CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Anwar Sadat, whose peace with Israel changed the course of Middle East history, was assassinated Tuesday by six Egyptian soldiers who jumped from a truck on military parade and charged the reviewing stand firing automatic weapons and throwing grenades. Army sources said the attackers were Moslem fundamentalists.

See related stories, photos on p. 5

Sadat has been under attack by Moslem fundamentalists who claim he betrayed Islam and the Arab world through his peace with Israel, which broke the cycle of three decades of Mideast wars. Tuesday's parade marked the anniversary of what Egypt calls a "glorious Arab victory" in the last conflict of that cycle — the 1973 Arab war against Israel.

The raiders also were said to have killed seven other people and wounded 27, including three American servicemen and two diplomats.

The army sources said all six attackers, including one lieutenant, were members of an artillery unit. They said two were killed and the others were being interrogated.

That report differed from an earlier statement by Egypt's ambassador to Washington, Ashraf Ghorbal. He said three assassins were killed and three were captured.

The Egyptian government has not given official word on the assassins' identities, their ages, or their political and religious affiliations.

Vice President Hosni Mubarak declared a state of emergency and the ruling National Democratic Party nominated him to succeed Sadat.

Grief was expressed around the world at the loss of a man President Reagan called "a champion of peace." But there was rejoicing in some Arab capitals and by Palestinians who felt Sadat sold them out to the Israelis.

In Beirut, Lebanon, callers purporting to speak for three separate Egyptian opposition groups, claimed responsibility.

The death was considered likely to bring a new period of turmoil to the Mideast, and Israeli opponents of the peace treaty were gathering support for a last-ditch effort to block Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai.

The 62-year-old Sadat had enemies at home and throughout the Middle East because of his peace treaty with Israel and his recent crackdown on hundreds of opposition figures suspected of fomenting Christian-Moslem strife in Egypt. He shared the 1978 Nobel Peace Prize with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin after reaching the U.S.-sponsored Camp David accords.

Last month he ordered the arrest of more than 1,500 people, including fundamentalist Moslems and Coptic Christian leaders, and ordered private mosques to accept government control.

The attackers were said to have shouted, "Glory to Egypt!" and yelled "Agents and intruders!" at foreigners on the reviewing stand watching the parade.

Diplomatic and police sources reported seven others killed and 27 wounded on the reviewing stand, which was littered with bullet-riddled armchairs and bloodied dignitaries thrown into pandemonium by the attack.

Gains for Soviet Union, losses for Israel seen by professor

By KIPPIE HOPPER
UD Reporter

The assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will bring gains to the Soviet Union and will cause further losses to Israel, a Tech political science professor said Tuesday.

Metin Tamkoc, a specialist in Middle East affairs, said he doesn't expect immediate military confrontations between any countries in the Mideast.

"A crisis exists in Egypt," Tamkoc said. "There also is a crisis in the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. The uncertainties and risks in the area have been increased by this unfortunate development and act of violence."

"The United States lost a friend and an ally. Israel lost the most from this because no one else in the Mideast will deal with the Israelis," Tamkoc said.

"We can't predict what will happen in Egypt, Israel or the other Mideast countries. The new Egyptian leadership cannot take any steps that will be detrimental to the first phase of border adjustment. At this time of crisis, Egypt can't afford to have conditions of hostility furthered," Tamkoc said.

He said the region has destabilized and that this will affect future events in the area.

"Anything is possible except direct military confrontation between Egypt and Israel or any other Mideast country," Tamkoc said. "Syria is not in the position to challenge Israel. Iraq is involved in a costly military operation with Iran. Lebanon is in turmoil. There will not be any direct military contact between the Middle East countries."

Tamkoc said he expects both the United States and the Soviet Union to keep their armed forces on alert in the Mideast. "Sadat's death enhances the interest of the Soviet Union because there is more uncertainty, more instability in the area," Tamkoc said. "The Soviets are interested in further stress in the Middle East. The Soviet objectives are to destroy the friendly regimes and allies of the United States and the Western world. The Soviets gained yardage from the assassination."

Egyptian vice president Hosni Mubarak, who has been named as candidate for president by the ruling National Democratic Party, probably will follow Sadat's domestic policies and his policies in dealing with Israel, Tamkoc said.

"A point of caution in international politics is that anything is possible," he said.

Tamkoc said a coup d'etat, or a sudden violent overthrow of a government by a small group, is not unusual in the Middle East.

"In the Middle East, the general trend is that when the leader is gone, his policies are gone. That may not happen in this instance. In international politics, there are no permanent enemies or allies. Yesterday's enemies become today's allies, and vice versa," Tamkoc said.

"Sadat had a great vision of trying to bring stability and order and finally prosperity to the area of the Middle East," he said. "He had taken his life into his own hands to act on his great vision," he said.

The Camp David agreements initiated by President Carter have become more uncertain with Sadat's death, he said. "The first phase will survive, that is the accord of cooperation between Israel and Egypt in Mideastern relations. The principle of autonomy for Palestine will not change."

Charges filed against students arrested in rally

By BILL MILLER
UD Staff

Misdemeanor charges have been filed against four of the five students arrested this weekend in an impromptu University Avenue rally.

Although one student was arrested for allegedly throwing a rock at a police officer — an act police said could draw a felony complaint — it is likely no charges will be filed, Lubbock Police Information Officer Bill Morgan said.

John Edward Condon, 19, of Richardson, was arraigned late Monday on a complaint charging obstruction of a roadway, a Class B misdemeanor.

Arraigned on a complaint charging disorderly conduct by offensive gesture, a Class C misdemeanor, was 19-year-old Evan Dale Lowery.

The other two students — Gregory Paul Wood, 19, of Lubbock and Scott W. Reynolds, 18, of Conroe — were arraigned on complaints charging them with public intoxication, a Class C misdemeanor.

Some of the students arrested said they received harsh treatment when "We had contingency plans to govern any action which might have occurred. We have to be prepared."

—Bill Morgan, Lubbock Police Information Officer

they were taken into custody.

The student who police said threw a rock complained he was abused by the members of the Special Weapons and Tactical (SWAT) team members who arrested him.

"The SWAT team was called in as a precaution against any violence which might or might not occur," Morgan said Monday.

"I offered no resistance," the student said, "and all of a sudden the officers threw me to the ground, put handcuffs on me and threw me into a bus, where I waited to be taken downtown."

Sgt. Dean P. Summerlin of the SWAT division would not comment on the amount of force SWAT team members used on students.

In response to the student's claim, Morgan said there are extreme times when the action of Tech students necessitates police action.

"What students must realize is that all the people involved are not necessarily Tech students, some are in junior high and high school, and those students are just out to raise hell," Morgan said.

Morgan said the SWAT team was needed to disperse the crowd and protect the community.

"We had contingency plans to govern any action which might occur," Morgan said. "We have to be prepared."

Another of the students said his arrest was not justified.

According to police reports, the student was told to get out of the street along with approximately 300 others. The student and a friend allegedly raised their arms to wave other students back into University Avenue, thus blocking traffic, the reports state.

The student said he was on the side of the street where there was a lot of mud and he slipped back into the street.

SWAT team members, armed with nightsticks and wearing riot gear, arrested him.

Students were mainly interested in "raising hell and getting ready for the game," another student said of Friday night's activities.

The student said his friends got out of a pickup truck near Varsity Bookstore when an officer told him to keep moving along and not walk on University Avenue or he would "bust me."

