University-City Club bought out by bank

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

The University-City Club of Lubbock was purchased Tuesday by Valley Federal Savings Bank of Roswell, N.M., for the sum of $1,560,000.

Texas Tech Interim President Elizabeth Haley said Valley Federal Savings sent a letter to Tech informing the administration of the bank's intention to seize and close the University-City Club as of 8 a.m. Monday, March 13.

"This caught us a little off guard," Haley said.

The University-City Club, located at 2601 19th St., houses laboratories for Tech's restaurant, hotel and institutional management program that operates within the College of Home Economics.

"If they close the facilities, we need to find another location for the program," Haley said. "At this point we are trying to determine what possibilities exist."

Jerry Ingram, senior vice president of Valley Federal Savings Bank, had no comment about the bank's plans for the University-City Club.

Valley Federal Savings Bank purchased the University-City Club at 2:09 p.m. Tuesday during a public auction on the steps of the Lubbock County Courthouse. Valley Federal, which has had the mortgage to the property since March 1981, ordered the auction after the club defaulted on a promissory note. James Granberry was president of the University-City Club at the time.

John Carter of Chaves County in New Mexico, a substitute trustee for the property, conducted the trustees' auction. Carter, who was appointed as trustee in December 1988, sold the University-City Club to Valley Federal after the bank submitted the highest bid at $1,560,000.

Haley said the university has enjoyed the relationship with Granberry and the University-City Club. She indicated that Granberry approached the university about purchasing the facilities prior to the auction.

