minimum amount to each, and the good will redound not alone to the counties mostly affected, but to the university which will get better highways and an enlarged public program bringing increased development.

"Although the counties concerned are growing they are still comparatively sparsely settled. This condition, carrying with it a scarcity of children of scholastic age, has brought on a situation under which home-owned property by the state is retained by the state and a small part of it returned in the form of school apportionments. This also works a hardship on the counties which would be offset to some extent if university land local taxes were available for the support of schools. In 1928 the counties in which the University lands are located paid to the state in taxes $1,281,498.47 of which $556,185 was paid back in school apportionments, leaving $725,313.47 retained by the state, a manifestly unjust procedure which deserves prompt rectification by the adoption of this amendment."

The price of sheep has already gone up in the mind of ranchmen if not on market quotations.

AN HONEST MAN

A man died the other day in New York, whose business record contained not a single blemish. Daniel Guggenheim and his five brothers, sons of Meyer Guggenheim, made money by literally tens of millions. They made it in one of the three fundamental industries. There are three lines of business which increase the world's basic wealth and only three; they are farming, fishing and mining. The Guggenheims were miners, owners of the world's largest sources of copper.

They let others share the profits of their mining enterprises, but they never let anyone share their losses. If a mining prospect "petered out" before it had returned the money invested in developing it, the Guggenheim brothers shouldered all the loss; if it made money, every investor got his share in proportion to his investment. In one instance they repaid more than $1,500,000 to investors, out of their own pockets, because the mine in which they had invested did not turn out as well as had been expected.

It was Daniel Guggenheim's money, $2,500,000 of it, which went to finance the extensive experiments made in the past three or four years, looking toward making aviation safer. In many other ways he was a public benefactor. But he will be remembered all over the world—for his operations were world-wide—primarily as an honest man, whose pride it was to deal justly with his fellow-men.

A quarter million dollars worth of damage was done in Brady by high water. Wonder how much it would have amounted to if the water hadn't come.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Giles Chittenham, distressed over the suicide of his younger half-brother Rodney, returns to Europe from America, where he had made an unhappy marriage. Rodney had killed himself because a notorious woman, Julie Farrow, threw him over. Giles is introduced to Julie Farrow by his friend Lombard, in Switzerland. He resolves to make her fall in love with him, then throw her over as she threw Rodney. She tells him she has made a bet with her friend "Bim" Lennox that she can drive her car to the top of the St. Bernard Pass and back. Giles challenges her to take him with her and she accepts. They start out in the face of a gathering snow-storm.

Chittenham discovers, to his amazement, that the girl beside him in the car appeals to him as no other woman has ever appealed. And something intangible convinces him that her feeling toward him is similar to his own toward her. "Do you believe in love at first sight?" he asks her, as the car coils up the mountain toward the hotel.

At the hotel, after refreshment, Chittenham and Julie found their mutual attraction so strong as to be irresistible. In the morning they returned to the town below, Julie apparently jubilantly happy. Lombard tells Chittenham that he has made a mistake, that this Julie Farrow is not the one who ruined Rodney, but her cousin of the same name. Chittenham is horrified. He calls at Julie's hotel and confesses that he had tried to win her love for purposes of revenge, believing her to be the other Julie.

Giles goes with his mother to a London night club, where he meets Julie Farrow—his Julie—who is drinking heavily and trying to appear to be having a good time. A mutual friend introduces him. He says he has met her before, but she laughs in his face and declares they have never met.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Oh, no, I don't think so. He was not one of those who specialize in his women very much. I think a kiss was just a kiss to him."

She slipped away and they saw her join Essen and Mrs. Ardron at the far table.

Doris glanced at Chittenham and made a little grimace.

"Cocktails!" she said eloquently. "Such a pity! It's not like Julie a bit. She used to be such a decent sort, but now you really can hardly tell her from the other Julie. Bred in the bone I suppose!"

"Are the two Julies really very much alike, Miss Gardener?" he asked with an effort.

Doris hesitated, pursing up her scarlet lip.

"The other Julie is really better looking," she said after a moment. "Most men call her beautiful, but to me . . . well, I used to prefer this Julie until lately."

"You mean—has she really changed so much?"

Doris laughed.