At least 100 persons were making obscene gestures at police, said a student who complained he was singled out.

One of those arrested Saturday morning said he had never had any previous trouble with the police.

"I've never had a traffic ticket and never been arrested," the student said.

Forum audience supports pass-fail option

By DARIA DOSS
UD Reporter

A suggested revision of the Faculty Senate pass-fail proposal highlighted a University Forum debate Tuesday on possible reductions of pass-fail privileges at Tech.

The motion said that the pass-fail option should be revoked for courses required for distribution in a student's degree plan.

Fourteen audience members voted for the motion and 24 voted against at the conclusion of the forum.

Rae L. Harris, a College of Arts and Sciences representative to the Faculty Senate, spoke in favor of the motion. He said the pass-fail option was designed to encourage students to experiment with advanced electives and with courses of interest to them.

"Students are presently using pass-fail for the wrong reasons. They're waiting for their first exam and then, if they don't do well, they declare pass-fail," he said.

A university is not a trade school. If students want just piano or theater, I suggest they go to a trade school, Harris said.

L. Davis Clements, a member of the Faculty Senate Undergraduate Programs Committee, agreed with Harris that the pass-fail option is being abused. He said, however, that a compromise proposal is needed instead of complete deletion of the option for general degree requirements.

The compromise proposal suggested by the Undergraduate Programs Committee would add further restrictions to the pass-fail option, but would not delete the option entirely.

Students would not be able to take English 131 or 132 pass-fail or more than three hours of history or political science pass-fail under the compromise proposal.

"The Faculty Senate proposal takes out all pass-fail options. I, as a student advisor, would like to be able to give students some extra protection," Clements said.

Inez Russell, editor of The University Daily, also supported the motion to delete the pass-fail option. She agreed with Harris that a university is not a trade school.

"Each academic specialty has something to offer. A philosopher and a political scientist look at life in a different way," she said.

Russell said certain classes should never be taken pass-fail.

"English is too important a subject to be taken pass-fail. It is the basis of our society. . . . and surely, since students vote, political science shouldn't be taken pass-fail."

Mark Henderson, president of the Student Association, spoke against the motion.

He said the problem lies in classes where the teachers are tenured and teach way above the students heads.

"Students have to fight to make a good grade in these classes," he said.

"Let's not cure the disease — let's kill the patient. This is what the Faculty Senate wants to do by killing the pass-fail option," Henderson said.

Four students and one professor gave their opinions on the motion after the introductory speeches.

Dennis Garza, a junior political science major, spoke against the motion. He said that making a school rigid does not necessarily give it quality.

"A college that can allow a student to experiment is a good one. In order to be a good college it needs flexibility," Garza said.

In the closing comments, Harris said a compromise is needed.

Clements said, "Anything that you learn is important to you sometimes in life, but the correlation between grades and knowledge is almost none."

Russell said, "The pass-fail option teaches that you can do less and get by. In life you have to balance all demands with the time that you have."

Henderson said, "If you want to take pass-fail away, fine, but first give us quality instruction in these courses."

Student opposes composition of Techsan organization

Dennis Garza

I would like to express my dissatisfaction with the manner in which the story on the Student Senate meeting was written (Oct. 2). The article was poorly written, confusing and very biased.

The article dealt with Senate action on the creation of a new SA public relations and recruitment group called the Techsans. The article implied that there was "squabbling" by one senator in opposition to the Techsans bill. The entire article was devoted to the sponsors of the bill promoting it and explaining why one haggler was misinformed and wrong.

I attended the Senate meeting and can say with great conviction that the way "Techsans" is being formed and selected is a disservice to the student body at Tech.

The article quoted the President of the Senate and its sponsors saying that the purpose of Techsans is not to represent the student body but "to select people who have proven themselves capable of promoting Tech."

I beg two questions. First, who have these people proven themselves to? Second, is the President of the Senate suggesting that an SA-sponsored group should not reflect the makeup of the student body?

If the President of the Senate with the advice of a few members of the Senate think they and only they know who is qualified to be a Techsan, I think they are hopelessly narrow-minded and egotistical.

Not only were there many extremely qualified persons from various groups left out of consideration for Techsan, but the whole idea of having a hand-selected, undemocratic, "honorary" group represent the student body in recruitment is repulsive.

It should be noted that the Director of New Student Relations, of whose office Techsans is to assist in recruiting, is opposed to this "honorary" concept of the group by its sponsors. It should be realized that the only effective method of student recruiting is through a group that is representative of the diverse backgrounds and interests present in our student body.

All students should be included!

Senator Eloy Gaitan was not the only senator to see the faults with this callous procedure and attempt to stop the "railroading" of this bill through the Senate.

Furthermore, it was erroneously reported that the bill was tabled when in actuality the bill to create Techsans passed. The vote of the actual 60 names of Techsans was tabled. The President of the Senate misled the Senators to believe that all debate on the names and selection of them should be kept away from debate on the bill.

This "railroading" tactic was used knowing that once the bill passed, the selection process could not be changed. All that could be done about Techsans then was just to bicker over the names and not the crux of the issue-selective representation.

The Senate meets Oct. 15 and will take up this issue once again. A two-thirds vote is now necessary to bring back consideration of this bill creating Techsans. I would hope that The University Daily sees it fit to print a clarifying story presenting both sides of the debate. I think after all the distortions and biases are removed by the U.D. the Senate will proceed to open up Techsans to those wishing to serve based on their qualifications and not their connections or who they know.

Law students should get back to books, study

Stan Smith

Donna Carroll

Three cheers seem to be in order, at least for the moment—one each for Mr. Byron Fullerton, the Tech Legal Counsel, and the Dean of Students. For a little while longer free and open scholarship is preserved for Ms. Beer and the Christian Legal Society.

The time is now when all good second-year law students (including Mr. Curtis) should come to the aid of good sense instead of maintaining the impoverished judicial facade of the humanists for whom the bells (of liberty) have tolled too long and cracked.

It is time for the University students to drop the pretense of supporting the modern and perverted interpretation of separation of Church and State. Every religion has an established body of law, and every government establishes law with respect to some religious view concerning the nature of man and society within the universe.

Separation of Church and State deals with the separation of authorities, not ideologies.

This principle, as understood by our forefathers (who wrote the First Amendment), was to prevent the State from establishing a mandatory or "acceptable" form of worship and to keep Archbishops from simultaneously holding seats in parliament.

Today, however, if those who called themselves Christians or Church members were to be opposed to murder and theft the legislation to effect such beliefs would be a violation of Church and State separation. Wouldn't this be absurd?

It is time for some law students to return to their studies; and if Church and State issues are their forte then let them check out the Texas Tech Law Review, Vol. 10, 1978 with the article "The Establishment of the Religion of Secular Humanism and its First Amendment Implications" by J. Whitehead and J. Conlan.

They might find out which religion is already in power.

Yes, three cheers for Ms. Beer, her friends, and their Bible studies, and three cheers for the Creator who endowed us with certain unalienable rights. Amen.

Smith and Carroll are former Tech students.

Reaching for the stars goal of organization

Alton Teague

On Saturday, Sept. 12, 1981, a new campus organization, Students for the Exploration and Development of Space, came into being. This club was founded first at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Princeton University in December of 1980.

Although presently in the formative stages, a great amount of student interest has surfaced. Those interested in getting involved in this wide-open frontier are encouraged to attend our meeting and-or join.

