Resurfacing Streets

An onlooker watches as City crew members, Tommy Jackson, center, and Thomas Watson on the machine, are shown here putting the hot top on a street included in a resurfacing project made possible by a grant from FEMA (Federal Emergency Management Agency). According to City Superintendent of Operations Derriell Warnock, the grant came as a result of damage done to streets last year during heavy, washing rains. Although other streets could have used the same treatment, the funds were, after an inspection by FEMA representatives, designated for the particular streets where the damage was directly attributed to those rains.

Aftermath of a fire which completely destroyed the Frank Hull home.

Fire Destroys Residence Sunday

A fire Sunday afternoon destroyed the trailer home of Frank and Bessie Hull in the 100 block of North 6th Street.

According to Fire Marshall Lee Ray Huggins, the fire call came at about 3:30 p.m. as the firemen were leaving to assist in fighting a grass fire at Echo. When they saw the smoke at the Hull residence, they immediately detoured to that location.

Huggins said the fire apparently started in a storage building near the home and, fueled by the wind, quickly engulfed the trailer, which was later determined to be a complete loss.

He said there were signs that the cause of the fire was most probably of an electrical nature.

Mr. and Mrs. Hull and their daughter and family, Bobby and Norman Asher and sons Patrick and Scott, who also were presently living in the home, lost all their clothing and household goods in the fire. Although a few belongings were retrieved from the end of the trailer away from the severest blaze, most were too smoke and water damaged to be usable.

A fund to assist the fire victims has been established at Santa Anna National Bank.

The family is in need of furniture, bedding, linens, clothing and other household items. The Hulls and the Asher family are currently staying with other family members until housing, furniture and other necessary household items can be obtained.

The firemen have responded to several grass fires since their last report. We are urged to be especially cautious of conditions which might ignite a fire during this dry and windy time.

Bob Turner Announces As Candidate For Re-election To State Legislature

State Representative Robert R. (Bob) Turner (D) Voss, announces his intention to file for re-election to the State Legislature. Turner was first elected in 1991, in a special election, from a field of 11 candidates to represent District 65, and served the remainder of that term. Turner was then re-elected to serve the new District 73, after redistricting and is now serving his first full term in the Texas House.

Turner indicates he will be a candidate for re-election, in the Democratic Primary which will be held in March, 1994. Representative Turner and his wife, Ann, live at Voss in Coleman County. The couple have three grown sons. Ann Turner is a registered nurse and is employed by several small rural schools as school nurse.

District 73 is equal in size to the combined states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Rhode Island and consists of the following counties: Brown, Coleman, Concho, Menard, Schleicher, Sutton, Crockett, Upton, Crane, Ward, Kimble, Mason, Llano, Edwards, Real and Bandera, plus a portion of Ector County.

Turner readily admits he serves "special interests" and those "special interests" are those of Rural and West Texas. Such special interests as property rights, rural health care, public education, teachers, the elderly, agriculture and the oil field industry. These items receive the largest part of his focus and attention. Since the western 2/3 of the state have only 14% of the members of the Legislature, Turner feels that he can play a major role in seeing that the needs of West and Rural Texas are properly met.

Santa Anna Penatuhkah Comanche Chief

A Series By Linda Pelon

Introduction

Although all the information I've discovered about Santa Anna's life has not been shared, I want to tell you now about his death. I guess it is because summer was the season in which he died that my thoughts keep returning now to that fateful summer of 1849. I wonder about Santa Anna's last days, his last thoughts, his last words to the loving and faithful wife who stayed with him to the end, and I feel very sad that this epidemic robbed Santa Anna of the heroic death desired by true warriors.

Death and Chaos: The 1849 Cholera Epidemic

The people were technically, socially, and psychically unprepared for such a crisis. As cholera infected whole encampments, the dying could not be adequately cared for nor the dead properly mourned or buried. Among a folk with no understanding of the forces at work, and with a vast, frequently hysterical dread of all such things, the epidemic soon sent families fleeing across the plains in blind terror.

(T.R. Fehrenback, Comanches, The Restriction of a People)

The cholera epidemic of 1849 which took the life of Santa Anna, Old Owl, and an estimated one half of the Penatuhkah band was felt throughout Texas. Mary Maverick, a citizen of the Republic of Texas whose journal is often quoted by historians, noted in her journal. On New Year's Day in 1849 she wrote, "New Year's Day was bright and beautiful, but we heard the cholera had appeared in New Orleans" In April she recorded:

Monday, the second of April, cholera appeared in San Antonio. For two weeks it was confined to Mexicans in the low, damp places, and Dr. Cupples thought it was easily managed and would not become epidemic, but suddenly, in gloom overhead and in our hearts it appeared everywhere in the most violent form and would not yield to treatment. April 22nd, twenty one died of cholera.