"It may sound absurd, but she has! Every one is commenting upon the fact. She used to be quite different. Then quite suddenly she altered! She began to haunt places like this and she began to drink too much. If I didn't know her as well as I do I should say she has had some rotten love affair, but Julie never liked men. She's different to her cousin in that respect at all events."

The music stopped once more on the fashionable jarring, questioning note.

"I suppose we must join the others," Doris said. "Hark at Julie you can hear her voice above all this racket."

Mrs. Ardron's face was a study. She was trying to smile and look as if she thoroughly enjoyed the situation, and yet there was a timid look in her eyes as if she were not quite sure if it were the right thing to laugh or not.

"Miss Farrow has been telling us that she has a cousin so like her that they are very often mistaken for one another," she said.

"Yes, so I understand," Giles said rather shortly.

"It must be very awkward," Mrs. Ardron murmured.

"I find it rather amusing," Julie said flippantly. "You don't know my cousin, do you, Mr. Chittenham?"

"I have not that pleasure."

"Oh, you'll love her, Julie rattled on. "All the men do. She's got the biggest scalp collection in London."

Giles made a little movement to rise but Julie was too quick for him.

"Dance with me, Mr. Chittenham!" she commanded. And before he was aware of it Giles found himself back again in the whirling throng, his arm round Julie's slim body, her hand resting lightly on his shoulder.

He looked down at her and felt that it must be a dream.

The same, and yet such an utterly different Julie to the girl he had held in his arms a few weeks ago.

the bad girl of the family. I believe even Bim—dear Bim is shocked sometimes! I believe even Julie—the other Julie would not be too pleased with me if she knew some of the things I do—

"What things, Julie?"

"Oh—just things! men, and things like that."

Chittenham caught her slender wrist in iron fingers.

"I should like to thrash you," he said savagely.

For a moment she struggled to free her arm, then suddenly she stood very still looking up at him.

"You did thrash me—once," she said.

"Bye-bye, every one! I suppose we shall meet again some day. Doris will tell you where I live, Mr. Chittenham, if you ever feel like running in for a cocktail, and if she doesn't remember you've only got to enquire of the police! I'm well known to the police."

She laughed again recklessly, waved her hand and strolled back to her own corner where she was greeted with ironical cheers and banter.

"Shall we dance?" Doris asked, and he rose at once.

He tried not to see Julie as they went round the room, but she seemed the only real thing in a crowd of unrealities. Laughing, always laughing in that shrill, reckless fashion! He longed to go across to her and pick her up in his arms and carry her away from the noise and heat and glare and soothe her into rest and sanity again.

Bim Lennox sat by the fire, a cigarette between her lips, and her feet thrust into a queer-shaped pair of Chinese embroidered slippers.

A clock on the narrow mantelshelf had struck four, and Julie was not yet home.

It was the third time running that Julie had arrived home in the small hours of the morning, jaded and pale, and trying hard to pretend that she had enjoyed herself.

"And no man is worth it!" Bim told herself almost savagely as she threw her cigarette end into the grate and rose to her feet.

"No man is worth breaking yourself to pieces for!" And Bim knew! For three years she had waited and hoped and suffered and told herself that some day a miracle would happen, but she had been wrong. The only thing that had happened had been that the man she loved had married another woman.

"We're such fools! Such pathetic fools!" she told herself, as she walked over to the window and pulled the curtain aside. Presently a taxicab turned into the street and stopped with a squeaking of brakes outside the block of flats.

WIVES

One could draw many interesting lessons from the recent biography of the great English barrister, Sir Edward Marshall Hall.

For instance, it furnishes a striking commentary on the difference between our method and the English method of administering justice. Sir Edward appeared in most of the celebrated trials of his time. Any one of them would have dragged on for weeks over here. The longest of them lasted eleven days in England. A majority were wound up in less than a week.

We are ahead of the English in most departments of modern business. We are even with them in medicine, in science, and, perhaps in literature. In the law we are woefully, shamefully and inexorably behind.

But at the moment I am more interested in one very human little incident in Sir Edward's life which occupies only a paragraph, and was perhaps overlooked by most readers.

He had just been elected to Parliament and had prepared a speech with which he hoped to dazzle the House and make his reputation. Again and again during the long night session he tried to catch the Speaker's eye, but each time he was overlooked in favor of some older member. So he went home with the speech still undelivered, its ringing sentences still ringing in his head.