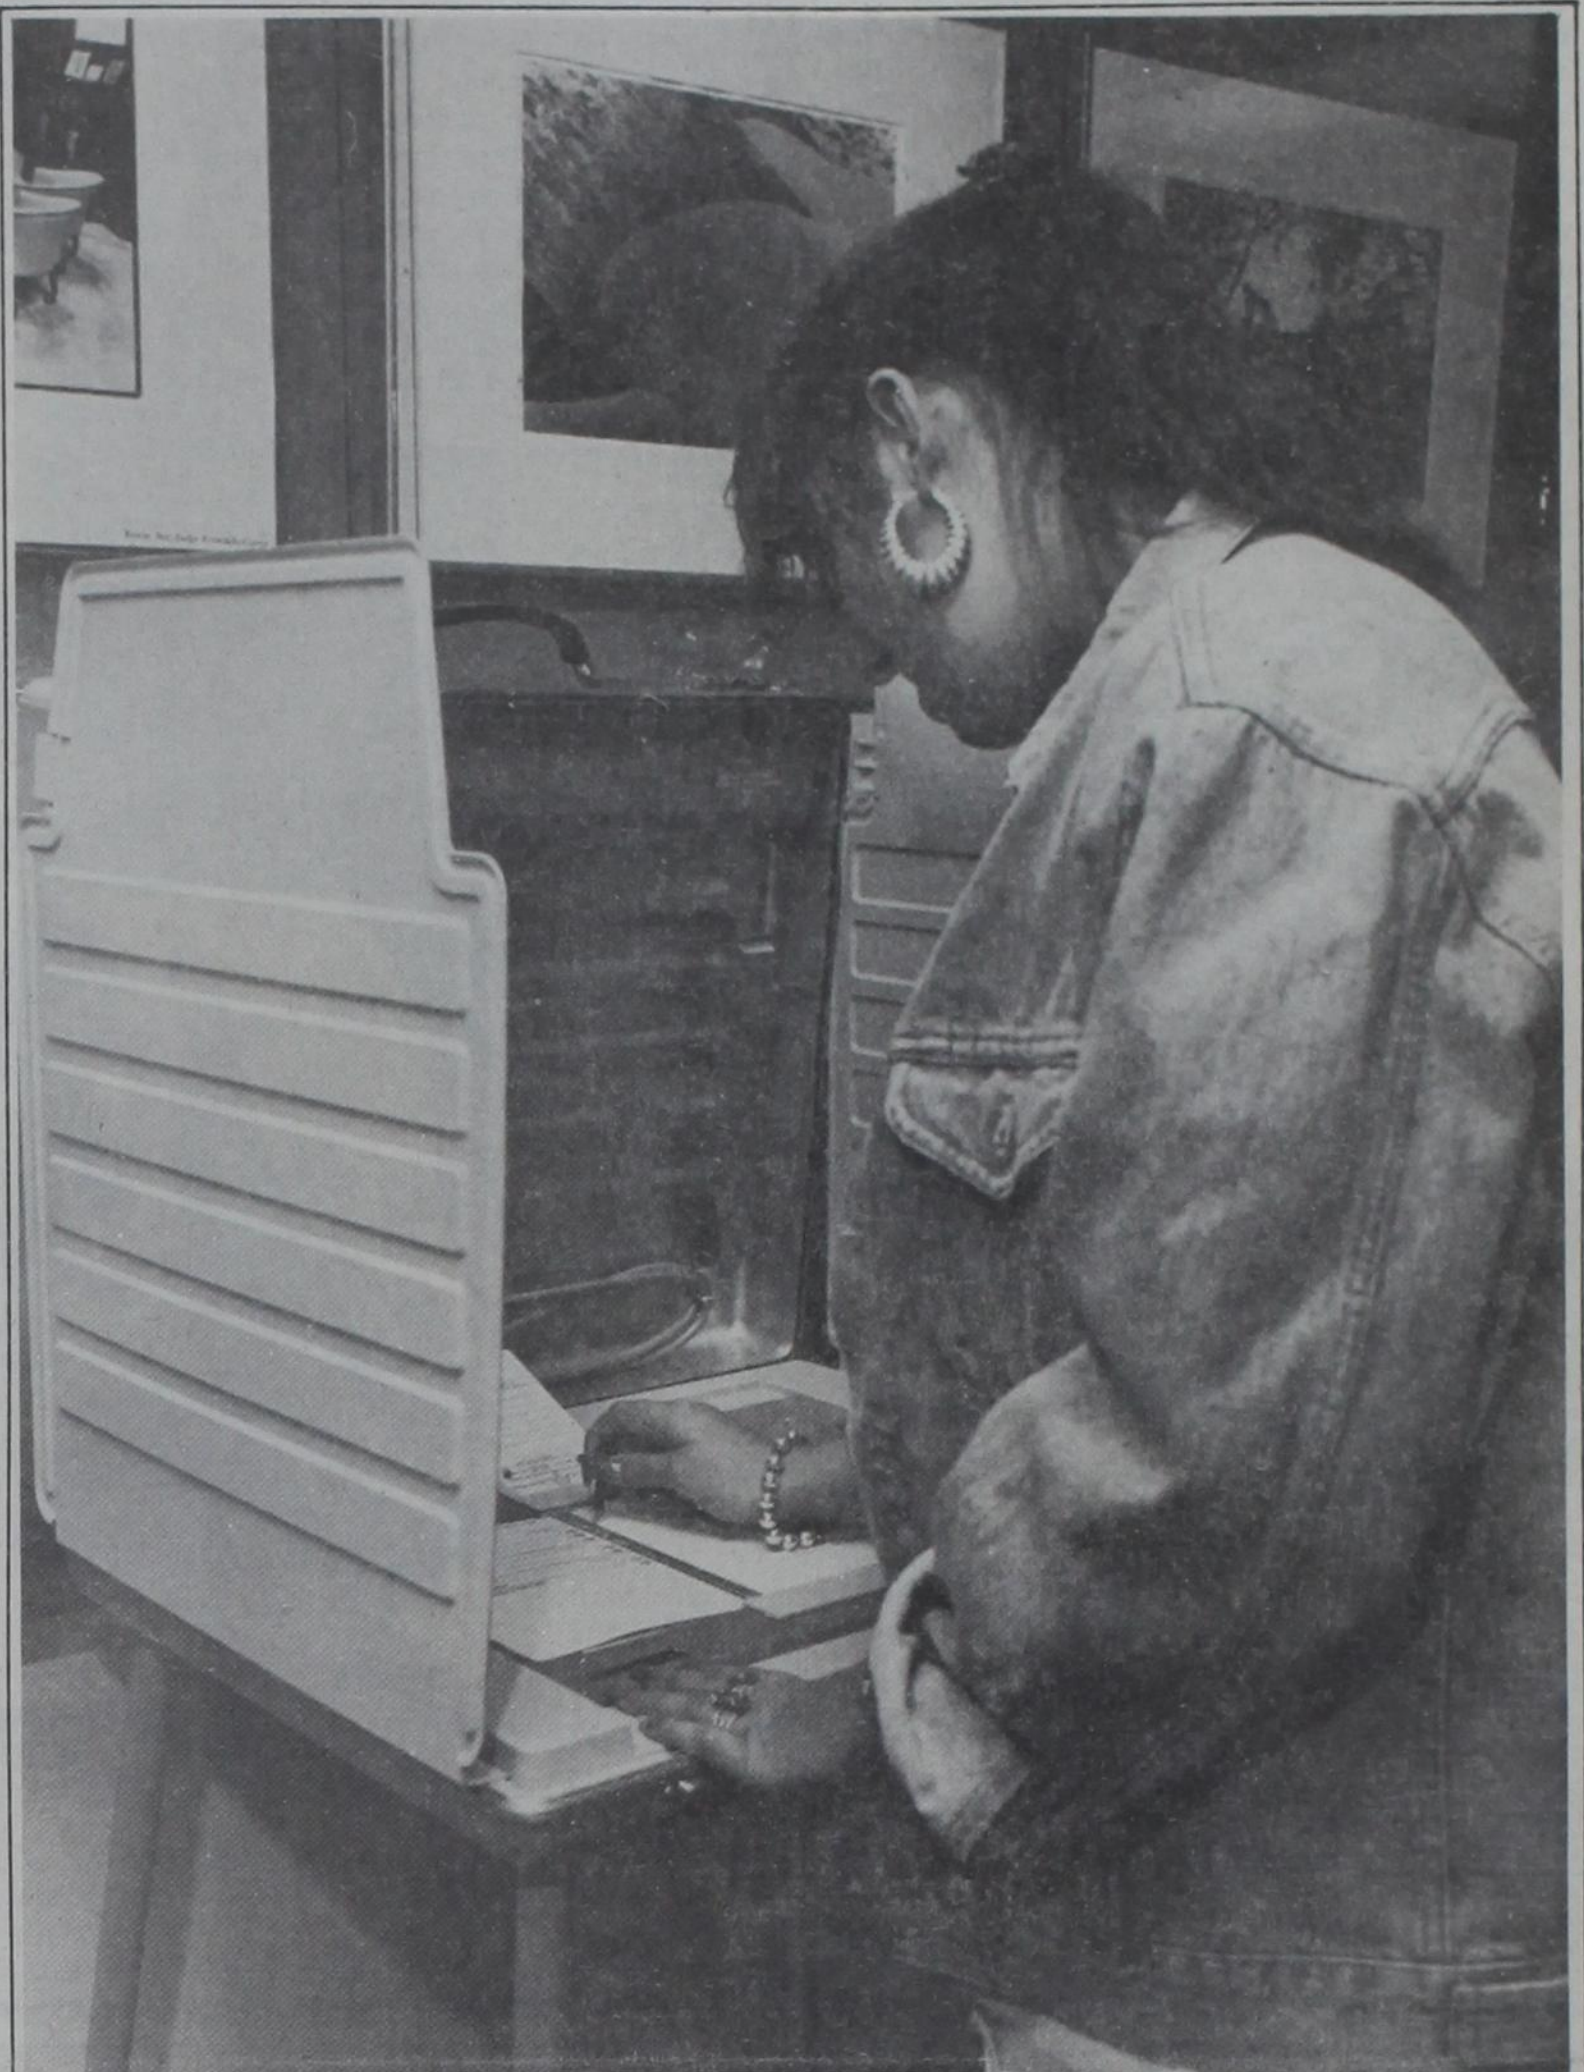

"We knew that discussions about the sale were taking place, and we studied a proposal to purchase the property, but we had no money at the time and were unable to purchase the University-City Club," Haley said.

If Valley Federal Savings Bank decides to dispose of the University-City Club, Tech must find alternative facilities for the RHIM program, Haley indicated.

"We must make adjustments," she said. "We are hoping that through contributions and gifts, we can own our own facility to house RHIM, the Ex-Students Association and the Faculty Club, but that is a long-range goal."

The RHIM program was created in January 1983 and is part of one of the largest undergraduate programs in the United States. RHIM labs have been located in the University-City Club the past two years.

University-City Club facilities include 40 hotel rooms, a 150-seat restaurant, a 40-seat bar and banquet facilities for 200 people.

Haley optimistic over increased higher education state funding

By CORTCHIE WELCH
The University Daily

Returning from a two-week journey of high-level negotiating in Austin, Texas Tech's Interim President Elizabeth Haley told members of the Faculty Senate Wednesday that she is "cautiously optimistic" that Tech will receive a fair allotment of the state funding for higher education.

Haley said officials at this moment are trying to determine the amount of money in the state in order to determine how much funding will be allocated to programs such as the prison system, public schools, mental health/mental retardation, higher education and other programs.

"All in all, we are cautiously optimistic at this point there really are no possible decisions," Haley said. "And we certainly hope that we can at least have a budget that is based on the increases in enrollment that we have had."

She said a possible increase in Tech faculty and staff salaries was a major issue during her meetings with state legislators. Haley said that although the state Legislature determines the size of faculty, she feels there is a need for staff increases.

The other issue that Tech has continued to be involved with, Haley said, is the ongoing negotiation on the proposed plan to create a University Parkway on Brownfield Highway.

Donald Haragan, vice president/provost, announced at the Faculty Senate meeting that the state Legislative Budget Board has recommended a 5 percent decrease in funding for Tech.

"My best guess at this point is that the 5 percent cut will not occur," Haragan said. "I will be surprised if we don't get some small increase in higher education. However, a small increase still perhaps might be only enough money to provide level services."