We can be contacted at: S. E. D. S. Texas Tech, 1001 University 205-B, Lubbock, Texas 79401 or (806) 762-5717.

According to a poll taken by Aviation Week and Space Technology, slightly over 60 percent of the people favor the space program.

Will Washington listen, and keep such roadblocks to private enterprise in space as the UN "Moon Treaty" from becoming law, or will they close the door to the stars?

The decision is up to you, the college students, the lawyers, doctors, engineers, corporate executives, tomorrow's leaders. We are crossing the threshold into a new frontier, a new beginning. We must stand up and step out, and not let the forces of ignorance prevent our emergence. Because if we do not, then the earth that nurtured us to maturity will also become our grave.

Teague is an engineering student at Tech.

Sadat death may bolster AWACS sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first congressional test of President Reagan's arms sale to Saudi Arabia was postponed Tuesday after the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, but there were signs the slaying could sway some opponents to the administration's side.

In the Senate, where the $8.5 billion package faced a formidable front of critics, Democrats and Republicans suggested the president may now be able to argue more persuasively that it is essential to bolster moderate regimes in the Middle East.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee, meanwhile, put off at least until today its scheduled vote on a resolution to veto the sale. The panel was still regarded virtually certain to recommend that action. The deal can be killed only if both houses disapprove it by Nov. 1.

But there were conflicting signals in the Senate. One of 19 Republican opponents immediately switched in favor of the sale of AWACS radar planes and jetfighter equipment, and other senators suggested the issue should be put off indefinitely for re-evaluation.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said, "I'm going to reverse my vote on AWACS and support the president. We have to have the safeguards this deployment makes."

Hatch was one of a dozen Republicans targeted by Reagan and his strategists for a heavy dose of presidential lobbying. The Senate GOP leadership estimates it would take that many switches from the ranks of the opposition and the uncommitted to forestall a veto.

'Budget-buster' bill trimmed by millions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House refused a move by Republican leaders Tuesday for deep cuts in an $87.3-billion appropriations bill that the Reagan administration deemed hundreds of millions over budget.

But Republicans hailed the apparent defeat as a strong sign that they could sustain a presidential veto of "budget-busting" bills.

The action was, in effect, the first test of support for President Reagan's new round of spending cuts.

The House agreed on a 383-30 vote to cut $74 million from the measure, but a Republican move to send the entire package back to a committee drawing board in light of a potential presidential veto failed 249-168.

The House then passed the measure on a voice vote, instead of the usual recorded vote on such matters.

After the vote, House Republican Whip Trent Lott of Mississippi said GOP leaders did not seek a recorded vote in light of the tally on the move to send the measure back to the committee.

"Our judgement call was that this was our best vote," Lott said.

He emphasized that "we have the votes, with room to spare, to sustain a veto."

One-third plus one vote is required to sus-tain a presidential veto.

Reagan's House allies argued that the bill for the department's of Labor, Education and Health and Human Services must be trimmed.

"This is the best of bills and the worst of bills," said GOP Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois. "On another day and another time" it would have received nearly unanimous support, he said.

But the bill "is excessive and the president surely will veto it," Michel said in a speech on the House floor.

Reagan vowed last week to veto any "budget-busting" bills Congress sends him.

"This bill is the safety net for the truly needy," said Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, a member of the House Budget Committee who offered the motion to send the bill back to committee. But "in the final analysis, it's $763 million over the budget resolution" Congress enacted in May.

However, the Republican unity that had been so strong on previous budget votes this year cracked during consideration of the bill.

Thirty-nine Republicans, mostly moderates from the Northeast and Midwest, voted against the motion to send the bill back to committee.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., assistant minority leader and a leading opponent of the sale, predicted there would be a delay in floor consideration.

Any postponement would require White House agreement to interrupt the timetable leading to the Nov. 1 deadline.

Before Sadat's death, the White House had written off chances for a favorable vote in the House and acknowledged that it faced an uphill battle in the Senate.

Republican enters lieutenant governor's race

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican George Strake entered the lieutenant governor's race Tuesday, setting up what could be an unprecedented battle of the millionaires between him and incumbent Democrat Bill Hobby.

"I'm going to mount a campaign unlike anyone has mounted for lieutenant governor. I don't need a poll to tell me I'm behind," he said, admitting his "name recognition" among voters might be low.

It took about an hour for him and Hobby to get into a political battle of words.

Strake, who resigned his secretary of state post Monday, said Hobby has been a bad leader.

"It is apparent to me that some people of this state haven't even seen their lieutenant governor. Some of them question his ability to lead," he said at a Capitol news conference.

Hobby has been lieutenant governor since 1973. "I believe that is long enough for anyone to stay in the second most important political office in this government," according to Strake.

The incumbent quickly put out a news release to welcome his challenger into the race and to list his own accomplishments.

"In this campaign I will focus on the things that I have accomplished in the last nine years," Hobby said. "These accomplishments have helped to make the government of the state of Texas a model for the rest of the nation."

Hobby, countering Strake's charges of poor leadership, said he helped shape the state's "sunset" law, installed zero-based budgeting, and designed legislation protecting the highway system against inflation.

Strake criticized Hobby for the lieutenant governor's role in the Killer Bee walkout during the 1979 Legislature. Thirteen senators boycotted the Senate, halting business. The lieutenant governor serves as president of the Senate.

"He let them get out of the Senate," Strake said, adding he would have tried to convince the boycotters that their "responsibility" was to remain in the Senate.

He also charged that Hobby's lack of leadership killed "certain bills" in the Senate during the recent session. He said he would identify those bills later in the campaign.

The Strake-Hobby race — neither man appears to have any opposition within their party — promises to be the most expensive lieutenant governor's race in Texas history. Hobby has had no serious opposition in his previous re-election attempts.

Strake, a 46-year-old Houston oil millionaire who has never held elected office, said he expects to spend $3 million in the race. Hobby, president of the Houston Post, also is a millionaire.

Strake labeled himself a "conservative" who believes in "sound fiscal management."

Salutatorians take note

Tech freshmen who were salutatorians in high school are eligible for a new scholarship sponsored by the Ex-Students Association. The award is granted to a student for a maximum of two semesters, $100 in the fall and $100 in the spring.

John Edwards, director of New Student Relations, said the scholarship is similar to that awarded high school valedictorians. He said most of those who are qualified for the scholarship apparently are not aware of it because applications have been few.

Those qualified for the salutatorian scholarship may come by the Office of New Student Relations in West Hall room 1-3, or may telephone 742-1480.

Bumped passengers awarded

CHICAGO (AP) — A retired judge and his wife complained that Delta wasn't ready when they were, and a jury awarded them $208,000 for being bumped from a flight — by far the largest award ever made to airline passengers denied their seats.

A Circuit Court jury on Monday agreed with former Illinois Supreme Court Justice Thomas Kluczynski and his wife, Melanie, that they suffered "humiliation, indignity and outrage" when they were told all seats were filled because of overbooking on their Delta Airlines flight to Florida on Feb. 19, 1976.

The proposal, in response to cancellation of the Maze prison hunger strike that had cost 10 lives, got a cautious response from the Irish Republican Army's legal political arm.

Anwar Sadat: 1918-1981

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Sept. 28, 1970 was a day of gloom in Egypt. It was the day Gamel Abdel Nasser died of a heart attack, leaving a void few thought could be filled.