There in bed lay his little wife, who had been asleep for hours. But Sir Edward, so much disappointed and so on fire with his own oratory, could not let her sleep. Forthwith he woke her up and insisted that she listen to the whole long speech.

Is there any wife in the world to whom something of the same sort has not happened?

I knew personally one of the leading men of the last generation. For years he had gone home every evening and—detail by detail—told his wife the whole story of the day's proceedings: what he did, what he said, and what other men had done and said to him. When she died at a ripe old age, the husband seemed organically sound and good for another ten years at least. Yet he followed her to the grave within a few months. Life had no more zest for him. He had lost his audience.

Go into a restaurant and watch the couples at their meal. See the man expanding under the encouraging smile of a girl, talking along, showing what a great fellow he is. And she, asking questions which are much dumber than they need to be, deliberately concealing her own wisdom in order to make him appear the wiser.

They are a great invention, these women, and particularly those of them who do us the honor to become our wives. Whenever any one tells me that, with the increasing wealth of the country, the wives are growing more idle, I contend that they still earn their living handsomely.

And would continue to earn it even if they had to do nothing but listen to us talk.

MAIN STREET LOOKS AT BROADWAY BY ERNEST CAMD JR

Among the Boys Back Home the idea prevails that every yap in New York is a Broadway Play-boy.

At fall of night he is supposed to make a bee-line for the Great White Way. From then until the foggy hours he skips high, wide and tipsy thru leg shows, night clubs, speakeasies. A very devil of a fellow. . . .

Result: when Gus and Steve descend upon New York for a combined business and pleasure trip (you know the combined business and pleasure trips?), they are primed for a terrific pace.

Here is what happens (it happened to me recently, as it had a dozen times before):

Two skylarking friends from the South breeze into town, after motoring 800 miles in two days, and not a whit worn by the journey announce that they are here to "do" New York.

They climb the Statue of Liberty and see Manhattan briefly during the afternoon. When night arrives they must see the speak-easies.

I show them several, where I gargle a stein of beer while they tank to the tonsils on gin and scotch and rye. After that, weakening, I propose that we go home—and to bed.

But no. They have set their hearts upon visiting the Hoboken saloons. So we drink our way up and down the New Jersey waterfront. (I, as is my habit, drank nothing stronger than raspberry soda of which I am excessively fond. . . .)

That was Saturday morning. "Well," I yawn, "s'glad to see y'boys. I spose you'll go to your hotel now and sleep all day tomorrow?"

"Not on your life," they brightly reply. "We're just before leaving for home. Gotta be at work 8 o'clock Monday morning. G'bye." And they talk about gay New York!

Mr. and Mrs. Madden Read are the parents of a boy born last Friday.

VIC PIERCE SELLS EWES

Victor Pierce of Ozona, has sold 500 yearling ewes to Frank Baker of Junction at $8 a head. These ewes come from perhaps the best flock in Crockett County, and one of the best in Texas and the United States, and will be the basis of a registered herd of Rambouillets in Kimble County, long the home of the Delaine. People in Junction are forsaking the Delaines and going to the Rambouillets. Baker made his purchase after looking over the entire country. These ewes will shear six pounds this fall, five months clip. Down in Crockett County where men are sheep experts even the old men tip their hat to Victor Pierce on sheep. Each year he adds to his flock the best of bucks obtainable. His rams stand up.—S. A. Times.

"This New Home Comfort Rate Makes Electric Refrigeration Even Cheaper"

"You've more than likely wanted one of the modern Electric Refrigerators but have hesitated because of operating costs. Let me explain how cheaply you can use electric refrigeration under the schedule of the new Home Comfort rate.

"The average five-room house without an electric refrigerator, electric range, or water heater uses most of the service included on the initial and second rates, so you would simply connect the electric refrigerator on the lighting circuit, use the one meter, and practically all of the additional service for refrigerator or other use would be recorded on the new low rate of 4c per kilowatt-hour—3c where service is also used for heating or cooking. This means that you could use an electric refrigerator at about one-third the initial rate.

"Many other appliances will be just as economical to operate. I'm going to explain some more for you next week."