The Texas Coordinating Board of Higher Education has requested $34 million to administer the Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP), Haragan said. If the request is granted, Tech will receive $677,000 to implement the plan on campus, he said.

Haragan said the program will cost Tech about $1 million to manage.

Haley also announced that Margaret Simon has been appointed permanent director of Texas Tech News and Publications.

In other business, the Faculty Senate elected new officers for the 1989-90 academic year.

Julia Whitsitt, an assistant professor of English, was elected president of the Faculty Senate.

Arlin Peterson, an education professor, was elected as vice president.

Betty Wagner, an associate professor of human development and family studies, was elected as secretary.

Political group seeks $1 billion hike in higher education funds

By LEANNA EFIRD
The University Daily

A political action group said last week that the state should increase funding for higher education by about $1 billion.

Members of the Texas Foundation for Higher Education recommended to a joint session of the Senate Education and Finance committees an increase in funding of $919 million to restore budget cuts made four years ago and to make adjustments for inflation and increased student enrollment.

Richard Hall, a budget analyst, said cuts were made during the 1985 special session. During the 1988-89 biennium, however, funding for higher education was increased by $300 million. The foundation asked that additional funding be added on top of the increase.

Jess Hay, a member of the Texas Foundation for Higher Education, said the majority of the funds would be designated for adjustments for inflation ($292 million), the cost of increased enrollment ($279 million) and faculty pay raises ($200 million).

"The proposal is going through the appropriations process right now," Hall said. "So far, there has been a very positive reaction to the recommendation."

Quality in higher education is critical to helping the state's economy, Hay said. "Texas would not have had a chance to win projects, such as the superconducting super collider, without legislative support of higher education," he said.

In addition, the proposal recommends that faculty pay be increased in order to keep the best instructors. The average faculty salary in other states is $40,000, but in Texas salaries average $34,000, Hay said.

Larry Temple, a member of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, said enrollment has increased almost 10 percent the past two years. Without increased funding to cover the cost of growing enrollment, funding for higher education over the next biennium at the current level would have a reduction of almost 19 percent.

"The purpose of our foundation is to see that higher education is properly funded," said Peter O'Donnell, a foundation member. "The recommendation was proposed to get higher education back to where it was before the 1985 cuts. Hopefully, if the recommendation is passed, colleges and universities will be able to use the money not only to cover their inflationary expenses, but also to make improvements."

Sen. Chet Edwards asked that temporary tax increases scheduled to expire on Sept. 1 be maintained to provide funding for the recommendation. Hall indicated that using temporary taxes is not an option.

"One way to fund this would be to repair loopholes in the tax code," Hall said. "The revenue taken in from the repairs could be used for funding higher education."

Democracy at work

Wednesday's warm weather not only gave the Tech campus a glimpse of spring, it encouraged concerned Techsians to go out and vote in the Student Association general election as shown here by freshman Heather Sixt, a dance major from San Antonio. The Election Commission will release election results today.

Candidates say poor publicity, vandalism marred '89 election

By STACY ALBRACHT
The University Daily

Although winners have not been announced, Student Association Election Day 1989 now is only a memory.

Some candidates believe the election went well, but others think poor publicity and poster vandalism marred this year's election.

"The election could have been better publicized," said Doug English, a candidate for the SA presidency. "We hope next year we can promote more student awareness of the elections and what the Student Association is and does."

Amy Boyd, a candidate for SA president, agreed.

"More publicity was needed, especially for the debates," Boyd said. "I believe the people who came already knew where the candidates stood on most of the issues. So the debate really did not give us a chance to express our views to a different group of people."

Some candidates said the election was hampered by poster vandalism. Several senatorial candidates had posters removed or vandalized in some way.

Doug Forte, a candidate for arts and sciences senator, issued a formal complaint about the vandalism to the Dean of Students Office.

"The election code was very ambiguous as to where students could put posters," Forte said. "Students spent time and money on the posters which were then torn down."

Forte said 15 of his 22-by-17-inch posters had been removed less than 24 hours after they were hung.

"Something needs to be done about this," Forte said. "In the future, I hope that senators will get together and make it clear where candidates can put posters as well as where they can campaign on election day."

Robert Lowery, a graduate senatorial candidate, said rules also should indicate how far apart the candidates' signs can be placed.

"Some candidates made their posters bigger simply by putting two signs together," Lowery said. "The rule needs clarification."

Several candidates said they believe election day went well and that many students came out and voiced their opinions.

"Overall, election day went well," Forte said. "We had good weather, and that contributed to the good voter turnout."

Jeanne Pinkerton, a candidate for senator-at-large, place two, attributed part of the turnout to the UC fee increase referendum that appeared on the 1989 ballot.

"With the referendum on the ballot, students came out to vote because the referendum so directly affects them," Pinkerton said.

The candidates were out in full force for last-minute campaigning throughout Wednesday.

"I did my best," said Angela Tilley, an arts and sciences senatorial candidate. "I handed out about 600 handbills, and I spoke to three different groups."

Attempts were made to contact the remaining executive officer candidates, but they could not be reached.

Third candidate will visit Tech

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

The third Texas Tech presidential candidate, Warren Armstrong, will speak to the Faculty Senate at 3 p.m. today in the University Center Senate Room.

Armstrong, who is president of Wichita State University in Wichita, Kan., also will meet with student leaders today.

In a telephone interview with the candidate, Armstrong described his management style as "open."

"I believe in a consensus," he said. "Those who are going to be affected by a decision should have the opportunity to give their input."

Armstrong said he couldn't give reasons why he wants to be president of Tech or explain what he could offer the university until after he has visited the campus.

The 55-year-old Armstrong received a master's degree and a doctorate in history from the University of Michigan.

He has been president of Wichita State, which has an enrollment of about 17,200, since 1983. He served as president of Eastern New Mexico University from 1975 to 1983.

At both the universities, Armstrong was tenured as a professor of history. From 1970 to 1975, he was dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and also a professor of history at St. Cloud State University. Armstrong was assistant/associate dean in the College of Arts and Sciences and associate professor of history from 1965 to 1970 at the University of Wisconsin at Whitewater.

He was chairman and assistant professor in the department of history at Olivet College in Olivet, Mich., from 1961 to 1965.

Other candidates include Donald Zacharias, president of Mississippi State University in Starkville, Miss., who visited the campus Feb. 24, and Steven Altman, president of Texas A&I University in Kingsville, who was on campus Monday.

Khomeini sows seeds for harvest of racial strife

Scott Brumley
Editor

Discrimination unfortunately is alive and kicking in 1989.

To discover this, one need only read the stories or watch the reports about the surge in racial incidents on college campuses, the fact that a former grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan could attain elected office or the shameful situation in South Africa.

Racial prejudice is bad enough, but the promotion of it is morally reprehensible. Ironically, such destructive motivation may be exactly what Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini is spewing forth, unknowingly (or uncaringly) setting the stage for a broad base of disdain for his fellow Iranians who live abroad.

