

GERMANS RETREAT IN WEST, ADVANCE IN EAST

Neutrality Revision Only, Is FD's Aim For Congressional Session

Doesn't Plan Law Against Profiteers

No Appropriation Or War Risk Insurance Statutes Mapped

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15 (AP)—President Roosevelt indicated strongly today he hoped to limit legislation at the special session of congress to revision of the neutrality law.

Asked at his press conference whether he planned to request anti-profiteering legislation, he said he did not expect to. He told reporters also that he planned to make no request for a deficiency appropriation nor for war risk insurance legislation.

The chief executive confirmed expectations congress would receive his message on neutrality at its opening session Thursday, but said he had not yet determined whether to send it to the capitol or deliver it personally.

At the same time, the president declared no plans had even been considered for the government in Washington that could be remotely connected with the possibility of our getting into the war abroad.

When a reporter requested a presidential definition of territorial water of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt said the limit was as far as our interests needed to go out. Chuckling, he added that that was a hot one off the bat and no one ever before had defined territorial waters that way.

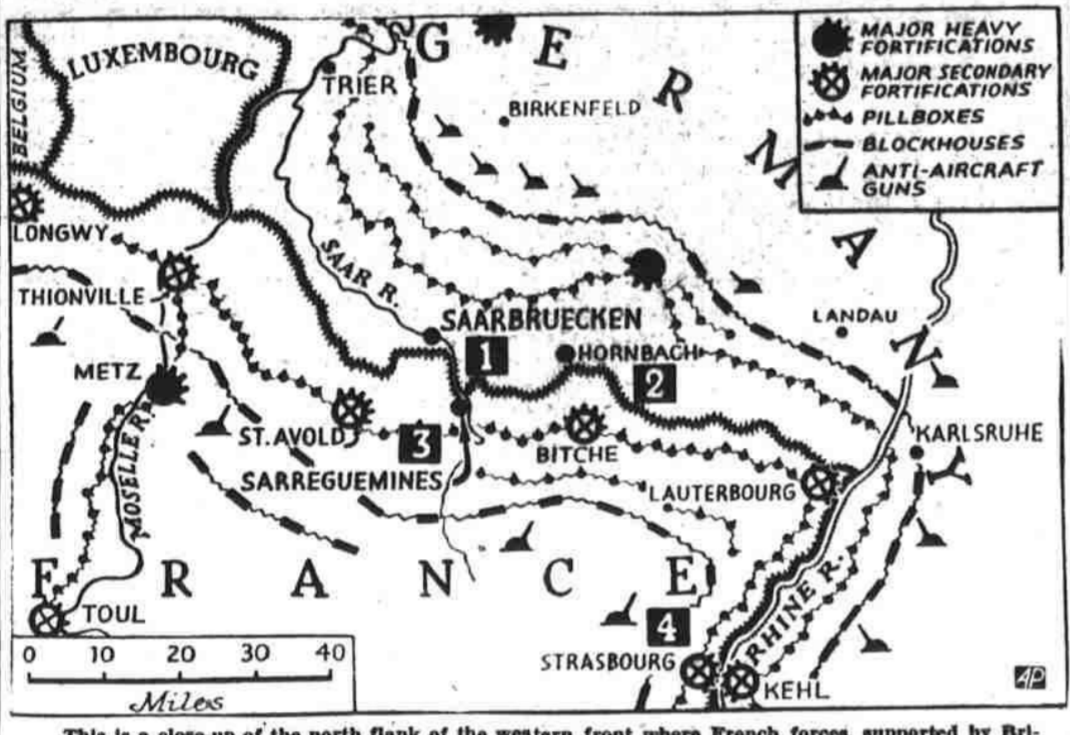

A reporter asked whether those waters, under his definition, "reached to the Rhine?" Again Mr. Roosevelt chuckled and said he was talking about salt water.

Asked whether the fact that American war vessels were patrolling 200 miles off the coast indicated that that distance was the boundary of territorial waters, Mr. Roosevelt replied in the negative and said the ships were out there to obtain information.