And Remember—You Can Make Your Own Average Rate

Initial rate 12¢
2nd rate 7¢
Low rate 4¢-3¢

Julie at last! Bim listened anxiously. She was not alone. A man's voice was answering her laughing words, and presently the steps of two people ascended the stone staircase. Bim went to the door, turning up the light as she went.

"I thought you were lost!" she said.

"Lost!" Julie swept past her into the flat. "Why should we be lost? A fire! How can you bear it! I'm so hot I don't know what to do."

The man who had come with her was looking at Bim with enquiring eyes, hesitating in the doorway.

"It's usual to introduce people, Julie," Bim said.

Julie turned. "Sorry, I forgot! This . . ." She broke into a little laugh. "I'm sorry, I've forgotten your name," she told the man. "One meets so many people! This is my friend, Miss Lennox—"

"My name is Schofield— Lawrence Schofield," the man said. He was rather an ordinary-looking man, obviously a gentleman, and not very young. He kept looking at Bim in a half-puzzled, half- apologetic way, and after a few desultory remarks he said good-night.

"Good-night!" Julie twitted him. "Don't you mean good-morning? It's nearly five."

Without knowing why, Bim felt rather sorry for Schofield; she went to the door with him and offered her hand.

"Good-night, and thank you for seeing Julie home."

Bim bolted the door and came back into the room.

Julie had lit a cigarette, but it had gone out again, and she was leaning back amongst the cushions— her eyes closed, and her mouth drooping in dejected lines.

Bim stirred the fire into a blaze. "Who is he?" she asked.

Julie opened her eyes. "Who?— Oh, Schofield. I don't know. He was there to-night, and he seemed rather like a fish out of water, so I took compassion on him. Not very interesting, is he?"

"Nobody very exciting there to-night?"

"No, at least—oh, yes!" A little flame lit Julie's weary eyes. "There was one rather exciting person. Guess?"

"I couldn't."

"Giles Chittenham."

"Oh!" Bim avoided looking at her friend, and Julie rattled on. "He is as charming as ever!" Julie said airily. "I danced with him once or twice—once, I think!

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

LAND-MARKS OF THE BODY

A farmer and stockman came to consult me some days ago, saying that his right kidney was giving him almost unbearable pain—could not walk for pain, like toothache! I had him point out the exact location of greatest severity; he removed his tobacco and placed his thumb just within the entrance of his right hip pocket: "there's where she's given me the devil right now," he declared. This of course was the right "sciatic notch." The great sciatic nerve from its origin in the lumbar spine, emerges and comes fairly near the surface here. I explained his mistake at once; if the patient stands erect, and draws a line horizontally around the body at the level of the umbilicus—the right kidney's lower extremity would touch the line; the left kidney is above that level. The pressure of the liver on the right, causes the slight difference in level.

The "small of the back," is below the kidneys. There is, almost never pain in either kidney, because of the lack of sensory nerves there. Practically all back-ache is due to abuse of muscles or nerve-fiber of the lumbo-dorsal, lumbar, or sacral regions.

Every one should know the "sciatic notch." The big nerve-trunk that occupies it—and the path of this nerve down the outer rear-quadrant of the thigh, branching at back of knee, and on to ankle and foot. If you have had sciatic neuritis, you will know without my telling you. This affection is not rheumatism.

Every woman should know the pelvis, and its landmarks. It's a bony ring, the ancients likened it to a basin. The sacrum is a segment of the spine, shaped like a keystone, center, rear; the "coccyx," (cuckoo's break) terminates the spinal column below. The public arch is center, front. Within this basin many organs of great importance are situated—well worth serious study.

I asked him to come and see us some evening.

"Julie!"

"Well, why not?" Julie snapped her eyes open defiantly. "It will be nice to have a fresh man to go out with."

Bim rose to her feet with a little shiver. "I'm going to bed," she said.

"All right. Pleasant dreams, and thank you for waiting up."

Bim got as far as the door, then she came back.

"Julie!"

"Well?"

"Don't be a little fool, Julie dear—about Giles Chittenham. . . ."

When we left Switzerland you said you hated him and that you hoped you would never see him again. I don't know why—I don't want to know, but—"

"I don't know why either," Julie interrupted ruthlessly. "I'm changed, quite changed. . . . I used to be such a fool—priggish! unsophisticated. But that's all gone now, and I'm much happier."