The issue could turn particularly ugly in the Western world. The United States long has huddled under the shadow of racial prejudice, and as people of Middle Eastern descent — most notably Iranians — begin to exert their role in society, that shadow could become a firestorm of terrible proportions.

Khomeini's steadfast insistence on the execution of British author Salman Rushdie for his novel The Satanic Verses and his assertion that Islamic law somehow overrides the pervasive notion in the West that murder is a crime rapidly is becoming so offensive to Europeans and Americans that Iranians may face a racially motivated retribution unparalleled since the Klan's campaign of terror against African-Americans and other minorities in the 1960s.

Is this truly the duty of a religious leader — to tie the perception of race to the image of religious fanaticism, creating a two-headed monster of prejudice?

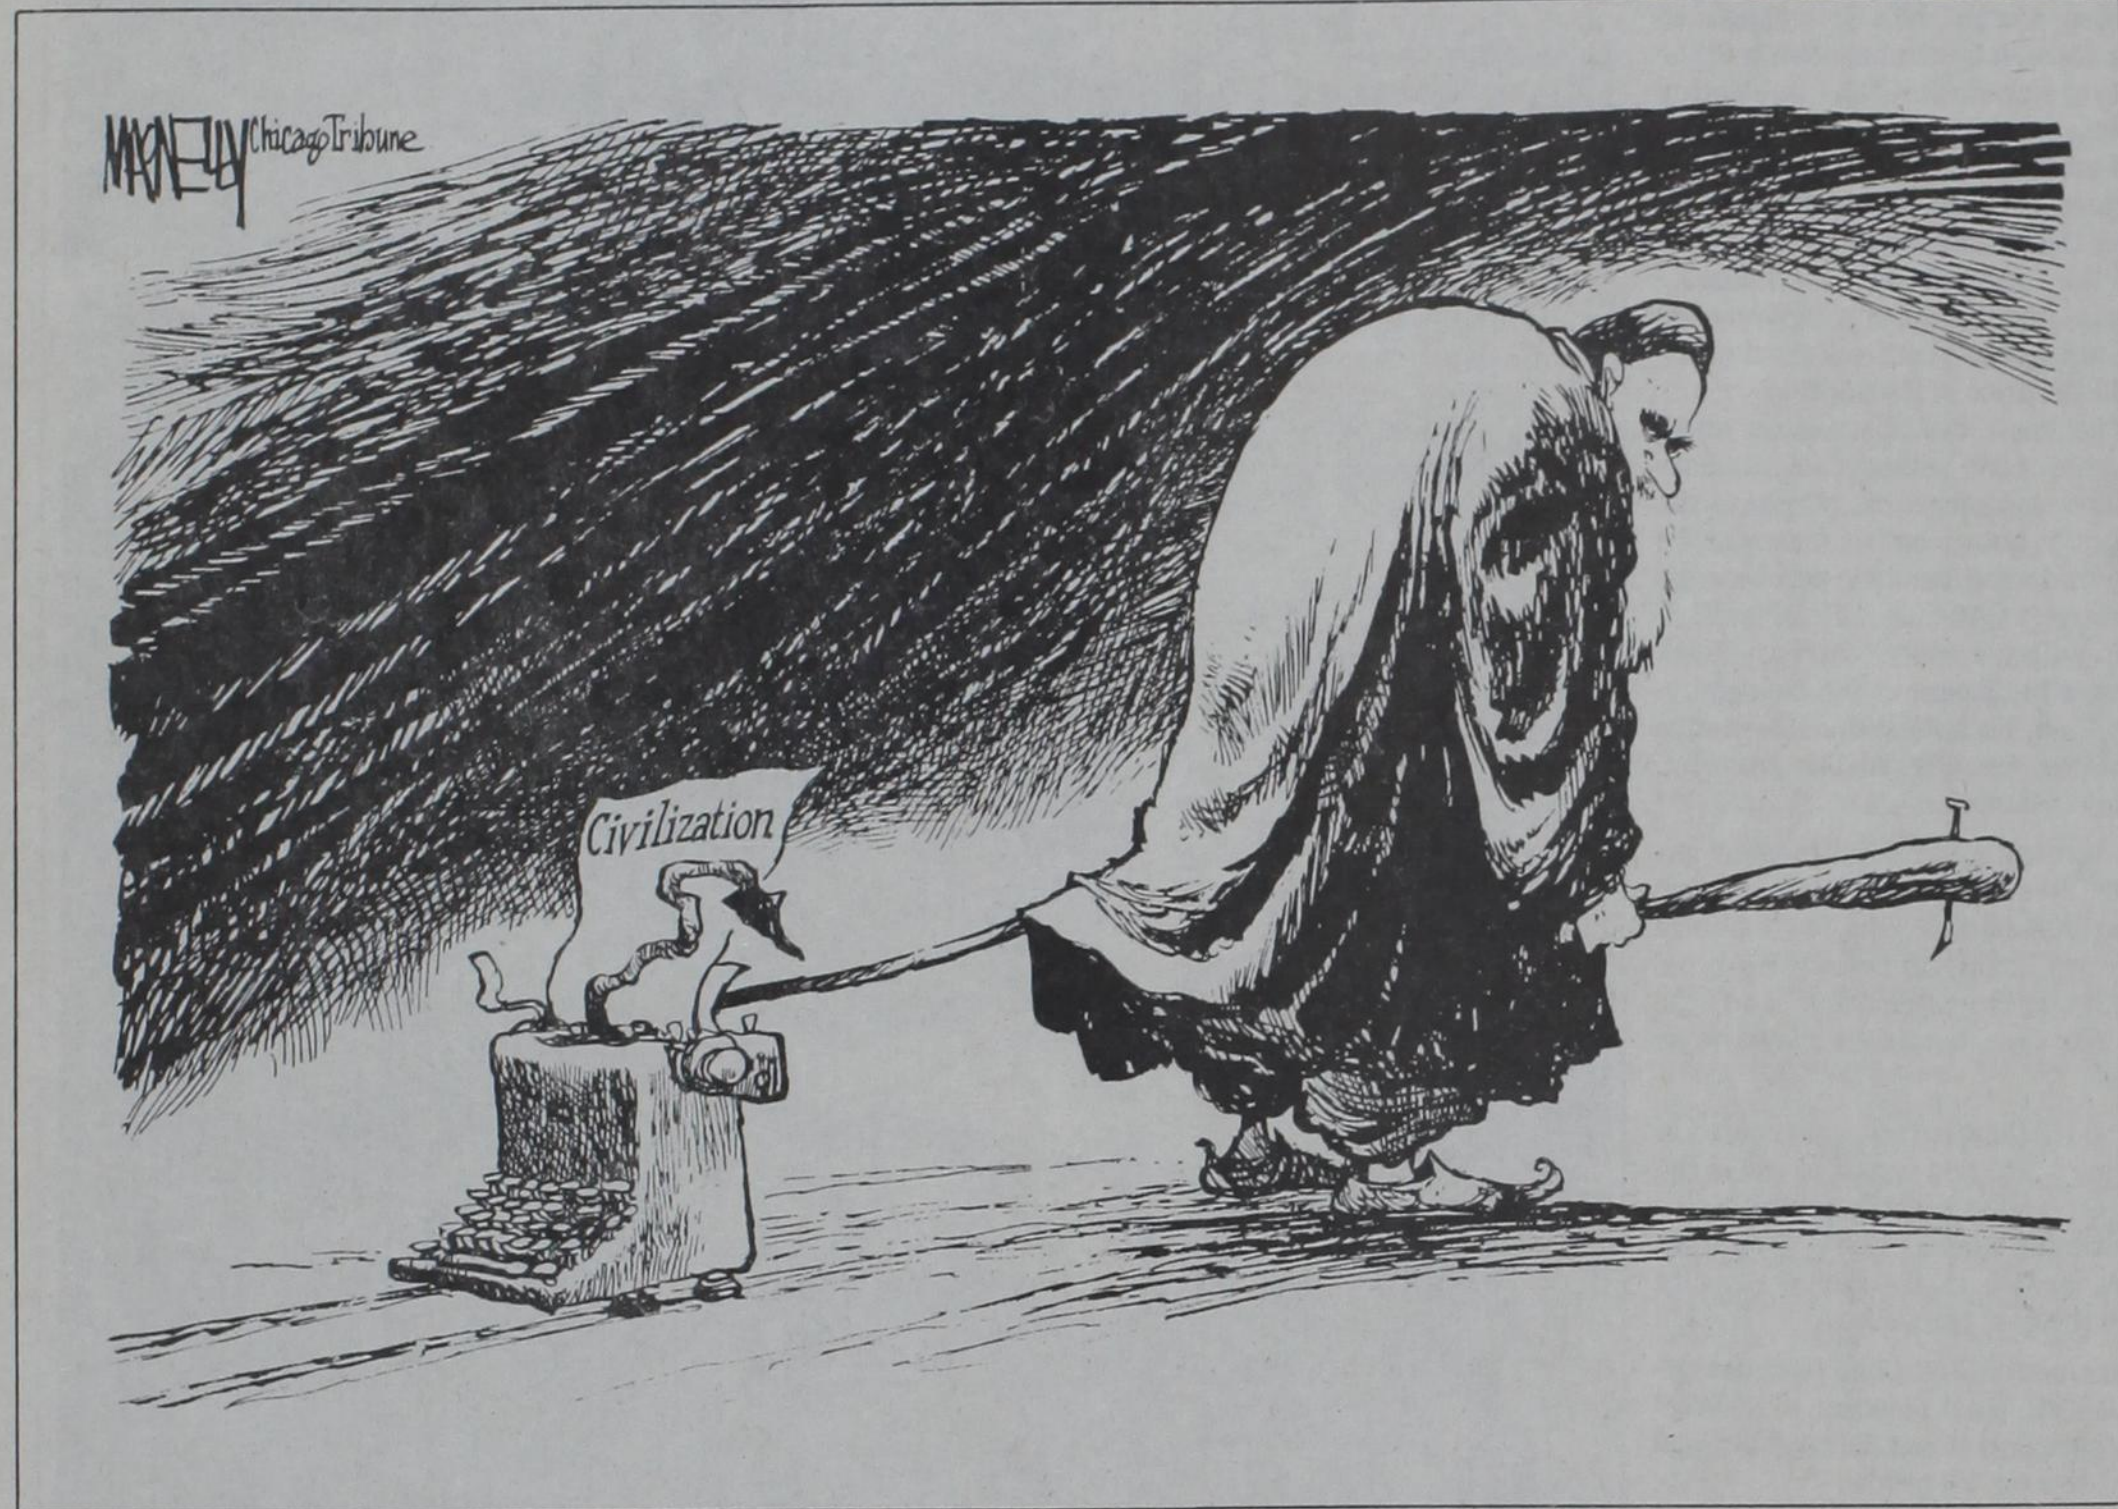

Whites may not be able to understand what it is to be the victim of prejudice, but thinking whites certainly can recognize the seeds of racism and understand how they grow. Khomeini unwittingly is sowing those seeds now, and Iranians living abroad very well may reap a bitter harvest of racially motivated hatred as a result of the Ayatollah's maniacal obsession with intrusion into basic Western norms.

The press has all but ignored what might happen to Iranians who are not taking to the streets exhibiting their righteous indignation. They stand to suffer greatly from this entire affair, as, eventually, do their vociferous counterparts.

Unfortunately, as history indicates, prejudice and racism make no room for mitigating circumstances. To a racial bigot, all Iranians are seen as devout Khomeini partisans who should suffer for their leader's naughtiness.

Watching the development of the Rushdie affair has been an incredulous exercise. That, in 1989, a religious leader would demand the death of an individual without a modicum of remorse is shocking.

That the same religious leader would unconsciously set the stage for prejudice against his people is tragic.

Walk in others' shoes

To the editor:

Have we walked a mile in the shoes of those we judge?

In reading Ralph Means' letter in the March 7 issue of The UD, I was moved to write and salute all those minorities who are proud and courageous enough to stand and be recognized as people who are interested and involved in their community. I also want to gratefully thank all those who have generously understood and supported the position of minorities here at Tech. Thank you!