Late in April, cholera took the life of Mrs. Maverick's young daughter. Mrs. Maverick wrote about the day of her daughter's death:

Idle would be the task of portraying the gloom of our household, or the terror which seized upon the community. Fear and dread were in every house--an oppressive weight in the atmosphere. Into every house came the pestilence, in most house was death, and in some families one-half died!

Every boy and girl who attended the Reading Club is a winner. Each enjoyed good books, good stories, good friends and even small rewards.

The age groups met as usual. Mrs. Key's younger ones heard the story of Corduroy. They dressed a paper bear like Corduroy.

Middlers read The Velveteen Rabbit. Later they made a rabbit puppet and a small walking boy puppet. Boys and girls from either of these groups would enjoy using their puppets and telling their stories. Give them a chance, listen!

The oldest members renewed the sidewalk drawings. There's even a platypus!

Almost everyone had brought a stuffed toy. Each group selected the largest, smallest, most loved, longest ears, most colorful, etc. Small gifts were awarded. Certificates for recordkeeping were awarded. Members who had read a classic story were recognized.

The entire club met to award certificates to teens and adults who volunteered their help. There was a drawing from all records. Zachery Carter received two tickets to Six Flags Over Texas. These were provided by KTXS-TV and this is the third year the station has promoted the Summer Reading Club. They deserve praise for this worthy project. Thank you KTXS.

Congratulations to Zachary and to all those children who were registered for the reading club. Approximately 50 children attended during the four week period.

If you have suggestions about the reading club, please contact the library or one of the adult leaders.

It was a joy having the new library. Before we moved, we were all over the north side of town. Sincere thanks to Coleman County Telephone Cooperative, Inc. and the HighRise Apartments for providing meeting space all those previous years.

Daily newspapers and latest magazines are still available to all. The Waide Messer family brought a stack of good children's magazines such as Jack & Jill and Turtle. Mrs. Dorothy Johnson brought the 1993 Daily Guideposts. It surely

A Reminder About Social Security Reporting Requirements

By: Eric Johnagin

"As a Social Security beneficiary, you have certain responsibilities for ensuring that you continue to receive your benefits in the right amount, delivered to the right place, and one time," said Eric Johnagin, Social Security manager in Brownwood. "You probably know that you need to tell Social Security any time you change addresses or if you change direct deposit bank accounts, Mr. Johnagin continued, "but do you know that there may be other events that affect your Social Security checks?"

You must also report the following:

Any changes in your estimated earnings; changes in marital status; name changes; births adoptions, or deaths in the family; changes in the circumstances of any child who is receiving benefits, under your care, under 16 or has a disability; imprisonment; trips of 30 days or more outside of the United States; and pensions from work not covered by Social Security.

"If you fail to report these changes," said Mr. Johnagin, "the amount of your benefits may be wrong. You may receive more money than you're due, and we'll have to ask you to pay it back," cautions Johnagin. "Or you may receive less than you're due and have to wait until the records are corrected."

If you need more information on what to report or how to make a report on any of these items, visit the Brownwood Social Security office or call Social Security's toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213, business days between 7:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m.

would start your day off right to read the meditations. Show these friends how much you appreciate their contributions. Drop by and read.

Betty and David Key brought wonderful things for David's sister, Mrs. Irene McMillan. Three boxes of books cover many areas of science, math, business and French.

These are advanced materials and expand library resources to help college and technical students or teachers. Mrs. McMillan also sent office supplies, like card files, folders, legal tablets, paper clips, book ends, markers and post-its. Those surely help. Library funds for supplies have been dropping rapidly. Each new book requires a pocket and two cards inside, an outside number label and protector. Mrs. Dick Baugh made a contribution that will be used to help pay for the last supply order. Thank you all. Thank you for keeping the library going and growing.

Outdoor Precautions Can Help Avoid Tick-borne Lyme Disease

As Texans increase their outdoor activities with the coming of spring, they need to be mindful that some of nature's creatures, specifically ticks, not only can cause discomfort, but also may cause serious illness.