"Happier!"

"That's what I said," Julie said defiantly.

Bim stood looking at her for a moment, then with a little helpless shrug she turned away.

The door closed between them.

Julie stayed where she was, her eyes fixed on the fire. "Changed, quite changed," she told herself fiercely. "I don't care about anything any more. Nothing can hurt me. What's the use of trying to go straight and be what people call 'good'! It's much better not to care for any one—not to care."

She bit her lip hard, and closed her eyes as if in sudden pain.

"I'll make him suffer—I'll make him suffer—" she whispered.

A chance twist in the wheel of Fate threw Lawrence Schofield across Julie Farrow's pathway in the Faun cafe. Schofield was a widower. His wife had been neurotic and fretful, and for eleven years she had done her best to crush every instinct of joy and cheeriness out of her husband's heart.

He was nearly fifty, and he could not remember that he had ever had what is called "a good time" in all his life until that night when some chance acquaintance took him along to the Faun and introduced him to Julie.

To him she was like a creature from some entirely different world. He was not sufficiently versed in modern ways to recognize her reckless artificiality; to him she was a creature of light and happiness. The short ride home with her in the chill, early hours of morning had been a revelation to him.

To-night he felt younger than he had ever felt.

If Julie would marry him . . . he awoke from his dream with a start at his own audacity.

Just Over the Hill

Just over the hill, as the old saying goes—the grass is always just a little greener.

And apparently it is the same with home bread and bakery products. Just from out of town, the bread is better.

But we are glad to acknowledge that a few of the Ozona stores are getting a little Ozona conscious. Chris Meinecke is handling Ozona Baked Bread. Moore's Cafe, and the Hotel Ozona is also using it.

While those at home be moan and refuse in many cases to buy home bread — PEOPLE FROM THE SAME TOWN which our out of town Bread derives, throw up their hands in surprise that any one should prefer that bread to ours.

WHICH brings us to the conclusion that Our Home People have not given us a fair shot at it — a fair test to the bread. BUY A LOAF TODAY, AND APPRECIATE THE DIFFERENCE.

STORES PAGE SEE IF IT'S IN OZONA FIRST

People of one community in this fast, modern age are necessarily interested in the welfare of other communities, but the first interest of every citizen, whether he admits it or not, is in his own community, the village, town or city which he calls home. Don't think for a minute that is not just as true of the city as it is of the small village. The city is out first to protect its own interest, to keep all its home trade at home and get as much of your merchants' business as possible.

If every family in Ozona purchased all of its necessities that could be obtained here from home merchants, it would be the greatest thing that ever happened for the progress and advancement of this community. If this policy were followed, you would see in a few months one of the liveliest, most progressive and up-to-date business districts in any town the size of this in the world. You would see in Ozona stores standard merchandise quoted at prices as low as those in any city. There would be more good homes in Ozona, there would be a greater variety of merchandise available, there would be more public improvements by reason of greater business values and consequently greater valuations for taxes, there would be more general prosperity and your town would be a better town in which to live.

The home town merchant, the man who lives in your town, who has his home here, raises his family here, contributes to your charities, pays taxes for the support of your local government, contributes to the upbuilding of your churches, and otherwise shoulders his share of the burden of community support the same as you do is entitled to your first consideration when it is a mere matter of choice without penalty.

Do you think you live in the worst town in the United States? Do you know that when you dash to the city to make your purchases without so much as investigating what your local merchant might have in the way of your needs, you are making a tacit admission that the town in which you live is about as poorly equipped to take care of its people's needs as any in the world? Do you know that Ozona has some of the most up-to-date business enterprises of any town in Texas? Do you know that your merchants are asking only for justice, that they do not ask you to make a sacrifice in their interest, but merely to give them a fair deal and find out what they have before you buy elsewhere?

You are proud of Ozona. (If you are not you should be.) You are proud of her fine homes, her pretty business section, her schools, and her progressive attitude on all matters of public betterment that come before her people. Are you not also proud of the fact that there are a total of 46 business enterprises in your town, providing almost every kind of merchandise or service that the people of this community might need? Buy it in Ozona.

