A RENAISSANCE IN ART ARISING FROM CHAOS

Future generations may decide that one of the most important acts performed by the American government in 1933 was its decision to put unemployed artists to work decorating public buildings. The big idea, of course, is to give the artists something to do and keep them from starving. But hand in hand with it there is a very sensible notion that our public buildings could stand a lot of beautifying, and that society might just as well get some benefit from the talents of artists who can't find jobs.

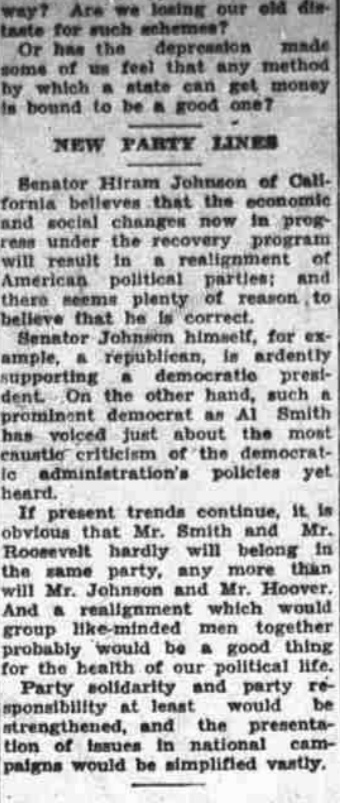

STATE LOTTERIES

It is interesting to note that the legislature of Maine is going to be asked this winter to establish a state lottery. One of the legislators has a bill ready to submit, establishing such a lottery, granting cities and towns the right to participate and offering them a share in the profits if they do so.

DOGGS—HERE, THERE, EVERYWHERE— BUT ROOM, SAYS EXPERT, FOR MORE

The "market" for dogs in the United States is said to be at the saturation point, says an expert on canine perfection. And the small dog, including the wire-haired fox terrier (center), Pekingese (lower left), "Scottie" (upper left), Cairn (upper right) and Sealyham (lower right), continues most popular.

NEW YORK (AP)—Dogs are "on the up and up" in this country, believes Percy Roberts, one of the best known experts in the United States, although an Englishman by birth. "You might think, driving through the east, that there isn't room for any more good dogs than there are at present," he added.

CONSIDER THE EXECUTIVE

Executives are a fortunate lot. For as everybody in an office knows, an executive has nothing to do. That is, except to tell somebody to do it; to listen to reasons why it should be done by somebody else, or why it should be done in a different way, and to prepare arguments in rebuttal that shall be convincing and conclusive.

Veteran Indian Fighter Frightened Getting Married

To Show Their Appreciation of the Good Business Given Them During 1933 the Local Merchants Will Offer Two Big Days of Value-Giving to the people of West Texas Friday and Saturday of This Week

Local merchants feel some idea of their real appreciation should be given the people of West Texas for the wonderful business enjoyed during the past year . . . they feel the best way to do this is to offer unusual savings to their customers for these two days.

The business of 1933, stimulated by American patriotism and the NRA, has broken the back of Old Man Depression. In nearly every instance local merchants report a gain in volume of business over preceeding years . . . a gain that has taken them out of the "Red" and put them back on the road to prosperity . . . a gain that means more employment . . . more business . . . and more prosperity for every one during this year of 1934.

CHAPTER 33

"All right," Curt agreed, "we'll try the west. But understand this, if anything happens it can't happen too quick to keep me from putting a bullet between your eyes, friend. You understand?"

Tenn-Og nodded, without a flicker of expression on his dusky face.

They went back past their camp island and paddled on west toward the mainland. They were not challenged. Three hundred yards from the shore they swung south. Still they heard no signals, saw no shadowy mottles.

Curt hardly knew what to think. Twice now the Indian's advice had proved right, very right. By the route he had suggested they had got free of the island and through the cordon of men. That didn't look like treachery. Furthermore it was Sonya who had sent him with that boat; and certainly she had not wanted them to meet harm.

With the wind pushing them along, they dropped down toward the narrow where Francois and Jocku had been killed. The memory of that death cry was still vivid with Curt. As the dark bottle neck loomed up just ahead, he touched Tenn-Og.

"Any men guarding that?"

Tenn-Og nodded and hid up six fingers. "When they call, I answer, you say nothing."

They skirted into the entrance. The dark timber flitted by, close on either hand. Five hundred yards down, down at the narrowest part, they were suddenly challenged. The voice came from a clump of juniper, ahead of them and on the right hand bank. An instant later another voice rang out on the left.