Julie Rawlings of the Texas Department of Health's (TDH) Zoonosis Control Division said, "In recent years, Lyme disease, transmitted through tick bites, has become a growing health threat in the Texas outdoors. The disease has been reported among pet owners, campers, hunters and others who work outdoors or with animals." Infection occurs when ticks or cat fleas transmit a corkscrew-shaped bacterium called a spirochete.

Lyme disease can advance from flu-like symptoms and rash to painful—even permanent—damage to joints and nervous system.

"To help answer most people's questions about the disease, its symptoms, testing and other concerns, I invite the public to call the TDH Lyme Disease Information Helpline (512/458-7228) in Austin. We have condensed the most frequently sought information into recorded message," Rawlings said.

While Lyme disease is treatable, knowledge of the disease and a few Although several species of tick can carry the disease, the Lone Star variety, which enjoyed biting humans, often is the suspected vector. Rawlings said that about one percent of Lone Star ticks tested carry the Lyme spirochete.

The disease, first identified in Lyme, Conn., in 1976, has become widespread in the U.S. Of the 1,362 possible Lyme disease cases reported in Texas since 1986, at least 361 have met all case criteria of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's definition of the illness.

Rawlings said, "Of the confirmed Lyme disease cases in Texas, all but a small percentage have occurred in the eastern half of the

Children and Television Advertising

By: Carol Katzer, CEA-H.E.
During the summer months, children are likely to watch even more television than during the school year. And a large number of those TV ads promote toys. Toys advertised on television often become important parts for a child's birthday and holiday "wish lists." The Federal Trade Commission has recently altered parents to help children learn about toy ads on TV. Although TV ads are an important source of information about toys for children, some children, especially the younger ones, may have trouble figuring out from an ad how a toy works outside its imaginary setting or whether toy parts are sold separately.

It is important to talk with children about how to understand television advertisements for toys. As with all products, toys advertised on TV are made to appear as appealing as possible. Point out to children that the purpose of advertising is to sell products. Not all information about a toy may be contained in an ad. It is important to teach children how to evaluate toy advertisements.

state."
Lyme disease' symptoms often mimic those of other diseases, except for a characteristic reddish rash which sometimes surrounds a tick bite. If untreated with antibiotics, easy precautions can greatly reduce the likelihood of exposure to it.

When outdoors, especially in wooded areas or tall grass:

- *Wear long sleeves and long pants, with pantlegs tucked into socks and boots. Tuck shirt tails into pants and use tape to seal the area where pants overlap socks or boot tops.

- *Wear light-colored clothing to make ticks more visible.

- *Use insect repellent containing "DEET" or "permethrin" on clothing and footwear (not on skin).

- *Avoid high grass and foliage when possible, since ticks wait on vegetation to "hitch-hike" on passing animals.

- *Keep pets out of infested areas, and inspect them often for ticks. Dogs and cats, too, are susceptible to Lyme disease.

- *After being outdoors, wash all clothing worn and inspect yourself and your children's bodies for ticks. Remove any attached ticks with tweezers, grasping as close to the head as possible, tugging until the tick is freed. Avoid crushing the tick's body. The less time a tick remains attached, the less likely it is of transmitting Lyme disease.

- *Live ticks removed from humans can be tested at a TDH laboratory to determine whether they carry Lyme disease.

Some important points to consider:
Toy ads may exaggerate a toy's performance. A toy on TV may appear to make elaborate sounds or move by itself when, in fact, it cannot. You could discuss how special sound effects, production techniques, camera work, or editing can be used to enhance a toy's operation. Many ads show toys being used in make-believe settings in ways that are unrepresentative of how they work in real life. You may want to help children focus on the part of an ad showing a toy's real-life operation.

Toys may require special skills or extensive practice. In some ads, toys may look easy to play with or operate. In fact, they may require hours of practice before they can be used as shown. In addition, you may want to remind children that because of differing levels of skills and talents, not all toys are appropriate for all children.

Toys may not include all the pieces displayed in the ad. You may want to help a child determine what pieces actually come with a toy. Some toys may be shown with parts from more than one package while others may be depicted in elaborate play settings not readily duplicated at home. Children may want to watch and listen for such key phrases as "pieces sold separately" or "no batteries included."

Toys may have to be assembled. Toys in ads may look ready to play with when, in fact, they require assembly. In some cases, the assembly may be difficult or time-consuming. Children may want to note whether an ad states "some assembly required." Children can learn to be skilled toy consumers. Talk with children about advertising. Encourage them to discuss with you the ads they see on TV. After you buy a toy, discuss whether it performs the way they thought it would. Ask what additional information they need about a toy before purchasing it or whether another toy would be a better buy.