The chief executive was advised the maritime commission contends it needs new legislation before it can procure war risk insurance for shipping. He said he did not know about that.

Secretary Hull's statement yesterday that this country was insisting on all its rights as a neutral, even though the exercise of some of those rights had been curtailed by the neutrality law, was brought up.

FRENCH DRIVE TO PINCH OFF SAARBRUECKEN

This is a close-up of the north flank of the western front where French forces, supported by British troops, closed in from three sides on Saarbruecken (1) and heavy fighting was reported at Hornbach (2). The French advance almost had removed Saarbruecken (3) from the range of German big guns but to the south German troops were reported moving in opposite Strasbourg (4). These fortification lines are approximate and are based on the best estimates of neutral observers. Note how they twist to take advantage of the terrain.

British Claim A 'Number' Of German Subs Destroyed

LONDON, Sept. 15 (AP)—The British ministry of information announced this afternoon that "a number" of German submarines have been destroyed by patrols of British destroyers and airplanes.

The U-boat survivors were rescued and captured wherever possible, the ministry said. The following communique was issued: "His Majesty's destroyers, patrol vessels and aircraft have been carrying out constant patrols over wide areas in search of enemy U-boats. Many attacks have been made and a number of U-boats have been destroyed. Survivors have been rescued and captured when possible."

Meanwhile the second batch of British army conscripts under the conscription act of last spring was called up today.

In the house of commons, which met briefly, it was announced Prime Minister Chamberlain would deliver his third statement.

Take Supplies From Sectors Conquered

Polish Factories Now Turning Out Ammunition For Nazi Guns
BERLIN, Sept. 15 (AP)—While the German high command reported new successes on the eastern front today, the government began to draw on already conquered regions of Poland for supplies with which to wage war against France and Britain in the west.

"Counter Blockade"
Field Marshal Hermann Goering, director of the reich's four-year plan, returned from a tour of the Silesian industrial area to report that factories which a week ago were manufacturing Polish munitions now were turning out bombs for German war planes.

Goering's report closely followed an announcement the high command had ordered German submarines and warships to begin an immediate "counter blockade" in answer to Britain's determination to intercept foodstuffs intended for the reich.

A communique issued this morning by the high command describing operations on the western front said French forces which launched an attack Sept 12 near Schweig (a border point south of Pirmasens) had been driven back across the frontier under a heavy artillery barrage.

Successes were reported at widely separated points on the Polish front.

BODY OF ONE OF SQUALUS VICTIMS MAY HAVE BEEN LOST IN SEA
PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Sept. 15 (AP)—A possibility the sea might hold forever one of the 26 victims of the U.S.S. Squalus arose today when grim naval officials were able to find only 25 of the bodies entombed for 115 days in the battered submarine now lying in dry-dock here.

Decks littered with air hoses and partly held up by cranes, the ill-fated submarine, Squalus, one of the navy's newest, presented a sad sight when she finally was raised after being towed in from off Portsmouth, N. H. The 115-day job of raising the 1500-ton craft was considered the greatest in U. S. navy salvage history.

French Push Deeper Into Moselle Area

Nazis Rip Up Railroad Tracks In Yielding Territory
PARIS, Sept. 15 (AP)—German troops were reported today to be retreating slowly down the Moselle valley in the face of persistent French pressure.

Unofficial French advices said the Germans were leaving their advance positions before the Siegfried Line, ripping up railroad tracks which follow the course of the river.

The Germans apparently feared a French attack in force toward their base at Trier, which is only a few thousand yards in front of the Siegfried line.

French said German authorities had removed all civilians from the region between the frontier and the Siegfried Line along the entire northern flank of the western front.

German artillery laid down a screen of shells on a 40-mile front extending from the Moselle, on the extreme north, to a point beyond Saarbruecken.

French forces saw-sawed fiercely at Saarbruecken's defenses, alternating attacks from three sides, it was reported, while an offensive northeast of the frontier town of Sierck carried them closer to the important German base of Trier.

