SPEAKING OF CHRISTMAS SHOPPING FOR BUYERS

This is Thanksgiving day. All the American world should give thanks. All the American world from the cottage to the palace should thank their creator that the people and their government are coming out of the greatest economic crisis in the history of the western world. A year ago the American world was on the brink of anarchy. On this Thanksgiving day of 1933 throughout the American world fear has fled from the hearts of the many and courage has taken its place. This has been the record made throughout all the years since George Washington became the first president of the United States. This is a remarkable Thanksgiving. In the year that is ebbing out, 1933 has seen many unusual happenings in all branches of business and in the government of the republic. Speaking for the home folks and all Texans, that is not all. It is a reminder that 1933 witnesses Thanksgiving falling on the last day of November, which has not occurred since 1922. It is important that this should not be overlooked. This makes the shopping season for Christmas buyers unusually short.

There is the reason why: Only 20 shopping days in which to select and purchase Christmas presents that are to gladden many a heart. There is an ancient slogan. It was shouted in the days of prosperity: BUY EARLY. BUY NOW. Shelves of the merchants are loaded with Christmas offerings. Prices are within the reach of all. This should be the real buying season of the year. It has been the observation of many that Christmas shopping, like amusement receipts, are often affected adversely in times of pinch and in times of fear. Fear has been driven from the hearts of Americans. They are out of the ditch. They are facing the future. They have confidence in the republic of the fathers and its flag and its constitution and bill of rights.

Long ago "the peep of dawn" came for recovery from the crash of 1929. Long ago the timid and the fear-stricken crawled out of the ditch and joined the onward movement for the restoration of confidence and recovery and the marching order with its vast processions in 48 commonwealths is on the high road to the top of the hill. Texas today is a bright spot on the map of America. In July of this year the taxpayers of the commonwealth voted out of their pockets $20,000,000 to see to it that no worthy person should go hungry or shelterless or in rags "when winter comes." More than $100,000,000 of government aid, speaking of all the projects and all the building activities, was turned loose in this commonwealth of Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston. Dollar for dollar the federal government is matching the dollars of the great floating of state relief bonds. Heads of more than 100,000 families, speaking for 300,000 human atoms, have been placed in paying jobs and in all of the 254 counties of Texas setups have been made to find jobs for the jobless, to provide food for the hungry, shelter for the homeless, medicinal aid for the sick or disabled, always remembering "THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY."

Well, there is a short shopping season on, here are hundreds of thousands of wage earners on full time and part time. There has been government aid extended to the cotton growers, the wool and the mohair producers, those who are interested in the livestock and all other industries and the Christmas holiday season of 1933 should be one of joy and happiness and not of fear or of deperation. President Roosevelt sent forth a Thanksgiving message that should have been read in all households and framed in all as coming from a man whose patriotism has never been questioned, whose character is of the highest, whose humanitarianism leads all the rest. Then the governor of this commonwealth, speaking direct to the people of Texas, called for a Thanksgiving day of meditation and prayer and good cheer with the hope that "the poor who are ever with us" should not be overlooked and that the Empire commonwealth should continue on its march until sometime in the near future the great procession should reach the top of the Hill of Prosperity.

Shoppers, now is the time to buy. Shoppers, the shelves of the merchants are loaded with the offerings of Christmas and bargain prices are the rule of the hour. Buy now. Buy to the extent of the ability of your pocket. Place the coin in circulation and join in prayer and thanks to that Creator who has a heart of love, a soul of justive and spreads His blessings over all alike, saint and sinner, as the morning dew spreads its favors on the plant life of the world.

Many governments in the world are holding conferences in some form or other most of the time. Conferences, however, can be other than what they seem. Many of them discuss subjects which are not broadcast to the public. Maybe that is well, for the people would, no doubt, consider them of little importance and question the expense involved.

SPEAKING OF RECONSTRUCTION

OUT OUR WAY

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By EDSON R. WAITE, Shawnee, Oklahoma

Edgar G. Harris, publisher of the West Point (Miss.) Times-Leader, a successful daily newspaper in a city of less than 5,000 population, believes that the trade of a city follows the circulation of its local newspaper, and that the collective value of store advertising is even more valuable than the direct returns the individual merchant receives from his investment. Mr. Harris says:

Any good merchant can increase his sales and raise the standard of his store by the intelligent use of the advertising columns of his local newspaper.

"Advertising is a cumulative force, increasing its pulling power with the days and years. In the case of a merchant, advertising is a promise to sell an article of established quality at a fair price, and every time a satisfactory sale is made under these circumstances, a pleased customer is added to the selling force of the store.

"In a small city, like ours, where we must compete for business with several neighboring towns of equal size, the collective value of store advertising even transcends the direct benefits realized by the store which pays for the ad. Customers brought to town by one advertiser naturally buy things from others—and even from those who do not advertise at all.

"A live local newspaper, carrying a representative showing of store advertising, is a tremendous factor in the development of the trade radius of any town or city, and I have often thought that the secretary of the local chamber of commerce might even devote his spare time to soliciting advertising for the home paper with good results, though the average publisher does not expect such co-operation."