The "breaks" that Mr. Means say the university gives to minorities are things that minorities have stood up and asked for so that it would be a little more "fair" for them to be afforded the privilege of attending Texas Tech University.

I feel this is a good time for everyone to think about how often we are subtly prejudiced. Most everyone, if asked, will vehemently deny being prejudiced; but let's think to ourselves how many times we avoided people because of their color, accent or behavior. How many times have we ignored a classmate or a neighbor because we feel uncomfortable around their uniqueness?

I ask every student here at Tech to think about tomorrow, when we will be the leaders, teachers, and policy makers. Will we teach the younger generations to categorize people because they are different? Or will we teach them to see everyone as we see ourselves, with rights, dreams, and needs?

This is the time to begin to understand where others come from and what they face. It is time to understand that we need to help those in our community who are striving to reach a dream of bettering themselves.

Try to understand that some minorities are poor, they are a variety of skin tones, some cannot walk, move, see, speak or hear. Some are sick, some are immigrants, some speak English as a second or third language and some are many miles away from home.

Here at Texas Tech, minorities have a few things in common: Everyone is here to learn and experience new things; we are here to better ourselves because our parents and their parents have dreamed and worked so hard for us to be here and so those who will follow in our footsteps may have it a little easier. Some face great physical and mental obstacles. In return we offer our talents, friendship, understanding and, if anyone ever needs it, help.

So I ask everyone not for sympathy, but to be aware of what is going on in our community, and reflect for one moment to try to understand what it is like "to walk a mile in the shoes of those we judge."

Be balanced in reviews

To the editor:

I had truly hoped that I could get out of Tech without ever writing another letter to The UD. I had even overlooked a number of things in the past months that four years ago would have received at least one letter, and maybe more. Yet, here I am again.

This letter concerns the coverage of the Reba McEntire concert by Joel Brown. My first question is why send a sports writer to cover a music item? Maybe you are short on reporters, which is understandable and makes at least some sense. The rest of my questions are not so easily answered.