French military dispatches said the French army commanded heights to the west and south of Saarbruecken and that other units had slogged through mud between there and Hornbach on the east.

Soviet-Japanese Non-Aggression Pact Foreseen

Development Predicted By Some After Two Powers Declare An 'Armistice'

MOSCOW, Sept. 15 (AP)—Soviet Russia and Japan were reported to have agreed upon an "armistice" today in their undeclared war on the Manchoukuo-Mongolian border. Some observers expected the move to lead immediately to the signing of a non-aggression pact between them.

Japanese Ambassador Shigenori Togo and Soviet Premier and Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov were said by usually unimpeachable sources to have agreed upon an "immediate cessation of hostilities" in a four-hour conference.

They will meet again tomorrow, after which a communique will be issued, it was said. Germany has been trying to effect a reconciliation between Moscow and Tokyo since the signing of the German-Soviet non-aggression pact of Aug. 24.

Only a few details were available on the possibly momentous conference today between the Japanese and Russian representatives. Agreement would mark an end to several years of border fighting in the Far East of which few details have become public.

Should Russia and Japan sign a non-aggression pact it would be considered as another diplomatic triumph for Adolf Hitler, observers said.

The reich has been working hastily to stave off what it feared would be British efforts toward an understanding with Japan.

(The newest series of Soviet-Japanese border clashes in the Far East started May 11 and continued intermittently through the summer. Outer Mongolia, under the protection of Soviet Russia, disputed her boundary with Japanese-dominated Manchoukuo.)

Diplomats In Neutral Area
CERNAUTI, Rumania, Sept. 15 (AP)—A caravan of foreign diplomats, their wives and families including the American ambassador to Poland, Anthony J. D. Biddle, arrived in Cernauti at 6 o'clock tonight (11 a. m. CST) to escape the war which is flooding swiftly into extreme south-east Poland.

Members of the group—60 persons in all—brought reports of a tremendous new German drive aimed to cut Poland off from Rumania.

A rule Americans have long honored in the observance is that all opinions and points of view, even false ones, are tolerable so long as the freedom to combat them with truth is preserved.

The people of this country are not booha. They have sound common sense and are able to reach honest American conclusions after they have listened to or read news dispatches and comments, considered facts and applied discriminating judgment to the facts and opinions as presented by the different sides in this European war.

Many a radio listener has observed differences in reports on the same incident as described, say, by Warsaw and Berlin. But in all such cases, where one report is intended to convey information and the other to obscure it, many of the listeners are able to distinguish between fact and propaganda.

The fact that the British cut the cables between Germany and the United States in the World War hardly served the cause of keeping America out of war. The effect of the last few years of communication with National Socialist Germany has not been to decrease American sympathy for the causes now being defended by the Anglo-French bloc.

"The Women." Screenplay by Anita Loos and Jane Murlin from the play by Clare Boothe. Directed by George Cukor. Cast: Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford, Rosalind Russell, Mary Boland, Paulette Goddard, Phyllis Fovah, Joan Fontaine, Virginia Weidler, Lucille Watson, Hedda Hopper, Florence Nash, Muriel Hutchison, Virginia Grey, Ann Morris, Ruth Hussey, Dennis Moore, Mary Cecil, Mary Beth Hughes, Esther Dale, Cora Witherspoon, Marjorie Main.

HOLLYWOOD—If this is how "the women" really act and talk when they're alone, it's time we U.S. folks get together and organized a mutual protective association.

This elaborate version of the stage hit hasn't a male in view, but it's loaded with Metro's choicest feminine glamor and—as the exploitation department coyly suggests—it's all about men. And boy, howdy! Are we something!

"The women" is ultra-sophisticated, frank, daring, and quite often, shocking. It's clever, too, the way the characters are introduced as the creatures of the animal world their personalities suggest.