As with any product, find out information about a toy before purchasing it. Carefully examine the toy and its packaging in the stores or ask friends for their experiences. Try to determine how the toy actually performs. What pieces come with it, and how much assembly is required.

Check the recommended age level on the toy packaging before buying. This is the manufacturer's guide to the appropriateness of the toy and skill level required.

If you are interested in information on children and child development, a supply of pamphlets is available from the County Extension Office. Call Carol Katzer, Home Economics Agent at 625-4519 or come by the second floor of the courthouse.

Happy Birthday to PawPaw: Elton McDonald

A Great Grandfather's Love

A GREAT grandfather's love is like no other,
A gift from God to cherish forever,
A person who listens to what you say,
When none give a minute, he gives each day.
It's there where he tells of all his adventures.
He's there just for you and there is no one else.
He's loving and kind. He doesn't think of himself.
It is the hours you spend, the years that pass by—
He becomes your best friend, and "time" is why.
There is none who could take a GREAT grandfather's place,
For it is made just for him by God's loving grace.

We LOVE you!!!!!!!

Texas To The British Isles

By David & Margaret Karthaus

Editor's Note: David and Margaret Karthaus are sharing the account of another of their worldly travels in search of family roots. The couple resides in Fort Worth but also have a home in Santa Anna and are active in local affairs. Margaret is a native of our community.

When we awoke in the morning it was with the realization that this was our last day in Ireland. We left Ballymena and took a different road to the most of Southern of the glens of Antrim. Then drove south along the coast to Larne to catch the ferry back to Stranraer, Scotland.

We were not quite as rushed in catching the ferry this time but were real careful about our timing since if we didn't catch the noon boat it would be late afternoon before the next one came. We had a light lunch on the boat. We were somewhat disappointed as this boat didn't have a duty free shop on it as the one between Germany and Denmark but this was still all part of the United Kingdom. After we got of the boat we drove back the same road that we had been on three days before. We stopped at the Holy Cairn. These are large stones that were formed as a burial ground. They sort of look like a dugout with a large rock serving as a roof. As we walked from one set of stones to another up a small road we saw a sign pointing to an artist's cottage. As we walked up the road, the mist turned to rain, the rain to sleet, and the sleet to hail. Fortunately, it did not last long and the artist's workshop was very warm and comfortable as we walked in. Many pieces were being prepared for Harrod's of London. The work was very beautiful and one purchasing this in downtown London would not conceive that this was created in a small shop literally miles from any other structure. The workshop was on an old farm and was on the farm outbuildings redone for the artist. After a few purchases which includes some postcards of the Cairn we returned to our car and drove to Gatehouse of Fleet. As we drove in town we stopped by Glencue Abbey. Glencue is a fortified castle that was three stories above the ground. The castle was built for defense and looked more like a modern structure than an elegant castle. It was essentially square at the bottom with straight sides looking more like a box on end. Once inside the castle it was easy to see that this was built strictly for defense and not for comfort of its inhabitants. Underneath the ground were huge storerooms to hold provisions for the household. There was also the customary jail or dungeon and a place to boil oil to pour on unwanted guests. Glencue is between 5-10 miles from Barmagachan and from the descriptive signs in Glencue one of the Murdock's was tried and executed for severely beating the wife of someone who offended him and left her to die on a dung heap.

After the tour of the castle, we went into town and made reservations at the same bed and breakfast we had stayed three years ago when we first visited Barmagachan. It was a lovely farmhouse and the family who ran the bed and breakfast on the farm were exceedingly nice. It was just a few short miles from Barmagachan. After we dropped our stuff off at the bed and breakfast we drove to Barmagachan. Not finding anyone at home, we drove back to Gatehouse of Fleet and had rack of lamb for our dinner. We don't know if we liked the lamb or the mint jelly best but the food was excellent.