Into the void stepped Anwar Sadat, a virtually unknown vice president, and Egypt changed direction.

While Nasser led the Arabs in wars ending in humiliation by Israel, Sadat led them in what he described as a "glorious Arab victory" in the 1973 Middle East War. At the risk of condemnation by many other Arab leaders, he became a peacemaker who stunned the world in November 1977 by visiting Israel.

The trip by the Egyptian president shattered Arab precedent.

Within three years after taking office, Sadat crushed one internal revolt against him, expelled 15,000 Soviet advisers and started turning Egypt's orientation from the Soviet Union to the United States.

He electrified the world in November 1977 when he declared he would go to the ends of the earth, "even to the Israeli Knesset (Parliament)" to discuss peace if it would save even one Egyptian soldier.

Less than two weeks later, Sadat was in Israel, stunning his own nation and horrifying most other Arab leaders. The visit culminated in the 1978 U.S.-mediated Camp David Accords that established peace between the two nations.

Sadat waged an off-again, on-again relationship with Col. Moammar Khadafy, leader of Libya, Egypt's western neighbor and one of Sadat's harshest critics as Egypt moved steadily toward peace.

In July 1977, Egypt and Libya clashed for five days along the border from the Mediterranean Sea south into the desert. The skirmishes, military and verbal, quickly subsided, but the rhetoric heated up from time to time.

In August 1976, Sadat won Parliament's unanimous nomination for another six-year term. He vowed to liberate all Arab lands taken by the Israelis in the 1967 Middle East War and to establish a "Palestinian entity."

Israel demanded most of Sadat's attention, even as he feuded with or befriended Khadafy, as he moved to strengthen economic and political ties with Sudan, Egypt's southern neighbor, and as he accepted financial aid from oil-rich Saudi Arabia.

After the 1973 Middle East war broke out, Sadat was hailed as a hero. In October of that year, he sent his troops storming across the Suez Canal in an operation that caught the Israelis by surprise.

While Sadat was waging war and questing for peace, he turned his country's economy from Nasser's socialist to an ever-widening open-door policy in search of Western money and products.

In 1974, he launched a policy of economic liberalization which led to invitations to European and U.S. companies to do business in Egypt. Even Coca-Cola and the Ford Motor Co., both with thriving operations in Israel, were among firms invited to do business in Egypt.

Despite these moves, Egypt was still plagued with a desperately poor economy. In a nation of 38 million people, with one-fourth concentrated in the teeming capital of Cairo and the rest spread out on narrow strips of fertile land along the Nile, per capita income was only $250 a year in contrast to more than $8,000 at the time in the United States.

A government attempt to roll back subsidies on basic commodities culminated in food riots in January 1977 that left more than 800 people killed or wounded.

Subsidies which heavily burdened the deficit-ridden economy were restored after the riots although the government soon was making plans to eliminate them.

Sadat held a number of jobs under Nasser, including secretary-general of the Islamic Congress, editor of the government daily Al Gomhouria and president of the National Assembly.

As head of the assembly, he traveled to the Soviet Union and debated Arab socialism with Nikita S. Khrushchev. In 1966, he went to the United States, toured Congress, met President Lyndon B. Johnson and visited Disneyland.

Sadat was not as visible as some other free officers around Nasser who eventually fell by the wayside. But he endured and above all, he was loyal. Finally, less than 10 months before he died, Nasser named him vice president.

Sadat, third president of Egypt, was born Christmas Day in 1918 in the poor Nile Delta village of Mit Abu Al-Kom, so remote the nearest bus route was a mile away. His father was a civilian clerk in the army; his mother was Sudanese.

His family later moved to Cairo and Sadat entered the military academy after it started admitting lower-class youths, graduating in 1938. One of his classmates was Nasser. During World War II, they became friends and often talked about ridding the country of the British and the corrupt King Farouk.

After the Allied victory, Sadat was jailed twice for involvement in assassination plots against royalist politicians but was acquitted both times. Released from jail in 1948, he drove a truck and worked as a journalist for awhile.

Sadat was well-educated and taught himself English, German and Persian. A dapper man, he leaned to British-tailored suits and smoking jackets. His dazzling smile came across well on television, where he has used his rural roots to build a "man of the people" image.

Many say his subtle elegance was due to his half-English second wife, Gehan, by whom he had three daughters and a son. Under Islamic law, Sadat still was legally married to his first wife, who lived in the delta. He had three daughters by her, all of whom married army officers.

Egypt's loss 'terrible'

By SUSAN CORBETT
UD Reporter

Replacing a leader like Egyptian president Anwar Sadat will be no easy endeavor, two Tech engineering professors from Egypt said Tuesday.

Mohamed Youssef Beshir, a visiting industrial engineering professor, and M. M. Ayoub, a mechanical engineering professor, said Egypt's loss of Sadat is terrible at this time.

Ayoub left Egypt in 1953, and said he has only been back to visit.

Beshir said he and his wife have lived in Egypt all their lives. They are here to extend their educations and will return to Egypt in about two years.

"Egypt will be in deep trouble if it cannot find another leader with Sadat's control. Now other foreign countries could make serious trouble for Egypt. If Egypt can find a replacement with that control, there will be no problem," Beshir said.

"Sadat was a good, popular leader. The people were satisfied with him because he took suggestions from them," Beshir said.

"It was sad to hear that he was killed. He was the only friend we had. His death is a step backwards," Ayoub said.

"Sadat was a different type of leader. He did things others would not do. Sadat made a lot of changes. Now, a vacuum exists until someone takes over," Ayoub said.

Both men expressed cautious optimism when talking about Egyptian vice president Hosni Mubarak, the man who is likely to become Egypt's next permanent president.

"We need someone to continue leading the country the way he did. I understand the vice president will try to lead the country internally and externally in the same manner Sadat did. We'll just have to wait and see," Ayoub said.

"I hope the vice president will be a good leader and attempt to succeed as Sadat did in foreign policy. I do not know if he could be as great a leader as Sadat. In the future, he could prove to be the same," Beshir said.

Beshir and Ayoub said Mubarak may surprise everyone in the same manner Sadat did.

"We didn't expect Sadat to be such a great leader when he first was president. It will take time to rebuild and gain that control of the country and the people's opinions," Beshir said.

The men said Sadat was still a popular man in his country.

"The people heartily supported Sadat. He had some opposition, but I'm too far away from Egypt now to really see it," Ayoub said.

Ayoub said when he left Egypt to get an education conditions in the country were so bad that he believed he could not go back.

"We all felt unable to return and live there. If Sadat had not taken control of the country, I would not be able to go back and visit as I wish. The intellectual community is pleased with Sadat's progress even though it did not change things so significantly," he said.

"I was shocked to hear the news," Beshir said.

Sadat hailed as man of courage

By The Associated Press

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat was mourned Tuesday across the United States and around the world, by leaders and common folk, by Arabs and Jews, as a man of courage, honor and peace.

Perhaps the strongest testament to Sadat's words and actions after his assassination were his enemies' cheers and the immediate speculation about how his death might affect tenuous peace in the Middle East.

"America has lost a close friend, the world has lost a great statesman and mankind has lost a champion of peace," President Reagan said in Washington. "In a world filled with hatred, he was man of hope."

Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel said he had lost "not only a partner in the peace process, but also a friend," and other moderate leaders in the Middle East joined Western leaders in expressions of mourning.