The picture opens in a Metro conception of a beauty salon (and maybe there are some like it somewhere) which gives the dear spoiled darlings of the richer crust all manner of treatments—including free gossip of the backstage variety.

At the fade-out she's rushing, arms extended, toward Stephen, who's behind the camera somewhere and has never shown his face. Thus Director Cukor completes his manless tour de force, generally effective but skiddly at times—such as the sequences of the Stephen-Mary quarrel relayed entirely through dialogues between maid and cook downstairs.

The comedy is brittle, sometimes a little overplayed for effect, but the Shearer performance evokes sympathy, which is abetted by the superb little Weidler child.

The first night audience roared, chuckled, and occasionally gasped. Sample gasp: Miss Crawford's line to the assembled women: "There's a name for you, but in high society they don't use it—except around kennels."

After A Man's Heart

by JEAN RANDALL

Chapter 10 A GIRL PROPOSES: Dinner was early that evening for two reasons: Buff and Tim were faint with hunger, and George Weekes had to return to Boulder before nightfall.

"And even though the late lamented Atkins improved your road somewhat, I'd like a little light on my flying trapeze act," he told Buff.

He happened to be in the hall when the girl came downstairs, and he gave a low whistle when he saw her. For reasons best known to herself, she had changed into the one dressy frock she had at the ranch. Its material was chiffon, its color pale green, and its floating hem almost touched the floor.

Buff was transfixed. Wrecks told himself, He had seen her hitherto only in her favorite knitted slippers, more often than not almost obliterated by one of Mrs. Webb's voluminous kitchen aprons. Also she had changed the style of her hairdress tonight. Her severely plain knot was loosened a trifle, allowing silky little waves and tendrils to escape; and to top it all, she had used a knowing bit of lipstick, and clasped a sparkling bracelet about a slender wrist.

"Hi!" exclaimed the visitor. Buff extended a satin sandal toward the fire.

"Celebrate?" Tim put the question from the doorway where he had halted at the sight of her.

"Celebrate, first the rout—horse, foot and dragons—3 the Hunts—appropriate figure of speech, don't you think?—second a good meal which, oh, rapture! I didn't cook myself. Though perhaps in the interests of accuracy, I should say I didn't try to cook. All in all, I thought the occasion warranted a bit of dressing up." She smoothed the folds of chiffon contentedly.

"Gosh, I'd hate to see you when you really celebrate," George told her. "As it is, it's only the knowledge of my penniless condition that—" He halted abruptly, aware of the tightening of Tim's jaw.

It was a gala meal. Mrs. Webb apparently labored under the delusion that the three would have no opportunity to eat again for days, and supplied them with food accordingly. Buff was equally relieved by the departure of the Hunts and the restoration of the housekeeper to her proper duties. George gladly seconded her efforts at light-hearted badinage. Tim did his best to share their festive mood but Buff's eyes rested on him thoughtfully. Just so did her father look when life occasionally seemed too difficult for him.

George took his departure with effusive thanks and admonitions to his partner to "stay on as long as Buff can put up with you." "Which will be no longer than tomorrow," Tim said. They had returned to the fire, Buff curled upon a fat pillow on the floor, Tim occupying the hardest and straightest chair the room afforded. "No use telling George so. All he'll do would be to argue—to quote the doctors, and so on."

Washington Daybook

WASHINGTON—The much-abused neutrality act gives the president authority to prevent or diminish two practices which did much to draw the United States into the last war.

One is to prevent American citizens traveling in the war zone on ships belonging to belligerents. That would have prevented the loss of American lives in 1915 on the Lusitania. It would not necessarily have prevented Americans coming to harm on the recently sunk Athenia because exceptions are made for people fleeing from the war zone.

The other grant of authority is to permit the president to place restrictions upon use of U. S. ports by armed merchant vessels.

It is a fair bet that attempts will be made to save these two provisions of the neutrality act, even if the arms embargo feature is taken out of the expected special session.