After a good night's sleep and a farm house breakfast complete with cow's milk, we drove one more time by Barmagachan and then back to Gatehouse of Fleet. We stopped in many of the quaint shops and bought many souvenirs. We then said good-bye to this part of Scotland and prepared to drive to Wales through a little of England. We stopped at Castle Douglas just east of Kircudbright and purchased gas and we bought a little over 9 gallons for $29.00. I am sure glad this car got such good mileage. We drove to the border between south and east hoping to see Hadrian's Wall, but the wall does not come close to the main highway and we were pressed for time. Our plan for this day was to do very little sight-seeing and mainly get as far south in Wales as possible. As we drove along the motorway we saw quite a bit of construction. One of the traffic signs caught our attention. It said, "Traffic Queues Likely." And we did have to stop for the construction several times. We stopped for gas and a snack in mid-afternoon in England just prior to getting to Wales. We drove through the beautiful Wales countryside heading south and a little west. Wales is more farming country with very little industrialization. We drove till fairly late in the day and as usual about the time we decided to find a B&B for the night there were no signs for miles and miles. We had seen many signs just before the time we had set the time to start looking. Once it was 5:30 it appeared that all signs were taken down. It was not bad for we found a sign a few minutes after 6. The sign pointed up a narrow road and drove up and up and the farther we drove it pointed up a narrower and narrower road till finally we came to the top of the hill. There was a beautiful farm house complete with pond and ducks and a greenhouse in front. It appeared that we were going to experience a wonderful night with a Welsh family in Wales. There were several doors and it was hard to find the real front door. We had a hard time getting anyone to answer the door. The people inside were having so much fun they couldn't hear our knocking. The couple who owned the place had a house full of company which included a daughter, son-in-law, granddaughter and another couple with their baby. At first they said they didn't have room but then decided that they did have a place for us to stay. We had an apartment of our own complete with kitchen with a microwave and washing machine, sitting room, two bedrooms and a bath. This was one of the cheapest places we had stayed. After taking in our overnight luggage, we followed our host's directions and drove back down the narrow, winding road to the intersection with the main road. We drove on a few miles to a very small town that consisted of three or four buildings. One of which was a recommended pub. We had a very nice meal and a nice conversation with the owner and their guests. After a nice dinner we drove back to the B&B. When we returned our hosts and their family were finishing dinner. They insisted we gather around the table and visit with them. We had tea and dessert with their family. We talked and talked and finally discovered that our wonderful Welsh family has just moved here from Southern England to get away from the crowds. They owned a store in England and they told about the Lord dealing with their lives that moved them from being shop owners to farm owners on top of a hill far from anyone. Their testimony of faith was inspiring. We and the family talked first around the dining table and then in the living room around the open fire till after midnight. Everyone seemed to be enjoying themselves so much that no one noticed the time. Reluctantly we said good night and went to bed. Since our hosts had two small children, breakfast was early in spite of our late night. We had asked our hosts about a glass factory near Cardiff. They quickly showed us some back roads to a glass factory and a series of dams. We took their suggestion and took the little narrow roads going up and down hills to the town that had the glass factory. It was a relatively small factory, but made Royal Welsh Crystal. I believe we bought more pieces here than anywhere else. We left the glass factory and headed north to the valley where the dams were. We drove only to the first one and it was very impressive. The dam was made of stone and huge blocks of stone were laid in stair step fashion that went from the floor of the valley to surface to flow over and looked very spectacular like a giant waterfall. The series of dams here were the water supply for Birmingham, England about 100 miles away.

This short period of time from last evening till this morning, was probably our most enjoyable of our trip. The wonderful hosts who entertained us took us in as part of their family, their recommendation for sight seeing was excellent. We left the dams and drove to Cardiff and stopped at two castles on the way. One of the castles was very large and built on an island in the river. One of the parts of the ruins was leaning at a very precarious angle. Fishermen fishing in the river were catching fish that looked very much like flounder. This castle had been the home of the Lowellyns and even though fairly well fortified was much more of a party castle than castles such as Glencue. We left Wales and drove across a very long high bridge into England. Our destination was to spend the night near the town of Bath. A few miles before Bath we took a road that went around the town. We found a

B&B within a few miles of the town of Marshfield. After we left our luggage, we walked into town to a pub recommended by our host. The menu was diverse. We had lamb, venison and pork. Each of us had something different. We are still arguing who had the best meal.

We had been wanting to get to Bath since we were in England the last time we were here. We had been reading about Bath and it seemed to be a very interesting place to go. We got up early the next morning and had another good breakfast. We decided that the things we wanted to see were fairly close to Marshfield so we decided to spend the next night here as well. We drove to Bath, had some difficulty finding a place to park and walked a long way to the Roman baths.