Two hidden parties, with less than a hundred feet separating them—no wonder Francois and Jocku had met doom there.

Tenn-Og stood up and answered. Curt held his rifle at alert, with the trigger safety on red. The canoe came in between the two parties. Nothing happened. It drifted past. Still, nothing happened. Before they could make themselves believe it, they were through the gantlet safe—with the open river ahead.

A mile down, when they breathed freely again and were speeding south as fast as three paddles could take them, Curt crept forward and laid his hand on Tenn-Og's arm.

"I make mistake," he said slowly, in the Surgen. "Tenn-Og, talk straight, save white-man friends, I'm sorry. You understand?"

Tenn-Og shrugged his shoulders and grunted, with no more expression on his claw-scarred face than when they had suspected him of treachery and had threatened to shoot him.

Sometime after midnight they came to an island where Curt's party had camped on the up trip. Whipping ashore, they ate part of food which Tenn-Og had brought and flung themselves down on the sand for a five-minute rest.

Curt pognant, memories of the evening his party had stayed there. A cluster of wilted anemones, the imprint of a small dainty meocass along the landwash, made him recall how Sonya had wandered lonesomely about the camp, trying by a dozen little kindnesses to get a friendly word out of him.

As he stared up at the stars and ready point and headed down toward them. Traveling light, three stalwart men to a boat, they had come south even faster than his party.

To let them go past would only have meant an ambush and fight further down river. They had to be stopped. Waiting till they were within easy range, he and Paul opened on them with a sudden blast. The ricocheting bullets, smashing through the wind-water line of the craft, sank them before the hunderstruck Kioshees could realize that ambushing was a game which two could play at. With their canoes foundering under them, the six leaped out and swam for the nearest flag.

Muddled and bedraggled, they stood on their bit of quivering bog and stonily waited to be shot, as Curt's canoe nosed across toward them. Curt looked them over. Like Tenn-Og they were tall rugged men hardy mountaineers—as virile a type of Indian as he had ever seen.

"Tell 'em we're not going to kill 'em," he bade Tenn-Og. "Find out where the main band is and what they're doing, and where the white girl is."

He listened closely as Tenn-Og talked with the six, but he could not understand a word of the clicks and grunts except the names of Siam-Klale and LeNoir.

When the palaver was over and he had made sure that the six men could get across to the shore he backed the canoe off and headed his party down stream again.

MARGARET SULLAVAN JOHN BOLES With 93 Featured Players ONLY YESTERDAY

TODAY and TOMORROW By WALTER LIPPMANN On the Strengthening of Government in America

Considerable interest has been aroused by the closing passage of the President's address to Congress in which he spoke of "building a strong and permanent bridge between the legislative and executive branches of the government" and declared that "the letter of the Constitution wisely declared a separation, but the impulse of common purpose declares a union."

The question naturally arises, then, as to whether the powers conferred on the President last spring would, if they became permanent, upset the balance of the American Constitution. There is no simple answer to this question. There are powers under A.A.A. which go extremely far in divesting Congress of its control of taxation. Except as emergency measures of the most temporary kind, they are, it seems to me, powers which should not be perpetuated unless the people have fully understood the implications.

On the other hand, powers have been vested in the President which in any well ordered government clearly ought to repose permanently in the Executive. The Economy Act is the conspicuous example here. The essential principle of that act is that the initiative in expenditure should be with the President, the restraint upon expenditure with Congress. The old practice of having Congress determine what the President must spend, down to the last detail of the office boy's salary and the soldier's pension and the postoffice in the village square is not only wasteful, it is not only destructive of sound administration, but is profoundly corrupting to Congress. Patronage and the pork barrel and pensions are not bulwarks of our liberty. On the contrary, they are acids which corrode them.

QUEEN Today - Tomorrow JOAN CRAWFORD GARY COOPER in 'TODAY WE LIVE' Under The Dome At Austin

By GORDON K. SHEARER AUSTIN, (UP)—Texas is not at all likely to join the financially embarrassed states that are considering establishment of lotteries to replenish their depleted treasuries. This state has both constitutional and legislative declarations against lotteries. Section 7, Article III, of the state constitution directed the legislature to pass laws prohibiting lotteries, gift enterprises or other evasions involving the lottery principle.

Responding to this direction, the state penal code, Article 634 levies a fine of $100 to $1000 on any person who establishes a lottery and a fine of $10 to $50 on any one who sells a lottery ticket. Sterilization to relieve the state of the care of new generations of defectives is a step of a number of other states that Texas may soon follow.