Why didn't you take the biography package so that readers could have some more information on McEntire? The UD has often printed stories with less background so your excuse that it would not "provide enough information to form an original personality profile" is worthless.

What about the opening acts, Patty Loveless and Ricky Van Shelton? And most importantly, why spend almost one-fourth of a page griping when you could have made a mention of your problems (concisely) and then given more information about the concert?

You only put in one paragraph about the concert itself, and that much you could have gotten from a press release!

After all, if it had been Metallica or some group like that, you would have probably put the rudeness down as natural and spent a page telling about the concert! (Please note exaggerated sarcasm, I don't want a return letter telling me the exact page length of the last Metallica concert, thank you!)

If The UD is going to try and be a legitimate member of the press, why doesn't it at least try and cover events with some kind of equality, i.e. without overt bias?

Thomas Payton

D in UD: Discrimination

To the editor:

Ralph, by all means, it is clear to us that you do not understand where we are coming from, nor have you experienced the atmosphere in which we live on this campus. It is a shame that someone has to get down-right nasty and turn on their "black jingo," just to make you understand what we are "crying wolf" about, my philanthropist.

I am a pre-medicine major, minor in mathematics and biological science from the Dallas/Fort Worth area, and when I was a senior in high school, TTU made it clear to our students that they did not care about increasing minority enrollment when a meeting was set up by our principal to talk to us about "Twice the University." Well, the speaker did not show up but left his pamphlets.

So I came because I love the challenge of making a difference when human rights are concerned. Agricultural major, go aggravate some other culture for a change. The first sign to me of a prejudice is when someone tells me they are not "racist," without showing any evidence whatsoever.

For your incredible means of trying to communicate with "us Black folks," you will find out that only 15 African-American students received scholarships this year. The students came only from the Lubbock ISD and did not reach anywhere above the $8,000 mark. Can you compare that to the white male valedictorian of Estacado High School who received a $50,000 scholarship alone? Ralph, by all means, get the facts straight.

We understand that your money is used also to finance The UD, but our money is probably used first, while our news has been swept under the rug. Yes, The UD stands for the "University of Discriminators" that fails to support Asians, Hispanic and African-American events. But, because we have learned to speak out for our rights after 370 years of oppressions, "the big brothers of the all mighty white society" feels that we are trying to completely run things our way. Wrong!

A respectable paper would put an article that is commending someone first, before a degrading letter.

I guess all I really wanted to say is that all people are created equal, but are not treated the same. And that the biggest wolf of all is the wolf who is complaining about the wolf who is supposedly crying.

Human rights is the real deal, by all means, Ralph. So if you see me rapping down the campus with my earphones, I am listening to Run DMC rapping about how proud they are to be "black, and that's a fact," because I have the divine right, too.

Censors wield religion

To the editor:

At the risk of being sentenced to death by the Ayatollah Khomeini, I am offering these points to the people who are interested in the Rushdie situation.

First of all, to S.H.R. Zaidi, since his letter is fresh on our minds. People in the United States do have a difficult time understanding that Islamic law supersedes any man-made law. This is because of one simple reason. Islamic law does not supersede manmade law. In the United States, the law stems from the Constitution. This document protects our freedom of expression and choice. And, yes, that is the issue in the United States.

In the words of Harlan Ellison, "They (the censors) will always be able to justify their mad visions by claiming we were only the hand tools of the Devil. I suggest that their concerns are not really of God, people and morality: Their aim is power." Ray Bradbury goes on to say, significantly, "I can hardly think of any circumstance in which censorship is justifiable." (Omni, February 1987)

Censorship, on any level, is the most despicable form of oppression. Anthony Podesta, president of People for the American Way (PAW) said, "Censors don't just want to ban (literature), they want to ban ideas." (Omni, February 1987) The recent bannings of the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ" and of The Satanic Verses show that this statement is hardly an understatement.

Censorship on the basis of offending people is ludicrous. It may start as just religious censorship, but where can we expect to draw the line? Can we expect to be, one day, living in a world pictured by Ray Bradbury's Fahrenheit 451?

Also, to Zaidi, don't you think killing someone that has a different opinion than yourself is a little absurd?

Students preserve symbol of city's history

By SCOTT VAN DUYN
The University Daily

Five Texas Tech architecture students are working to record for eternity the existence of a historic building that may be doomed, an architecture professor says.