The Roman baths are in the center of town. They had almost been covered by silt by the overflowing river nearby and most of the structure was buried beneath the street level. The hot springs were a welcome respite for the Roman soldiers who would come here for rest and relaxation from their frontier posts. The entire structure is an engineering marvel. The floors were built above ground level and the space between floor and ground were used to channel hot air that warmed the floors and then the building. There were at least three pools of water, each at a different temperature depending upon how far the pool was from the hot spring. The Roman tile was very ornate in and around the pool. The floor of the main pool was a gigantic sheet of lead that was at least 20' by 40'. The Romans were great plumbers as well as builders and warriors. Much of the baths have not been excavated in that the current city of Bath is built upon much of the ruins. It appeared that little expense was spared in building this warriors' retreat.

We finished our guided tour and made our way back to the car. We stopped at many small shops and bought fruit and a loaf of bread. We ate the bread while walking back to the car. During our mobile snack, we crossed the Putley Bridge, a famous landmark in Bath. After we arrived at the car, we drove to Glastonbury. In Glastonbury there is a castle that was thought to be the legendary Camelot. Since the castle was rebuilt very long ago, it was not as impressive as others we've seen. The main thing in Glastonbury was the Abbey. In contrast to the castle, the Abbey was very large and pretty well preserved. Two significant things are in the Abbey. One is the site of King Arthur and Guenevere's grave and the site where they were moved. The descriptions of the two bodies fit well with the literary writings concerning King Arthur and Guenevere. A few miles away we stopped and visited the site of where it was reported that the Holy Grail was thrown into a well. The well is more of a spring and the water is still flowing. The local hippies hung out around the spring either drinking the water or using the water in their mystical healing. Glastonbury seemed to have a strong cult element which really diminished our enjoyment of the visit.

Supernova: The Sky Show of a Decade Over Texas

Only Texans with small telescopes will be able to see it, but an exploding star has astronomers--professional and amateur--excited. And even if most Texans and the rest of the world's residents never see it, there's a long-range chance that it will be of future benefit to the good health of all humanity.

The star, which disturbed a huge segment of the universe with its explosion, is called a supernova. Astronomers at The University of Texas McDonald Observatory in the Davis Mountains say it's a phenomenon rarely seen in the Northern Hemisphere.

It was discovered last month by an amateur astronomer in Spain and now star-gazers on half a continent are focusing on it.

When it first appeared, to see it required a small telescope at least 10 inches in diameter. As it came closer to the earth, its image could be captured on an 8 inch and then a 6 inch scope.

Recently, however, it surprised scientists by suddenly brightening. Now astronomers say it can be seen on a scope with a 4 inch mirror. This gives hope that it may be possible to glimpse it with high powered binoculars before it disappears, probably in a few more weeks.

Supernovas fill the skies, but only about 800 have ever been close enough to study. This one is only 12 million light years away and is northwest of the cup of the Big Dipper.

Dr. Clyde Wheeler of UT Austin's Department of Astronomy describes it as "once-in-a-decade event. What makes this interesting is that it's so relatively close and bright that we can study it very thoroughly."

Why this sudden world-wide interest in a phenomenon that is known to occur about 50 times a year?

Astronomers still don't know too much about supernova beyond the fact that it occurs in massive dying stars. When a bright one like this occurs, it is studied because of its rarity and because it can lead to a better understanding of why they happen.

Supernovas occur in certain massive stars that have used up most of their nuclear fuel and thus no longer can support themselves against gravity. This causes the star to collapse, followed by a shock wave that sends stellar matter in the galaxy spewing in every direction. Sometimes this collapse results in a thermonuclear explosion that is equivalent to that of a hydrogen bomb.

These explosions are so violent that a supernova, from the earth's vantage point, can be as bright as the light from all of the billions of stars remaining in the galaxy.

Supernovas also are beneficial to the every day life of Earthlings. Jeff Kanipe, editor of McDonald Observatory's magazine, Star Date, says when these stars explode, they seed the universe with the ingredients of life.

"The iron in our blood and the calcium in our bones quite likely came from such explosions," he says.

What other effects can supernovas have on our lives? Astronomers at McDonald Observatory hope this newest and brightest star will provide more answers.

NO AGGIE JOKE---About 30,000 Texas Aggies are drinking from environmentally correct refillable mugs, thus saving the university more than $250,000 to date.

Five years ago school officials decided to replace paper and Styrofoam cups at campus refreshment spots with permanent, insulated 22-ounce plastic mugs. The primary purpose was to cut down on refuse going into landfills.

Students pay $2.75 for the mug. But they did get their money back many times over because soft drinks and coffee are discounted heavily when they refill their mugs.

The students like the mug because it's a contribution to the environment while saving them money in the long run. The university's savings have come from inventory reduction and the labor costs require to handle the disposable cups.