Under the restriction on passenger travel, Secretary Hull already has denied the right of Americans to travel on belligerent ships within the North Atlantic war zone except those who may get his special permission. The zone he has marked out includes the entire sector of expected submarine activity.

The issue with respect to armed merchant vessels will arise quickly. England already has ordered that her merchant vessels be armed.

THE SUBMARINE QUESTION: The question is, does a merchant vessel lose some of its special privileges when it mounts a cannon, even for defensive purposes? In the last war Germany contended that an armed merchant vessel was not entitled to warning before being sunk. Secretary of State Lansing saw the point of the German argument.

He knew that it was a common practice for British merchant vessels to wait until the submarine arose to give warning, and then either try to ram it or fire a shot into it. A submarine is a helpless target before a cannon. The slightest puncture in its thin shell sinks it.

In international law it is legal for a merchant vessel to try such slick tricks. But Lansing argued that the law was designed many years ago to suit cruisers that could defend themselves easily against an armed merchant vessel while they gave the merchant vessel time to unload its crew and passengers. Submarines, he contended, created a new problem. If they attempted to obey the law and give warning, an armed merchant vessel could sink them.

A TWO-FOLD REASON: But England and France were adamant. They insisted it would be a very unfriendly act for the United States to insist on a change in the rules. England had a double-edged reason for insisting on the old way.

First, the more ships sunk without warning the worse the picture of "German frightfulness" could be made to appear in America.

Second, sinking of a ship without warning meant use of a torpedo. Submarines can carry only a few torpedoes. If permitted to come to the surface and sink the merchant ship with gunfire after due warning, naturally its supplies would last longer.

WARSHIP RULES: The neutrality act recognizes this situation. It gives the president power to make regulations which armed merchant vessels must accept if they use American ports. The purpose of the section, of course, was to permit the president to declare that any armed merchant vessel must abide by regulations for regular warships. A belligerent warship can stay in an American port only 24 hours under normal circumstances. Since no merchant vessel can come in, take on a cargo and leave in 24 hours, it would just about compel England to leave her merchant vessels unarmed.

Under those circumstances German submarines could more readily obey international law, and America would be treated to less "frightfulness." She could keep her neutral calm better.

The state department is studying the question. It is an extremely delicate one. It is almost a test case as to whether the United States intends to be strictly neutral, or whether, as in the last war, most questions will be determined in favor of the Allies.

George Tucker

Man About Manhattan

NEW YORK—If I were a Shakespearean actor, or better than that, a director, I think I would possess myself of a recording Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech to the British people when he told them that Great Britain was at war, and study it again and again.

All through his speech I had the impression of listening to something that Shakespeare had written. I thought some fine, intelligent actor who had schooled himself to a supreme moment, was approaching the climax of a great tragedy, and almost automatically I wondered how Maurice Evans, or Charles Laughton, or Leslie Howard, or any of those English actors would have come off with those same lines. It is certain they couldn't have done any better.

One thing this war will do for fiction and for the Broadway stage is to close out one school of writing and usher in another. From now on such plays as "Journey's End" and "What Price Glory" will be "dated." It will be almost impossible to think of 1914-18 as drama material, except in isolated instances, as the Civil War is now used. The terminology will be different. I am already wondering about the cooties. Cooties were a part of the Polius and the Tommies and the Doughboys in the trenches. They belonged, somehow, as a part of the scene. But how will the cooties like the new, streamlined Maginot line, or Germany's West Wall? Of course, it took the cooties a long time to make any headway in the World War. Right now the boys are well fed, and their uniforms are well tailored, and clean. All this may change later. The cooties can move in. We will wait and see.

Already the World War is remembered through a twilight of Hollywood unreality. I seem to see John Gilbert limping home on one leg. Against a background of male voices singing "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" is Sergeant Flagg thumping his nose at Sergeant Quirt. You can close your eyes and see Gary Cooper climbing from the wreckage of a plane. You can see Jean Harlow and all of Hell's Angels fading into a background of Vienna waltzes, and the mid-like apparition of dirigibles dropping bombs over London.