"We hope the peace process, despite the cruel act of his enemies, will continue as we know President Sadat would have wished with all his heart," Begin said.

Western European nations joined in the lament, characterized by French President Francois Mitterand's statement, "The world has lost one of the best among us."

Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, however, sang and passed out candy at the news of Sadat's death. Radio Moscow blamed the shooting on Egyptian "discontent" with Sadat's cooperation with the United States and Israel, and Col. Moammar Khadafy's national Libyan radio exulted: "Every tyrant has an end."

In the United States, Meir Jolovitz, chairman of the Jewish Defense League, called Sadat a Nazi and PLO sympathizer and said, "We certainly don't mourn the death of Anwar Sadat."

M.T. Mehdi, an Iraqi-American who said his American-Arab Relations Committee has 45,000 members, called Sadat "the second shah in the Middle East," and predicted his death would clear the way for a Palestinian state and a federation of Arab nations.

But in Plains, Ga., former President Jimmy Carter described Sadat as "a man of great courage" and "a man of destiny."

Carter, who engineered the Camp David accords between Sadat and Begin in quest of peace in the Middle East, said their final talks revealed "no sign of fear" in Sadat and said the slain Egyptian leader was "admirable in every possible way."

"A pillar of peace in the world has been shattered," former President Richard Nixon said from his home in Saddle River, N.J. "Sadat was the embodiment of honor and loyalty in adversity."

Henry Seigman, head of the American Jewish Congress, called Sadat "a courageous leader and world statesman whose efforts for peace in the Middle East deserve the gratitude of people and nations everywhere."

Peace process:

What next?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Egyptian and Israeli ambassadors predicted Tuesday the Camp David peace process will survive the assassination of Anwar Sadat.

But U.S. and diplomatic sources agreed the death of the Egyptian leader greatly complicates efforts to devise a lasting Arab-Israeli peace.

Sadat staked his career and his life on the Camp David accord and on good relations with the United States. His death raised immediate questions whether his successors could, or would, follow that path.

Though Sadat's successor, vice president Hosni Mubarak, is considered a staunch friend of the United States, it simply isn't known whether his government will be strong enough to follow Sadat's policies — unpopular among Egypt's Arab neighbors and among Sadat's domestic opponents.

"We are very, very worried," said an Israeli source here who didn't want to be identified. "It's a very severe realization how shaky the situation in Egypt is, and how shaky the peace is."

There was no mistaking Sadat's influence in American efforts to establish a firm position in the Middle East.

"Sadat has been the linchpin of our policy," said a State Department official. "This is a very serious blow."

While Sadat's fate was still in doubt, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger said of him, "If there is an indispensable man in the diplomatic process, it is Sadat."

Later Kissinger said: "The Camp David process was based on fundamental realities. President Sadat recognized these realities, but he didn't invent them, and therefore these realities still exist for us to build on. I think it would be a terrible mistake for America now to give way to despair, to think that we cannot go forward."

Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghorbal said his country will continue to pursue peace in the Middle East and close ties with the United States.

"Cairo has confirmed that it continues its policies as charted by President Sadat and overwhelmingly supported by the Egyptian people," Ghorbal told reporters outside his embassy here.

"The peace process under Camp David will remain the . . . policy of the country. A close relationship with the United States will remain a cornerstone of Egyptian policy."

As the Egyptian ambassador faced reporters, the embassy flag was lowered to half-staff.

Israeli Ambassador Ephraim Evron said his government was "very much relieved" to hear that the surviving Egyptian leadership feels bound by the peace treaty.

He said of Mubarak: "He was a party to the whole negotiations. He was at President Sadat's side throughout this period. He was obviously was in agreement with what Sadat did." He told ABC News, "I don't think there's any doubt he will follow in President Sadat's footsteps."

Though Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin signed the historic Camp David peace accord in 1978, the final phase of the process, giving autonomy to the 1.2 million Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, has remained elusive. Sadat and Begin only recently agreed on new negotiations, which opened Sept. 23 in Cairo.

Once there is an agreement on autonomy, that would be followed by elections among the Palestinians for a self-governing authority. That would be followed by a five-year transition period after which a final resolution would be made on the future of the Palestinians.

But State Department officials were encouraged at word that Sadat's successor will be Mubarak, who was in Washington just last week to confer with President Reagan.

There was agreement Tuesday among diplomatic observers that Sadat's death underscores the instability in the Middle East and the potential fragility of a policy based on one person's leadership and influence, as U.S. policy was on Sadat's.

Stansfield Turner, a former Central Intelligence Agency director, expressed fears that Sadat's death will result in "a field day for the Soviet Union."

He said the Soviets will use Sadat's fate as evidence of what can happen to people who make friends with the United States.

Sadat was a strong supporter of the Reagan administration's strategic consensus for defending the Middle East against Soviet and Soviet-backed aggression.

U.S. deployment forces readied in Mideast area

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elements of the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force and U.S. warships in the Mediterranean and Middle East "have been placed on increased readiness" in the wake of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's assassination, the Reagan administration announced.

The statement was released by the Pentagon and officials there, speaking anonymously, indicated the actions are intended as a warning to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy or anybody else who might be tempted to move against Egypt and take advantage of any instability there.

On Capitol Hill, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was quoted as saying that Libya may have known in advance of the assassination.

"We have full confidence in the Egyptian transition process," the statement said.

The Pentagon said it "has taken some prudent steps. Ships in the area as well as some elements of the Rapid Deployment Joint Task Force have been placed on increased readiness. No unusual troop movements are taking place in the United States."

The crisis finds an unusually large force of U.S. Marines in the Mediterranean in two amphibious units totalling some 4,000 men, aboard eight ships.

The only U.S. aircraft carrier now in the Mediterranean is the nuclear-powered Nimitz, which has been making a port call in Venice, Italy.

Tech ROTC seeing increase in enrollments, scholarships

By SUSAN CORBETT
UD Reporter

Enrollment figures in Tech Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) programs continue to increase along with government scholarships available to those students, a Tech ROTC official said.

"Thirty Army ROTC students are contracted this semester for a two-year program beginning in their junior year at Tech. We had only 13 such students in 1976," U.S. Army Capt. Henry Kinnison said.

Tech has not had any difficulty meeting the reserve requirement of 17 contracted students each semester, nor has the university been short of scholarships to offer students, Kinnison said.

"Even more scholarships will soon be available for all facets of military programs," he said. "Over the summer, we awarded six new scholarships that pay for tuition and class necessities and still give the students $100 a month."

"Simultaneous membership programs are now available to students across the country. Students were not allowed to be in the National Guard Reserve and ROTC at the same time. Now they can do both. It's a good program for the person who knows what he wants," Kinnison said.

He said the need for more officers is great, particularly those with degrees in science and engineering.

Air Force ROTC programs have the same need for students majoring in technical fields, U.S. Air Force Capt. Adrienne Campbell said.

"Navigators and engineers have the greatest chance of getting a scholarship. Math and technical majors can get three- and two-year scholarships. The good students are never turned down," Campbell said.

"There are no scholarships for pilots, except maybe for one or two seniors. Everybody wants to be a pilot," Campbell said.

Campbell said the number of commissioned seniors each year exceeds the reserve requirement of 16 students by 11 to 14 seniors. She said recruitment has not been a problem in recent years.

Both captains agreed students are unconcerned with old anti-military prejudices against the armed forces prevalent during the Vietnam War.