Thoughtlessness Will Ruin Your Town

Most everybody who buys out of town does so thoughtlessly. They don't stop to think what it means to their home merchant and to the town. They don't stop to reason that the home merchant is carrying his share of the burden of community support, taxes, contributions, etc., while the out-of-town firm is doing nothing toward supporting your town.

The penny you may save out of town will cost you dearly in the end. You want your town to grow and prosper, for if it does you will prosper. Your out-of-town purchases might be small, but add up everybody's and then imagine how much all of it would benefit your town if spent here. Think!

UNIFORM HIGHWAY LAWS NEEDED

Efforts To Be Made This Winter By American Automobile Assn. To Get All States To Adopt Same Motor Vehicle Rules

By Caleb Johnson

Uniform regulations for the issuing of drivers' licenses, and uniform traffic regulations in all states, will be urged this winter upon the legislatures of the forty states where the lawmaking bodies will convene after January 1st. Such uniformity, once agreed upon and enforced, is expected to cut down materially the toll of traffic accidents, which cost the United States more than 33,000 human lives last year, and made permanent cripples out of many thousands more.

The American Automobile Association is back of the movement to have all states require that no one may get a driver's license who is unable to understand highway warnings or direction signs in the English language. There are still a few states which require no license at all, and in those the percentage of traffic accidents is higher than in the states where licenses are required. But among the states where licenses are necessary before one may drive on the roads, the thirteen states which have the literacy provision in the law show a smaller percentage of accidents than any of the others.

Even more important than this uniformity in licensing regulations is the need for uniform traffic laws, and the standard which will be urged upon all legislatures is that agreed upon by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety, of which Robert P. Lamont, Secretary of Commerce, is chairman.

One of the important recommendations of the conference is that no car shall be licensed until it has been inspected and declared fit for use. Under the Pennsylvania laws more than 1,000 cars have been ruled off the roads, because they were mechanically unfit and a danger to others.

Speed limits which now vary greatly from state to state and even from town to town, would be uniformly fixed, under this proposal, at 20 miles an hour in business districts, 25 miles in residential districts and in public parks within cities, and 45 miles outside of business and residential districts.

With respect to slow driving the code declares: "It shall be unlawful for any person unnecessarily to drive at such a slow speed as to impede or block the normal and reasonable movement of traffic except when reduced speed is necessary for safe operation or because upon a grade or when the vehicle is a truck or truck and trailer necessarily in compliance with law proceeding at reduced speed."

Concerning passing of vehicles proceeding in opposite directions the code requires that drivers "shall pass each other to the right, each giving the other at least one-half of the main traveled portion of the roadway as nearly as possible."

Regarding overtaking and passing cars the recommendations provide that the driver of an overtaken vehicle "shall give the way to the right in favor of the overtaking vehicle on suitable and audible signal and shall not increase the speed of his vehicle until completely passed by the overtaking vehicle."

It is also required that "the driver of a vehicle shall not drive to the left side of the center line of a highway in overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction unless such left side is clearly visible and is free of oncoming traffic for a sufficient distance ahead to permit overtaking and passing to be completely made without impeding the safe operation of any vehicle overtaken."

When approaching curves, etc., the code rules against driving to the left side of the center line of a highway "when approaching the crest of a grade or upon a curve in the highway where the driver's view along the highway is obstructed within a distance of 500 feet."

With respect to municipal traffic regulations, the recommendations provide that a left turn at an intersection be made on the green light. The regulations, as contained in the model municipal traffic ordinance, declares that "the operator of a vehicle or street car intending to turn to the left at an intersection where traffic is controlled by traffic control signals or by a police officer with proper care to avoid accident and shall proceed to make such left turn only upon the "go" signal, unless otherwise directed by a police officer."

That there may be danger, however, in too much traffic regulation, in inducing a sense of safety on the part of drivers who would otherwise look out for themselves better, was suggested to me the other day by Mr. Robbins B. Stoeckel, the Connecticut Commissioner of Motor Vehicles. Mr. Stoeckel has just returned from a visit to England, where motor accidents are few and speed limits are unknown except when a motorist is driving "to the common danger."