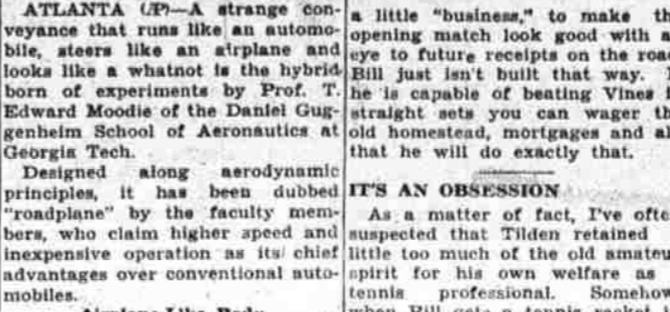

A bill for this purpose was offered in the last Texas Legislature. It got a favorable report from a House committee but no further action. In the 2nd Legislature, a similar bill by Rep. R. L. Kincaid, Crowell physician, passed the House but was killed in the Senate. The Kincaid bill directed superintendents of state institutions to examine the family "is" rics of inmates. If the superintendent concluded that it would be to the best interest of society to have the person sex-sterilized, he was to make such a report to the state board of control. The bill then set out various provisions for notification to guardians or parents of the person involved and procedure for a hearing before the state board of control.

Efforts to provide employment that will meet general requirement to secure payment of the workers in result in a revival of interest in early Texas history. Plans are being put forth for marking historical spots, preserving Texas relics and depicting early scenes. Archaeologist J. E. Pearce of the University of Texas will direct a CWA search of Indian caves along the Guadalupe river. A. H. Dunlap of the State Board of Control is working on plans for a state park at the Lampasas river crossing of the San Antonio-Kansas City military road in Bell county. Gutson Borglum is working on a plan for historical murals in Texas public buildings.

Judge G rover Sellers, mentioned to succeed Former Governor Oscar B. Colquitt on federal railway mediation board, came into national public interest at the national democratic convention in Houston. It was he who carried the Texas banner into the Al Smith parade, after a fast-swinging struggle in the Texas delegation. Later he became a district judge and then judge of the Texas State Court of Civil Appeals.

Texas bread bonds are placed above U. S. Government bonds by the other vital defect of our method of tariff making is that, along with pork and pensions and patronage, it corrupts the intellectual integrity of Congress. Man after man has to sell his soul to satisfy the special pleas of some vested interest in his district. The trading of votes for special rates makes every tariff revision a national scandal.

IT FLIES AS IT RUNS—WHAT 'ROADPLANE', SAYS MAKER

Prof. T. Edward Moodie of the Georgia School of Technology says the third wheel leaves the ground at 25 miles an hour.

ATLANTA (UP)—A strange conveyance that runs like an automobile, steers like an airplane and looks like a whatnot is the hybrid born of experiments by Prof. T. Edward Moodie of the Daniel Guggenheim School of Aeronautics at Georgia Tech. Designed along aerodynamic principles, it has been dubbed "roadplane" by the faculty members, who claim higher speed and inexpensive operation as its chief advantages over conventional automobiles.

Wind-Steering Said O. K. Professor Moodie has put the "roadplane" through 250 miles of road tests and found its wind-steering apparatus guided it perfectly at high speed. Traveling less than 25 miles an hour, he steers with brakes on the wheels. Thus far, the 32-horsepower motor has been pushed to its maximum speed. In several tests Moodie traveled at 60 miles an hour with the throttle nowhere near wide open. So far he doesn't know just how fast the thing would run.

WOUNDED.—An incident of the winter season, unimportant in itself perhaps, nevertheless illustrates the spontaneity of the cheer-leader's enthusiasm throughout the 33 season was equal to that of any youngster on the club. "They do not think there was any fluke about what they did and feel the will be even better next season."

Boxing Lags In Texas After It Is Legalized FORT WORTH (UP)—It is questionable whether prize-fighting has kept pace with its newly resurrected sister—horseracing in Texas. While the racing game, in two meets at Arlington and Epsom Downs, was successful beyond the largest hopes of racing promoters, the fight game legalized in the same session of legislature as the bangalia, does not seem to be getting nearly so prosperously.

Abilene Schools Resume Work After Two Week Holiday ABILENE—Abilene public school system resumed work Monday, after a two weeks vacation. While the students have been enjoying the holidays, a majority of the school buildings have been repaired with materials furnished by the City of Abilene and labor by the CWA. The work has consisted primarily of painting and plastering. Central ward, one of the oldest schools, was almost completely renovated inside. The high school, College Heights, Lamar and Travis buildings were others worked on. The schools closed December 22 for Christmas. The first semester is to close January 28.