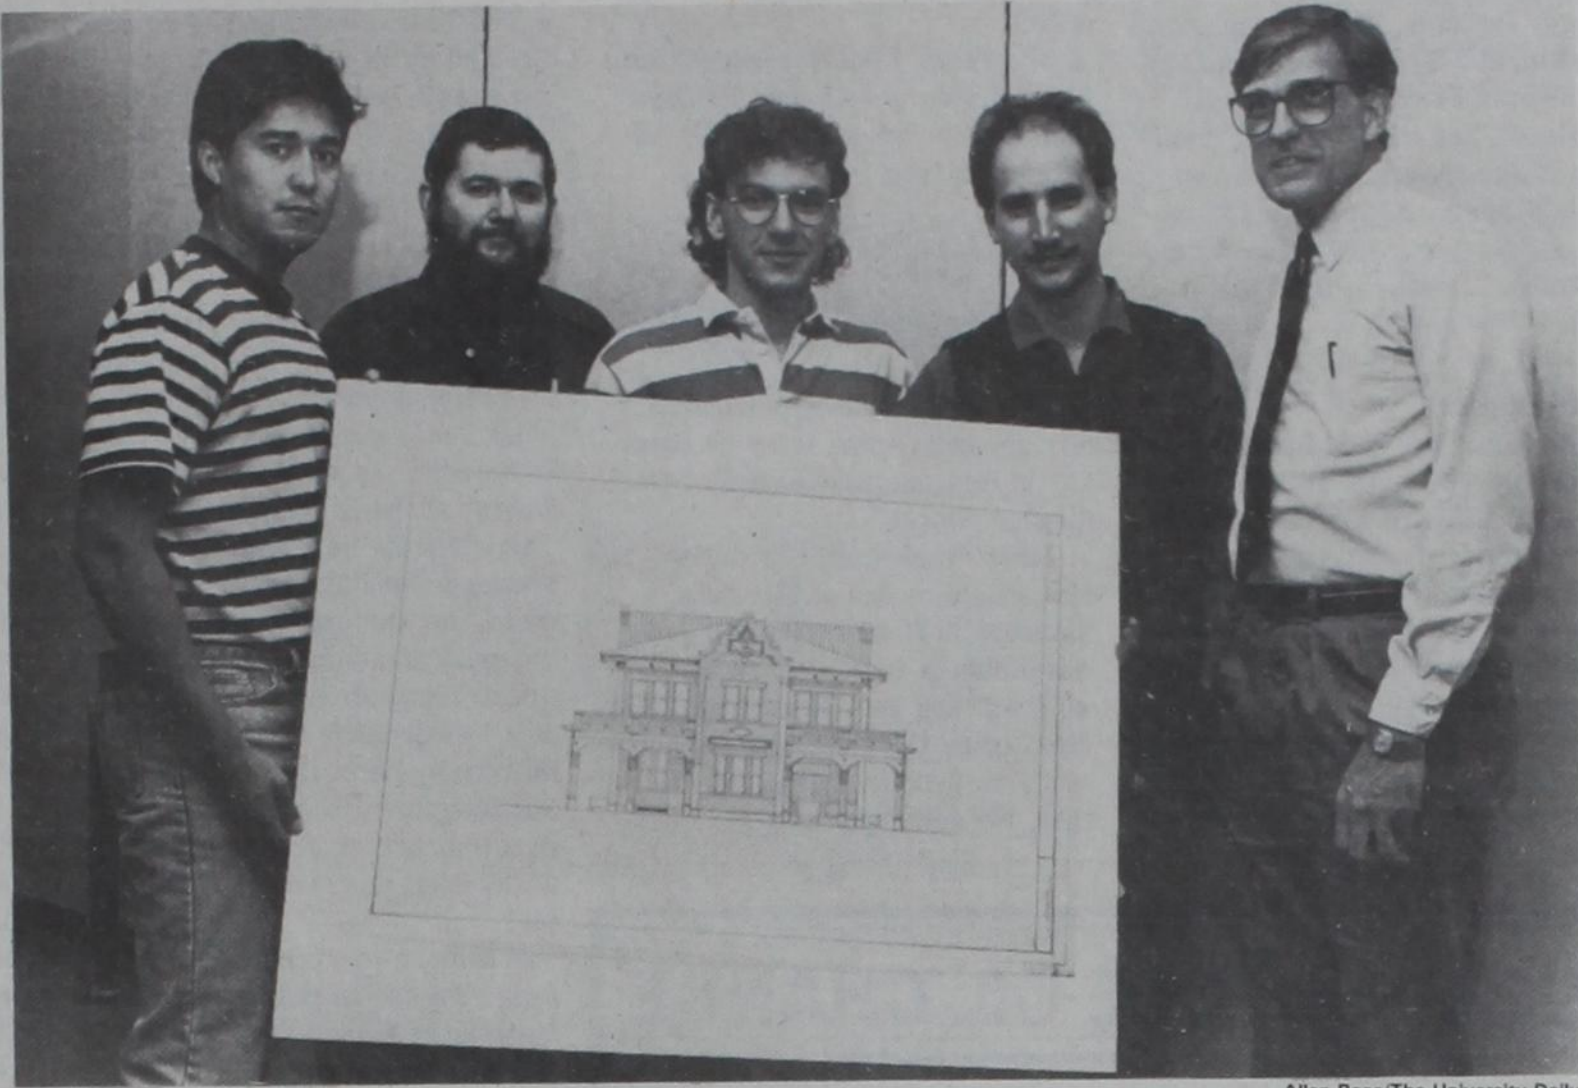

John White, an associate architecture professor and head of the project to record the building's existence, said the building was a railroad depot built 77 years ago. The structure stands, for the time being, at the intersection of two railroad tracks in Marshall, White said.

The current owner thinks the depot, which stands between two heavily used tracks, is a safety hazard. Consequently, the depot has been targeted for demolition, White said.

White works for the National Parks Service during the summer as a supervisor for the service's Historical Building Survey. The Washington park service office asked White to find students who would be interested in drawing plans of the depot in the fall, he said.

"Through the summer I talked with them about doing that," he said. "I made a proposal to them and received a grant from the Texas Historical Commission. We received $3,003 from the commission."

White asked students from a historical conservation class in the architecture college to participate. The five architecture students involved are David Alderete, a fourth-year student from Rosenberg; Carl Malcolm, a third-year student from Dallas; Steve Byington, a fourth-year student from San Antonio; Matt Severance, a fourth-year student from Balverde; and John Kimball, a fourth-year student from Lubbock.

To save a depot

Tech architecture students show off the drawing of an old train depot in Marshall which was done at the request of the Historical Building Survey of the National Park Service. Pictured are students David Alderete, John Kimball, Carl Malcolm and Steve Byington and associate professor John White. The owners of the depot see it as a safety hazard, while people in Marshall want to preserve the building.

"The first week in October the students and I spent a week in Marshall measuring the building, photographing and getting all the field information needed for these drawings," White said.

When the railroads abandoned passenger cars, they no longer used the depot, White said.

"It's in pretty bad shape right now due to vandalism and the fact that they have not kept it up," he said.

People who live in Marshall want the railroad to donate the depot or make the building available for sale to the city for restoration.

"They can't keep them from tearing it down if they want to," White said. "They are trying to encourage the railroad to understand the significance that the depot has to the city of Marshall and also its significance in the Texas Pacific line."

Bentsen defends Tower

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, in his first tough call since running for vice president last year, parted company with virtually all his fellow Senate Democrats Wednesday in declaring he'll vote for fellow Texan John Tower as defense secretary.

But his endorsement seemed to avoid putting personal prestige on the line for his former Senate colleague or another Texas friend, George Bush.

"I hope that when I get the next chance to talk with John Tower about the tough job of keeping this country strong, it will be while he's in his new office," Bentsen said in a speech to the Senate.

His announcement ended weeks of silence on his part and speculation by others on whether Bentsen would side with Bush or with his Democratic colleagues.

It came only after Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, predicted the votes were in place to defeat the nomination whatever Bentsen's decision.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the Armed Services Committee chairman and the man leading the opposition to Tower, walked over to Bentsen, touched his shoulder and shook his hand.

Bentsen's decision was closely watched both because of his Texas ties and because of the visibility he has held since he had the No. 2 spot on the Democratic ticket last fall.

Bentsen has assumed the role of party heavyweight, delivering the Senate Democratic response to Bush's first speech to Congress and declaring his opposition to some of the administration's spending cuts and tax proposals.

When Tower was nominated in January, Bentsen's vote for him seemed a sure thing. Bentsen spoke warmly about his long-time colleague when he first presented Tower to the Senate Armed Services Committee as Bush's choice for secretary of defense.

He brushed aside as "just politics" the brutal attacks against Democrats by Tower during last fall's campaign. Bentsen sought to reassure more liberal senators that the hawkish Tower was a good choice to hold down spending.

"John Tower is too much of a conservative to give a blank check from the U.S. Treasury to the Pentagon," Bentsen said.

But as the showdown over the nomination grew in intensity, Bentsen avoided the Senate debate — until Wednesday — and kept quiet on how his vote would be cast.

Republicans in Texas became impatient, as did Bush, whose calls included one during his Far East trip.

Tech blasts SMU in first round

By JOEL BROWN
The University Daily

Texas Tech returned to standard playoff form Wednesday as the Red Raiders dominated SMU 81-65 to advance to the semifinal round of the women's Southwest Conference Post-Season Tournament at Moody Coliseum in Dallas.

Tech junior center Stacey Siebert showed signs of what was yet to come in the game's first few minutes when she scored all of her team's points to open a 9-0 lead.