TEXAS BRAG---The South Texas Medical Center in San Antonio is the largest land area in the world dedicated exclusively to medicine.

It is the home of The University of Texas Health Science Center, plus more than a score of hospitals. Hundreds of physicians have offices in the area which is also headquarters for a variety of medical services.

WHAT NEXT?---No Texas medical school has acquired one as yet, but students soon may be using computerized cadavers to learn anatomy.

A Marietta, GA., company has produced what it calls Animated Dissection of Anatomy for Medicine. Described as "a flight simulator for medicine," it is packaged on a type of computer video disk and runs on most personal computers.

Using the computer, a medical student can visually peel back successive layers of skin, muscle, internal organs and skeleton. Body parts can be manipulated much as in an autopsy.

NIGHT WORK?---How to use dreams to develop imagination and inventiveness is a new course in continuing education at The University of Texas at Arlington.

Called "Dream Work: Using Dreams to Enhance Creativity," the course will be offered in three two-hour seminars.

Participants will explore the world of dreams, seeking greater awareness and sensitivity. Students will learn to use dream logs and increase dream memory.

State Capital

HIGHLIGHTS
By Lyndell Williams and Ed Sterling
TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION

AUSTIN — Martha Whitehead, former mayor of Longview, was sworn in last week as Texas' 24th state treasurer, succeeding Kay Bailey Hutchison who was elected to the U.S. Senate.

Whitehead, 58, said she would consider transferring some treasury functions to other agencies if she is satisfied they could perform the tasks better.

But the East Texas Democrat said she would call for shifting some investment management duties of other agencies to her office.

"We're going to make the case that we can manage investment better than other agencies, and we are going to be very aggressive about that," said Whitehead.

Gov. Ann Richards conducted the swearing-in ceremony in the House chamber.

Deputy Treasurer Named

After Whitehead was sworn in, state Board of Insurance member Paul Williams resigned his post to become deputy treasurer.

Williams, a longtime aide to Gov. Richards, was appointed to a six-year term on the Insurance Board less than five months ago.

He has held the job of deputy treasurer before, when Richards was state treasurer.

When Richards was elected governor, Williams served as her executive assistant and then chief of staff before she named him to the Insurance Board.

Under legislation passed this past session, the three-member Insurance Board will be dissolved Sept. 1, 1994. The state insurance department will then be run by a commissioner.

Williams, a native of Temple, is a graduate of Baylor University. He is a certified public accountant. Whitehead said she has begun raising money for the 1994 election campaign. "I view a job well done as being elected in 1994," she said.

School Finance Appeal

More than 100 property-poor school districts attempting to halt a new school finance law filed an appeal last week with the Texas Supreme Court.

The appeal asks the high court to overrule a trial judge who denied the school districts a June hearing on the new law, which is set to take effect Sept. 1.

The law gives property-rich school districts several options for sharing their wealth with property-poor ones.

Meanwhile, a U.S. Department of Justice pre-cleared the new school finance law, according to Secretary of State John Hannah.

The new law was submitted to the department because of provisions that could affect voting.

Stephen Rosenbaum, chief of the agency's voting section, said in a letter that Attorney General Janet Reno is not objecting to the changes made by the law. But he noted that failure to object does not bar future court challenges.

Bribery Trial Begins

The racketeering and bribery trial of former U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante got under way last week in San Antonio.

"You're about to learn the story about a former congressman who was on the take," prosecutor Jackie Bennett told jurors.

Bennett began the attack by calling a retired Air Force general, who testified that Bustamante threatened him while trying to land a government food service contract for friends.

Bustamante, 59, a Democrat, lost his 23rd Congressional District seat to Republican Henry Bonilla amid publicity about the federal investigation.

Bustamante's wife, Rebecca, an attorney, is on trial charged with aiding and abetting her husband.

Commercial Motor Vehicle Drivers Need To Comply With Texas Law

In the nearly 33 months that Texas-based commercial motor vehicle drivers have had to study for and take the tests necessary to receive a commercial driver license (CDL), some 412,000 persons required to have the license have done so.

"We're concerned, though, that some drivers in our state who are required to have a CDL don't yet realize that they are now considered commercial drivers," Inspector John Hall, who administers the Texas Department of Public Safety's Commercial Driver License Program, said.