"There was no reason why a student wanted to come into the military in 1972 unless they wanted to become an officer all along. This new generation of students has forgotten the resentment of the war," Kinnison said.

"Now, the Soviet threat is looked upon as substantial. Some would rather be officers through ROTC than be privates through an imminent draft," he said.

What a great place to start

Tech ROTC members participate in a rifle exercise. ROTC officials report an increase in both the number of students contracted and the number of government scholarships available. One official says the increase could be due to a decline in student resentment toward the Vietnam War. He says the increase also may be due to the fact that students like the idea of being officers now rather than being drafted as privates later.

students who are discovering the ROTC program at Tech. Officials report an increase in enrollments and scholarships available.

Scientists announce new cancer-fighting approach

WASHINGTON (AP) — A quick-spreading cancer that frequently leads to limb amputation can be treated with a new approach that doubles the survival rate while sparing many arms and legs, government scientists said.

Researchers at the National Cancer Institute said the greatly improved results are due to aggressive therapy combining surgery to remove the tumor with radiation and chemotherapy.

Dr. Steven A. Rosenberg, chief of the institute's surgery branch, said two studies with a total of 107 patients show that the combined therapy "can produce substantial improvement in patient outcome."

In the studies, the disease-free, three-year survival rates rose to 91 percent compared with about 40 percent for patients getting conventional therapy, usually surgery alone.

The three-year results are particularly encouraging, he said, because, historically, 80 percent of those who suffered a recurrence did so within the first two years.

Rosenberg told a meeting of institute scientific advisers that the chemotherapy, using high doses of three anti-cancer drugs, was the key to the dramatic results.

This type of cancer, which affects muscle, fat, nerve and connective tissue around bone, spreads from the original site to the lungs, and most deaths are associated with later lung cancer, he said.

"A major finding of the studies is that aggressive use of chemotherapy immediately after surgery can lead to marked improvement in freedom from disease recurrence, and possibly cure these patients," Rosenberg said.

"The chemotherapy was given even though there was no clinical evidence of disease spread at that time," he added.

Rosenberg said limb sparing was possible with about 75 percent of patients without additional risk of disease recurrence. This means substantially improved quality of life as well as longer survival with the new approach, he said.

The surgeon noted at a later briefing that amputation still is necessary in some cases, particularly when the cancer spreads to the bone. But the studies show that using aggressive chemotherapy after amputation also greatly improves survival, he added.

About 5,000 new cases of soft tissue sarcoma occur each year in the U.S., and about 3,000 of them are in the limbs. These highly malignant tumors mostly affect relatively young people.

Postal Service to begin selling 20-cent 'C' stamp

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service said Tuesday it will put a 20-cent "C" stamp on sale Oct. 13 to meet the demand created by the increase in first-class postage that will take effect Nov. 1.

Like the "A" and the "B" stamps that preceded it, the "C" stamp was printed to meet the contingency of a postal rate rise.

It will be phased out when large quantities of regular 20-cent stamp issues are available.

A "C" embossed stamped envelope costing 24 cents and a "nondenominated" postal card costing 13 cents also will be issued.

The "C" stamp has a brown background.

South Plains Maid of Cotton pageant to decide national entry

By BROOKS BROWN
UD Entertainment Writer

Twenty-two area women are set to compete for the honor of being the 1982 South Plains Miss Maid of Cotton.

The 1982 pageant will begin at 9 p.m. Friday in the Lubbock Civic Center Banquet Hall.

The winner of the pageant will receive a $500 scholarship and an all-cotton wardrobe valued at approximately $2,000, depending on the winner's needs, secretary of the pageant, Bob Etheredge, said.

The winner will travel to Memphis, Tenn. in late December, to compete in the 43rd Annual National Miss Maid of Cotton Pageant, he said.

First and second runner-ups will each receive a $100 gift certificate.

The South Plains became in-involved in the pageant in the early 1950's, Etheredge said.

Since that time, this area has had two national winners. In 1966, Nancy Bernard became the National Miss Maid of Cotton and in 1972, Debbie Wright won the event.

The national pageant began in 1939, Etheredge said. Texas has had 10 winners since its inception.

Nineteen Tech women are participating in this year's pageant. Of the remaining three contestants, two attend South Plains College and the other is a Tech graduate, Etheredge said.

All the contestants must go through a series of eight judging sessions, including video taping, interview, swimsuit and evening gown competitions.

Activities will begin with a noon luncheon on Thursday in the Civic Center Banquet Hall.

The contestants will be formally presented to the judges as part of the luncheon activities. Tickets for the luncheon are $7.50.

Thursday afternoon the contestants will be interviewed by the judges. They will then be videotaped, which will conclude the day's events.

Friday morning the judges will view the tapes before meeting the contestants for the swimsuit competition.

The judges will meet with all the contestants for a private luncheon at noon. The judges will talk with each entrant on a one-to-one basis.

At 6:30 p.m., the formal and final judging begins. A reception will be in the Civic Center Banquet Hall.

At 8 p.m. judges begin their final tallies before crowning the 1982 South Plains Miss Maid of Cotton at 9 p.m.

The Maid of Cotton Ball will be held from 9:30 p.m. until midnight. Music will be provided by The Betty Tolley Combo.

Tickets for the evening's activities are $12.50.

Two men and one woman will be responsible for choosing next year's South Plains Maid of Cotton.

Judging chores belong to the trio of Morgan Fayssoux from Greenville, S.C., Jack Whetstone from Dallas and Connie Gurich from Fort Worth.

Judging will be on the point system. The contestant accumulating the most points will be declared the winner.

For further information contact the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce at 763-4666.

KSEL-FM trying format, image change

By BECKY HOLMES
UD Staff Writer

Radio station KSEL-FM, in an attempt to attract a mature audience, is in the process of changing its format.

"The new super rock 93" is rock and roll designed for the mature listener, KSEL program director Steve Coggins said.

"We're changing our image," Coggins said. "We felt like we were playing too much disco and black music, so we're now renovating our sound to reach the mature listener in the 18- to 34-year-old age category."

KSEL's sound renovation springs from a plan on the drawing board for the past two years, Coggins said.

Playing rock and roll music for the mature individual doesn't mean playing soft rock. "It also doesn't mean playing hard 'chain saw' rock," Coggins said.

"It means playing familiar names and artists," Coggins said. "Names like Fleetwood Mac, Supertramp, Christopher Cross, REO Speedwagon and a lot of Styx.

It also means playing album cuts, something we've been doing since 1977."

KSEL-FM is trying to shy away from "bubble gum" rock and ultra soul.

"However, music like the Commodores is really timeless, not belonging to any one period or group," Coggins said. "We'll always play that kind of music."

KSEL also broadcasts on AM - 95 on the dial. The music played on the AM station is aimed more toward a mass appeal adult audience.

"Sometimes for the 25- to 34-year-old age group, we'll go back to music from the 60's," Coggins said. "We'll play artists like the Zombies and the Beatles, music that was generally popular in that particular rock and roll period."

The disc jockey team of Charlie and Harrigan was transferred from their morning show on KSEL-FM to mornings on the AM station. This change stems from radio psychology that suggests that all people want to hear in the morning is music, Coggins said.

"We thought Charlie and Harrigan were too much in the mornings for FM," Coggins said. "In the morning, people don't want high energy personality profiles. What they want is good music and to feel good listening to it."

KSEL-FM is striving to let the music speak more and the DJs less, Coggins said.