The 1988-89 All-SWC second team selection controlled the paint on both ends of the floor in pacing the Raiders with 25 points, 14 rebounds and two blocked shots. Freshman teammate Jennifer Buck also contributed to the inside dominance by matching a career-high 22 points.

"Offensively, Stacey and Jennifer were the difference," Tech coach Marsha Sharp said. "They did a great job of converting when they got the ball on the block."

With the win, the Raiders meet No. 2-seed Arkansas in the semifinal round at 6 p.m. today at Moody a 16-2 Raider run that put SMU out of reach. Tech's biggest lead came at the 8:07 mark, 63-44.

Guard Jeannia Nix led the Mustangs with 22 points, followed by forward LeQuita Smith and Heather Nygard with 15 and 12.

Homecourt advantage has proved meaningless for SMU, which finished its season 3-9 at home.

The Razorbacks, 21-6 and 13-3 in the SWC, along with 23-4 and 16-0 Texas, received a bye in the first round. Arkansas won its two meetings with Tech this year as Razorback forward Shelly Wallace combined for 50 points.

Myers expecting close game in TCU rubber match

By JOEL WEST
The University Daily

With the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic drawing near, the Texas Tech men's basketball team held what possibly was the Red Raiders' last workout for the 1988-89 season Wednesday in the Athletic Training Center.

Not wanting to tire his players, coach Gerald Myers said the Raiders had somewhat intense practices Monday and Tuesday, followed by a light workout Wednesday. The team also will have a light practice Thursday in Dallas in preparation for Friday's Classic-opening game against TCU.

"We didn't work extremely hard because it's late in the year and we really don't need to work hard," Myers said following Wednesday's workout. "You need to save most of your energy and your effort for the tournament."

Myers said the week's practices were productive, and much of the reason was the Raiders' 85-67 win over Baylor on Sunday, which he said put Tech in a better frame of mind.

Tech and TCU split close contests during the regular season, with both teams winning on their opponent's home court. TCU edged the Raiders 57-56 on Jan. 22, and Tech held off the Frogs 58-54 on Feb. 22 in Fort Worth.

Myers said he is expecting another close game in Dallas.

"We played them two close games, and I would think this would be the same type of game," he said. "We're anticipating another close one."

Tech and TCU are similar in that they both are defense-oriented clubs. Myers said the Horned Frogs rely on defense and the turnovers caused by it.

"That's their strength, really," he said. "Offensively, they take care of the ball and can control the game with the ball."

Cowboys can't spell relief; Raiders take 12-6 victory

By JEFF PARKER
The University Daily

The Texas Tech baseball team saved its best hitting for last and came back to beat Wyoming 12-6 Wednesday at Dan Law Field.

The Red Raiders, down 6-3 in the bottom of the eighth inning, scored nine runs on six hits off Cowboy pitching.

Raider coach Larry Hays said, "It was good to see them come back like that."

"We just need to keep competing when we get behind and don't press or force anything."

Tech and Wyoming will square off again in game two of their four-game set at 7 p.m. today at Dan Law Field.

Wyoming starter Barry Goldman sandwiched a strikeout between two walks to Donald Harris and Brian Roper in the eighth inning.

Wyoming coach Bill Kinneberg went to the bullpen and to right-hander Kevin Bumgarner (0-1) to try to bail out the Cowboys.

The Raiders caught fire as Randy Deal, pinch-hitting for Shannon Hays, smacked a one-out double to left, scoring Harris and moving Roper to third to make the score 6-4.

Roper and Kyle Ford, pinch-running for Deal, scored on Chris Moore's double to left-center, tying the score at 6-6.

Mike Gustafson got the game-winning run-batted-in single, scoring Moore and advancing to second on the throw to home. Bumgarner intentionally walked Greg Kobza after a 2-0 count to set up the double play and pitch to Mark Helms. Helms took the first pitch over the left field wall for three RBI and a 10-6 Raider lead.

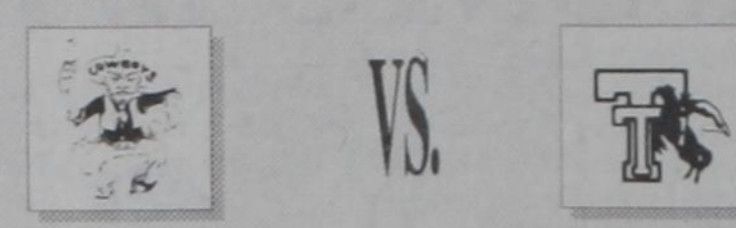

Gustafson Helms

Gilbert Arredondo doubled and moved to third on a wild pitch, and Harris drew another walk to chase Bumgarner.

Kevin Van Wormer replaced Bumgarner and got Matt Martin to ground out on a RBI fielder's choice, scoring Arredondo and moving Harris to second. Harris scored again on Roper's single, making the score 12-6.

The Cowboys coupled two errors, a walk and four singles into five runs in

Time is right for darkhorse to capture SWC title and NCAA bid

Brad Walker

Well, well it's tournament time again and all you (we) college basketball junkies can get fixed this weekend via cable television and its extensive coverage of conference tournaments across the nation.

We can all watch the tournament champions take their automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. Then we can speculate as to which independent schools and conference runners-up will be invited to the NCAA field.

This is nailbiting time for Southwest Conference fans, who have suffered with only two representatives for the last few years. The trend will continue in 1989 if Arkansas and Texas, the league's top two teams, play for the SWC Post-Season Classic XIV Championship on Sunday.

Once again, the SWC needs an upset.

Houston, Texas A&M and Texas Tech are my darkhorse picks of the Classic and could do the league proud by sneaking their way to a tournament title and the automatic NCAA bid. That would leave invitations for Arkansas and Texas, though a very real possibility exists that only one of them would be chosen.

SWC basketball has struggled for recognition in the late 1980s since Phi Slamma Jamma left the Houston campus and Eddie Sutton departed the Ozark Hills for the bluegrass hills.

The best way to regain national attention is to get teams into the NCAAs. Two per year isn't helping the SWC, and now is the time for three — especially when conferences such as the Big East, Big 10, Atlantic Coast and Southeast are placing five teams each in the tournament.

Arkansas and Texas are Top 40 teams, according to points totaled in last week's Associated Press Top 20 poll. Surely they could be counted among the 64 teams tabbed for the NCAA tourney.

Ruggers runner-up

The Texas Tech Rugby Club, 13-5 and ranked No. 8 in the western United States by Rugby magazine, placed second in the 1989 Collegiate Rugby Championships last weekend in Houston.

The Red Raiders blanked Texas 18-0 and Houston 25-0 in the preliminary rounds Saturday and defeated SMU in the semifinals 7-4 before falling to Rice 11-7 in the finals.

"I realize that the real world will be here before I know it...and I really enjoy not having to hassle with paying bills now," says Stephanie Wild of Stangel Hall. "I also appreciate the convenience of residence hall life: closeness to classrooms and library, social activities and, most importantly, friendships. The ties made here have been the strongest of my life."