"The law requires some drivers who previously did not meet the criteria of a commercial driver to get a CDL," Hall said. "For instance, a person who drives a vehicle designed to carry 16 or more people (including the driver) now is considered to be a commercial driver, and that could include drivers of vehicles used by churches and day care facilities," he said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety began issuing commercial driver licenses in September of 1990 and the law mandating that drivers of certain classes of vehicles obtain a commercial driver license went into effect April 1, 1992. The Texas law was implemented to conform to the federal Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 that, among other things, makes it illegal for an operator of a commercial motor vehicle (truck or bus) to have more than one license. In addition, it defines who is categorized as a commercial driver.

The law also makes a CDL mandatory to drive a vehicle that weighs more than 26,000 pounds or carries certain hazardous materials.

There are exemptions for farm, military, emergency and personal-use recreation vehicles.

"The law also helps prevent abuses by interstate and intrastate commercial drivers, who in many instances had multiple licenses and could spread traffic offenses over different states to circumvent license suspension or revocation," Hall said.

"A driver could use whichever license was most advantageous if stopped by a law enforcement officer or asked to produce one so that a potential employer could check a driving record," he said.

The federal law set up a national registry for commercial driver licenses in order to track in which state a person is licensed. Also, the registry allows driving records from other states to be combined with a driver's home state driving record.

The new law imposes stricter penalties on commercial drivers who violate certain traffic and alcohol/drug laws.

The law also gives Texas the authority to use traffic convictions from other states to suspend a CDL and adopts the federal criteria for disqualification of commercial motor vehicle operators.

Since the law went into effect nearly 15 months ago, DPS and other law enforcement agencies have issued citations to persons who do not have a CDL but were required to. CDL suspensions/disqualifications for various lengths of time have been taken against drivers of commercial vehicles.

Anyone needing a CDL or with questions about the CDL law should contact the nearest DPS Driver License Office.

wide search for a commissioner of insurance.

"This is one of the top insurance regulatory jobs in the nation, and we intend to recruit 'the best and brightest' to fill it," Gov. Richards said.

Under a recently passed law, the State Board of Insurance will be abolished and the commissioner will become Texas' top insurance regulator.

The Legislature has authorized a commissioner's salary of as much as $150,000.

Waste Dump Suit

Alert Citizens for Environmental Safety has filed a second lawsuit to block the state's plans to build a low-level radioactive waste dump in West Texas.

ACES spokesman Roy Griffin said the district court suit is meant to complement a federal lawsuit filed last month.

Griffin said the organization wants to ensure "that the governor and the Legislature are held responsible for the actions they've taken."

The Legislature voted in 1991 to put the dump in Hudspeth County. But residents say the action is illegal because there was no chance for them to voice their opposition.

Other Highlights

■ Texas children will receive free immunizations this month as part of a campaign launched last week by Gov. Richards and state Health Commissioner David Smith. The Legislature authorized an additional $17 million for immunizations.

■ Although prison officials vowed in 1989 to limit furloughs to violent inmates, the practice is continuing. The Dallas Morning News reported last week. The newspaper said inmates are released, unsupervised, for up to seven days.

Ranger Park Inn

By Dorothy York

My article this week will be just a little different. Rather than tell you about the activities and social events we have at Ranger Park, I would rather share with you my views of working with the elderly.

I come to work each day ready to conduct and participate in the activities scheduled for that particular day. Not only do I get pleasure and joy watching the residents get involved in what we are doing, I like watching them test their abilities to succeed and accomplish whatever we might be doing.

Each day I learn something new from these people, they have a world of knowledge and experience that if you take the time they are willing to share with you.

They have lived many years, seen marvelous changes from the horse and buggy days to man walk on the moon. Their common sense and reasoning is something we can all learn from.

The special joy I feel, after a day of work, is when one of the residents will come up and say I love you, or thank you for working for us, or just touch your hand.

Each and every resident at Ranger Park has something special that draws you to them.

How lucky I feel to be a part of a team working with a group of outstanding people.

Taking Over The Counter Medications

By: Carol Katzer, CEA-H.E.

Over-the-counter drugs need to medical prescriptions and may not even be considered drugs by older consumers, but they are powerful medications; that can have potentially harmful side effects. The Food & Drug Administration (FDA) has established labeling guidelines to help consumers. Older consumers should pay particular attention to the following:

*Indications for use--what conditions or symptoms the product should be used for.

*Directions for use--how much to take, how long between doses and the maximum doses; how to take--chew, with water or food.

*Warnings and cautions--who should not take the drug, when the drug should not be taken, possible adverse reactions, reactions needing professionals' help.

*Drug interaction precautions--an interaction can reduce the effect of the drug or cause a harmful reaction.