Coggins is on the air in the morning from 6 to 10 a.m. From 3 to 7 p.m., DJ Stan Castles spins records for KSEL-FM. The rest of the time an automation system takes over.

Slim willing to let hefty album sales do his talking

By PAT BARTON
UD Entertainment Editor

The TV ads for his album just seem too corny, the claims too fantastic and the singer too out of touch for the Slim Whitman saga to be true.

His slick-back hair, paper-thin mustache and ever-present rhinestone-studded suit seem like they flew out of a time warp and landed on his body. Maybe that's why millions of people tend to write Slim off as a musical joke.

But there's something else millions of people tend to do — buy Slim Whitman albums — and they're the only ones who really count Slim said in an interview last Thursday.

"It seems to me that it's very much a minority of people who poke fun," Slim said. "When the people buy two million albums there must not be a lot making fun."

Slim said he can recall a time when he was doing a concert in Cleveland and a gang of kids showed up with a notion that they would aim a few verbal volleys at Slim for kicks.

"But after the show I was driving away and all these kids were chasing along behind the car," Slim said. "I told the driver to stop the car, and I rolled down the window. Those kids who had showed up to make trouble told me they had enjoyed the show and just wanted to shake my hand and let me know."

"I think most of those who want to make fun of me are more TV personalities and rock radio stations than the people," Slim said. "They like to 'say what a cornball' or 'he's no good,' and yet I'm still selling plenty of records."

Slim was interviewed after his South Plains Fair concert. When he finished his show about 20 fans showed up outside Slim's trailer to shake hands or request an autograph.

It was extremely interesting and significant to see the cross-section of admirers who came to meet Slim. They were older folks who still remember Slim's heyday in the early to mid 50s and teens who may be the thrust behind Slim's present success.

His career has spanned 33 years, innumerable countries and a bona fide total of more than 60 million records sold. Once his career started, it took off rapidly, Slim said.

"I started in 1948. I was working in a shipyard in Tampa, Fla., and when the shipyard shut down, some of the guys who worked there and me decided to form a band," Slim said. "They said 'you be the singer,' so that's how I got to be a singer."

Slim said it all started out as fun, but one thing led to another and soon after he started he got a big break in Nashville.

"I was on record eight months after I started," Slim said. "I was very surprised. I never expected anything to happen that quick."

Slim said his distinctive singing style developed after he started singing Eddie Arnold's "Cattle Call." He said he reworked the song to accommodate his own vocal ability and fledgling style.

"Now when I do a song I try to learn it, then block out the original version," Slim said. "Then I can work it into my own style."

During his Lubbock concert Slim's style did a belly-flop with the miniature Fair Park Coliseum audience. The vast majority of his songs rolled over and died by the time he had half finished them.

Slim seems distracted and almost disinterested on stage. He appeared content to sacrifice pacing and showmanship for a chance to demonstrate his wide vocal range.

Unfortunately Slim's voice wavered often, and he seemed to forget that if you want people to hear you, you've got to sing into the microphone.

Slim said despite his phenomenal popularity in England and relative obscurity in America, the trend is not really indicative of his career's course.

"A lot of people now don't know this, but I was big over here first," Slim said. "I had two million-sellers here before England took over. They really capitalized on the hits because while they were country music hits in America, the English made them pop music hits."

Slim said the notion he is mainly an American artist who fled to England because he had no audience is not entirely true.

"People have bought the same records over here as they've bought in England," Slim said. "The audiences are basically the same in both places. Overall, I've sold as many records in America as I've sold in England, which amazes some people. I guess England has just held onto them longer than the U.S."

Slim said that despite the fact both his act and his appearance are somewhat dated by most musical standards, he isn't worried about experiencing a considerable loss of his audience as country music progresses and passes him by.

"My records are always selling somewhere. I've proved it again with this album after going through a 33-year dry spell in America," Slim said. "It keeps going in

Looking up

Things are really looking up for 33-year country music veteran Slim Whitman. Whitman's album "All My Best" has sold more than 2 million copies since the now famous TV commercials plugging it began nearly two years ago. In his elongated career Whitman has recorded 74 albums and seen his global record sales top the 63 million mark.

phases. I wouldn't be surprised if there is another lull coming.

"But there's always a market. People like to reminisce and that's basically what my music is about," Slim said. "I sing the love song, and the love song will always be around. My songs still have impact. A fella by the name of Gene Autry still sells a few records, so..."

Whether you like Slim, or whether his voice hits your ears like a nail dragging across a chalkboard, you've got to admit he possesses a distinctive vocal sound.

Although swooping back and forth between notes puts a strain on a singer's voice, Slim said he has never had any problems keeping his voice in shape.

"I don't really do anything special to take care of my voice," Slim said. "I found out years ago the best thing for your voice is to respect it."

"If your voice gets tired, don't sing — and you've got to learn to pace yourself, and that's especially tough on long tours," Slim said. "If your voice is tired and you come to a tough note, you've got to go around it. I've never had a real problem, and I believe if your voice is naturally good, it will be good always."

Slim said his current American rebirth came about as a result of a hunch a New York distributing company had about releasing a Slim

Whitman album.

"They guessed that people wanted to hear about old times, which is what I sung about," Slim said. "I was surprised it went over so big — very surprised."

Although an old saying goes, "familiarity breeds contempt," Slim said he feels the heavy bombardment of TV ads for his album has been the major reason for his recent success.

"It's really funny. People have seen so much of me that they feel like they know me," Slim said. "It's really a compliment to me that they'll flock to a guy who's been around for so long."

It may sound like misguided advertising hype, but Slim said he really has sold more albums in England than Elvis or The Beatles and won numerous musical awards.

"I missed out on England's 'Entertainer of the Year' award in '81, but I won it in '74, '79 and '80," Slim said. "I've also had 19 gold records and two platinum."

Still, there was a time about three years ago when retiring from the music business seemed a real possibility, Slim said.

"Everybody thinks about quitting, and my wife and I actually talked about it a few years back, but now I'm back in business again," Slim said. "Records are the life material of an artist. As long as you can make a record, you've got a chance."

"I want to keep on singing as long as I can do my job well. When I can't, I'll quit and go fishing."

Spikers play Japanese

By SID HILL
UD Sports Writer

The Tech volleyball team of coach Janice Hudson plays the Japanese Junior National Team in a best-of-five exhibition match at 8 p.m. today in the Coliseum.

The Japanese will play Tech and then will travel to take on the University of Texas at El Paso. UTEP and Tech will be the only Texas teams the Japanese will play on this tour.

The contest tonight will be the first time an international volleyball team has toured this part of the state. The tour was made possible by the U.S. Collegiate Sports Council and the Japanese University Sports Board.

The match will begin at 7:30 with opening ceremonies and will include the presentation of U.S. and Japanese flags, the playing of the Japanese and American national anthems and the introduction of coaches, players and members of the visiting delegation.

Hudson said the Japanese team is excellent from all reports that she had received.

"The Japanese team is a quality squad. They are the Japanese junior varsity Olympic team," Hudson said.

The visiting team is composed of students and women who work in various professions. They range in age from 16 to 20. The Japanese volleyball players will represent their country in the 1984 Summer Olympics.

"The Japanese play a much faster brand of volleyball. The speed at which they play is much faster than American teams. They play a more disciplined type of game," Hudson said.

The volleyball coach said her squad would gain two major benefits from playing the exhibition game with the Japanese team.