"They have few traffic policemen in England," said Mr. Stoeckel, "but everybody is a traffic man. It is everybody's business that a car is properly directed and all drivers—pedestrians and even the man seated on his porch, help by suggestion and direction. Always, too, in a kind and matter of fact way."

"A great many times during the tour I recently made, it happened that the driver ahead would indicate that a vehicle was approaching from the opposite direction. Our own driver invariably did the same for following cars."

"There is another characteristic of English traffic which might be beneficially copied here. It is that more responsibility is placed with each driver and there is a consequent development of self-reliance."

"There are, with the exception of a few Bobbies on bicycles and on foot, no police at all on rural roads. The abhorrence with which a reckless driving case is generally viewed seems extraordinary to an American but is very effective."

The thought is left, after viewing the absence of official supervision in England, that we in America may be in danger of overdoing it. After all the man is the key to performance; his education is the all important factor for safety. We must help him all we can in his traffic activity but must be certain that we do not by our well meaning efforts in one direction make pitfalls in another.

"One of the experiments we ought to make if we can get up courage to do it sometime is to try a plan of letting traffic regulate or direct itself. Such a try-out might be dangerous in the extreme unless everybody understood plainly that he was on his own."

"With that undersanding might it not be possible that an accentuated sense of danger and the call for initiative consequent upon it would bring out self-reliance and judgment to a greater extent than they are supposed to exist in England does it with the help of a dangerous environment."

SAFETY
One reason why flyers like Lindbergh, Coste and Byrd are acclaimed as heroes is because everybody appreciates the risk they ran in their historical flights. When we think of their feats we think of the pilots, not of the planes.

The Graf Zeppelin has flown around the world, crossed the Atlantic four times without mishap. The R-100, British dirigible, was the first aircraft of any kind to cross the ocean, eleven years ago. The R-100 recently voyaged from England to Canada and back. Our own Los Angeles cruises all over the American hemisphere. Nobody remembers the names of the pilots of these ships; we think of the ship, not the man.

The reason is that we sepe the immensely greater safety of the dirigible. The latter's passengers and crew can hardly be said to be risking their lives at all. The important air travel of the future will be done by dirigible rather than by plane.

FLIES
Motoring through Connecticut the other day I stopped for a bite in a good-sized town. To my amazement, the principal restaurant of the place was swarming with flies, which were crawling unrestrained over the food. I did not eat there.

The danger of flies seems not yet to have penetrated everywhere. It has been said by someone that it takes three generations for any new fact to filter down through all levels of intelligence to the lowest. It is less than forty years since the discovery was made that flies are the chief carriers of typhoid fever.

In the big cities and in most progressive small towns, public health authorities now compel the covering of garbage and other filth in which flies breed. The automobile has done a great deal, practically eliminating the horse stable, once the flies' chief breeding ground. In the general clean-up of Europe since the war long steps have been taken, until there is at least one town in Italy, Montecatini, which boasts that it has not a single fly!

HELIOPHOBES

Are you a heliophile or a heliophobe? Everybody is one or the other. Heliophiles love the sunshine and thrive under exposure to sunlight. Heliophobes are the unfortunate blondes who do not tan but burn and blister and sometimes becomes seriously ill in the effort to acquire the golden-brown skins of the more fortunate heliophiles.

A skin specialist in a New York hospital estimates that more than 200,000 working days are lost in that city every year from illness due to sunburn. These heliophobes sufferers are usually of the blonde North European and Scandinavian type, coming from a stock bred for countless generations in the high latitudes where sunlight is scanty and indirect. The perfect heliophile, on the other hand, usually has a strain of Mediterranean blood, Italian, Greek, Spanish or Semitic.

ICE CREAM

Every person in the United States ate three gallons of ice-cream last year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. If you got less than that, somebody else ate more. The consumption of ice-cream has increased by one-half in ten years.

We are shipping ice-cream from America now to every part of the world. At your hotel in Cairo, Egypt, or Bombay, or Hong Kong you will find a well-known American brand of ice-cream on the menu. One of the greatest inventions in the food line is the homogenizer used by ice-cream manufacturers, which enables them to store surplus cream through the winter in the form of butter. Butter will keep where pure cream will not. It is run through the homogenizer, which breaks up the fat globules, mixing them with milk, with pure cream as the product, which can then be flavored and frozen.