"It's very important for our team at this time to get exposure to excellent volleyball — the type the Japanese play. Also we're going to try and approach the contest with the idea it's going to be an excellent learning experience for our team," Hudson said.

The Japanese introduced volleyball to the Summer Olympics in 1964 and have become famous for their expertise and finesse, Hudson said.

Hudson said that although the Japanese are neither physically big nor strong, they are a dominating international power.

"Tonight's starting lineup for the Japanese illustrates their lack of height. They have two players who are 5'9½, and those are the tallest players on their team," Hudson said.

Tech will start two girls who are 6'1" — freshmen Cynthia Hardaway and Tracey Buckner, both middle blockers.

"This team is a team of excellent caliber. They are making this tour in training for the 1984 Olympics. This is the junior team, but if there is an opening for a Japanese Olympic team, they will step in," Hudson said.

She said the Japanese introduced a number of skills to volleyball such as the fast attack in the middle, the overhand floater serve and the dive and roll return. Hudson said her team wasn't approaching the game with the idea of winning or losing, but with the idea to learn and to observe the Japanese style of play.

"Our players are entering the game wanting to learn something from their offensive and defensive styles of play. If we see one little thing they do that might help us, it will be worth playing them," Hudson said.

Hudson said Tech being picked to play the Japanese team was an honor.

"Glen Davis, head of the Collegiate Sports Council, called me last year and asked if we'd be interested in playing the team from Japan. I told him we were very interested in playing the team," Hudson said.

Hudson said that after the Japanese play Tech and UTEP, they will continue to tour the South traveling to New Mexico and California.

Currently, along with the Japanese team, several other international squads are touring the United States, Hudson said. She said other teams include squads from Brazil, Canada and South Korea.

Lineup change paces Raiders

By SID HILL
UD Sports Writer

Momentum.

The Tech volleyball team should possess that quality tonight against the Japanese Junior National team after the Raiders' three-game sweep of Abilene Christian Tuesday in the Coliseum.

The Raiders swept the Wildcats in three straight contests, 15-7, 15-5 and 15-5. After the game, the Raiders said what the victory would mean for them against the Japanese.

"The new lineup we started tonight gave us more flexibility because the younger players are dispersed among the veterans. We started this season with the idea that we would just keep building and building throughout the year, and I think the win (Tuesday) is just a step in our progress as a team," junior Christa White said.

White and teammate Cynthia Hardaway, middle blockers for most of the season, were moved to outside hitter positions along with senior Carolyn Tubbs.

Junior Joanne Cooper, who has not started a match this season, started the match Tuesday as a setter-hitter.

"Believe me it felt great to start against Abilene Christian tonight, and I think our victory tonight will get us ready for the game against the Japanese," Cooper said.

Tech, which now owns a 13-16 season record, set the scene for the ACU match in the first game of the best-of-five series. The Raiders jumped out to a 9-0 lead in the contest led by the serving and hitting of Tubbs, Irene Solano and White.

Junior Teresa Stafford, outside hitter, served an ace when the Wildcats hit the ball under the net to score the Raiders' 15th point to win the first game.

"I was pleased with our blocking and aggressive net play. I think the change we made in our lineup was effective, several individuals had nice effort," Tech head coach Hudson said.

"Mentally this win was what we needed," Hudson said.

"This win comes at a very good time for our team. Each time a team wins, it gains confidence.

"We still are somewhat sluggish on defense in spurts. Our most glaring error is that the girls still have a tendency to stand around."

She said, "Of course we'll have to speed up our game tomorrow night against the Japanese because they play about 50 times faster."

Interference

Aggie cornerback Dan Davis (21) appears to deflect a Ron Reeves pass in the second quarter to Renie Baker, but the Aggie defender was called for defensive interference. The penalty advanced the ball to the A&M 7-yard line. Along with Davis, Aggie free safety Billy Cannon (22) defends on play. Tech split end Troy Smith (right) looks on.

A CINDERELLA STORY
MEDA, Pa. (AP) — Faith Ryan Whittlesey told the Delaware County council that she "felt like Cinderella," as she resigned from that body to be sworn in Wednesday as U.S. ambassador to Switzerland.

"And for the sake of all of you who trusted me, I'll do my very best to make sure that the slipper fits," she said.

Rec finds space for special events

The Rec Sports staff figures no part of the Rec Center should go to waste. Now students can practice golf, archery, or gymnastics — another move to round out the field of events offered to students.

Golfers will have a chance to fine tune their game from 7-10 p.m. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays in available areas in the Rec Center. Driving, chipping and putting can be practiced at this time. All equipment can be checked out, and free instruction is available.

Archery will have its own place from 7-10 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays and again from 4-7 p.m. Sundays. Targets, bows, finger tabs, and armguards all can be checked out. Instruction and shooting contests will take place for area users. Participants should bring their own arrows.

The Olympics are only three years away, so it's time for aspiring gymnasts to take part in this program, too. A wide selection of equipment is available from 7-10 p.m. Wednesdays and Sundays, and instruction from qualified gymnasts also is offered.

Basketball entries due

What game requires six people and two baskets? Co-rec basketball (what else?), and it's time to register for the coming season. The game is played under the "old" woman's basketball rules with two defensive forwards, two offensive forwards and two rovers — one of each sex.

Only the rovers may cross the half-court line. From there, though, the game takes on a chauvinistic aspect. Men are not allowed in the lane, and their baskets are worth the normal two points while the ladies receive three points for every bucket. Sound fun? Well, enter your team by Thursday. A $25 forfeit fee per team is required.

Atta Boy Girl

Lisa Woodward of the Ruggers turns it on to get around the end against the Zeta Tau Zetas in recent co-rec football action. In action this week, the Ruggers defeated ASM 24-12. Men's, women's and co-rec intramural football action is underway this fall. Rec Sports offers several classes of competition:

Greek, club, men's, women's, resident hall and open. Most of the scores from last week's competition along with men's and women's top ten and volleyball results can be found in SCOREBOARD on this page.

IM Briefs

Ski clinic offered

The Rec Sports Outdoor Program will sponsor the Sandia Peak Ski School's Dryland Ski Clinic once again this fall. The ski clinic will start at noon Oct. 17 at the Aquatic Center. Events will include movies, lectures, displays and actual instruction of a few basic skiing maneuvers. Enrollment will be limited, so potential participants should sign up now by telephoning the Rec Sports Office at 742-3351. The clinic is free and will last about three hours.

Injury clinic continues

The third in a series of weekly injury classes with Dr. Robert Yost of the Tech Medical School will begin at 7 p.m. today in the classroom of the Student Recreation Center. Each week Dr. Yost examines a limited number of students with orthopedic or sports-related injuries and also spends time answering questions related to sports medicine and injury rehabilitation. The clinic is free to anyone eligible to enter the Rec Center.

Flyfishing workshop set

For those of you who think flyfishing means fishing for flies, the Rec Sports Department is offering a flyfishing workshop to set you straight. The workshop begins at 7 p.m. next Wednesday. It's a chance to learn the basics of fly casting, flyfishing techniques and places to go in the Southwest. The workshop is free and you can register by telephoning the Outdoor Shop at 742-2949.

Weightlifters to meet

The Tech Body Building and Power Lifting Association's first meeting will be at 8 p.m. today in the Rec Center classroom. Anyone interested in competitive body building, power lifting or advance weight training should attend the meeting to find out about future events and plans of the club.