There seems to be a few disgruntled people in this world whose circumstances in life depend entirely upon their ability to play on the minds of the ignorant and the amount of mud they can produce from the troubled waters in which they fish. But why worry about them? They are heard today and forgotten tomorrow.

No matter how conscientious the peace officer may be or how he tries to enforce safety laws, he usually gets little co-operation on the part of the average citizen.

NOTICE COTTON GROWERS

Press articles have indicated that cotton producers who took part in the plow-up campaign and accepted the option plan will be paid $20 per bale for option cotton by the government. Just as soon as the necessary papers have been received each option holder will be advised by mail what steps are to be taken by him in order to obtain this four cents per pound advance on his option cotton. No disposition of the option may be made until the option blank is received and at that time the money will be available.

Sanitation Man Will Aid Schools Over the County

Fleming A. Watters of the state health department has been designated as supervisor of sanitation for Eastland county and is now in the county with headquarters in the Judia building at Cisco.

The civil works administration has set aside some $15,000 for construction work in this county. School officials may have the labor furnished for the construction of sanitary pit toilets on the school grounds. Private individuals may also have this work done. It will be necessary for both trustees and individuals to furnish the materials for the construction work. In most cases materials may be salvaged from old buildings in the neighborhood that may be used in construction of the toilets. The average cost of the material should be very small.

Labor will be supplied from the local community where at all possible. Schools desiring this service should get in touch with County Superintendent E. E. McGlamery and individuals should communicate with Mr. Watters at Cisco.

In addition to the above work, Mr. Watters has on his staff two trained nurses who are available for health inspection work in the schools of the county. Some work is being done in the rural schools this week. This is a mighty good time to stamp out communicable diseases in the county, Mr. Watters points out, and a careful inspection of the children with suitable recommendations to parents for the care of the children will go a long way toward doing this very thing. Similar work done in one community of the county during the month of October checked what might have been a typhoid epidemic in just a few days.

Within a few days a deputy supervisor of sanitation will call at the various schools in the county and it is urged that he or she be given the fullest co-operation

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON—The formal explanation of Ambassador Bill Bullitt's immediate trip to Russia is flimsier than the usual official pretext.

No one is concerned seriously about the Moscow housing situation when it comes to selecting an American embassy. The Russians have some swell buildings and virtually would give up the pick of the town. Bullitt knows those buildings.

Those on the inside see several reasons for the quick jump. Both Roosevelt and Bullitt wanted an envoy in Moscow to begin functioning at once. Debt and trade negotiations are pending and are expected to pend until Bullitt has discussed them with Soviet top dogs.

Roosevelt wants to get the "feel" of official Russia as it is now. Bullitt, though no one would admit it, also will discuss the Far Eastern situation with Stalin.

On top of all that, there's the youthful enthusiasm of Bill Bullitt. He didn't see why he should wait around for a lot of organization details.

That gay, youthful spirit that pervades the White House these days sometimes is tough on Sistic and Buzzie Dall, the Roosevelt grandchildren. Recently they were handed a big Japanese picture album to the Junior Red Cross by Tokio school children—in the hope that by school teachers and school officials.

they wouldn't interrupt Mrs. Roosevelt with personal friends. But Sistic and Buzzie down with it at the Down Mrs. Roosevelt guests were on the floor. The kid off, went away to amusement.

The UNKNOWN BLOND

BEGIN HERE TODAY
DAVID BANNISTER undertakes to find out who killed TRACY KING, orchestra leader found dead in his hotel apartment. Bannister, an author and former newspaper man, wrote the murder case with GAINES, star reporter for the Post.

Among those suspected of the crime are JULIET FRANCE, blonde and pretty, known to have visited King shortly before his death; HERMAN SCHELBACH who wrote King a threatening note; and JOE PARROTT, down-and-out candidate for mayor. It is also known that MELVINA HOLLISTER, middle-aged spinster, had quarreled with King recently. King was engaged to wealthy DENISE LAURETTHE, wife of LISTER, Melvina's brother, tells Bannister he believes his sister knows something she is keeping from the police. Later Bannister, on his way to police headquarters, takes a short cut through a dark alley.

CHAPTER XXV
BANNISTER did not know it, but turning into that alley changed his plans completely. The alley was dark and totally deserted. Bannister hurried along with no thought for the darkness. He emerged on Fifth street, turned left, but had not taken more than a dozen steps before he halted.

A large, low-slung roaster had drawn up to the curb. The man at the wheel was leaning forward, smiling. Bannister recognized Parker Coleman.

"Hop in!" Coleman invited. "I'll take you wherever you're going."
"Thanks," Bannister told him, "but it's only a step or two. I'm on my way to police headquarters."
Coleman nodded. "Might as well ride," he urged, and Bannister stepped into the roaster.

He settled back comfortably in the luxuriously cushioned seat. It was pleasant indeed riding in a car like that. He liked young Coleman, too; was glad to have this opportunity to talk with him.

"Anything new on the murder?" Coleman asked.
Bannister shook his head. "Not that I know of," he said. "McNeal was sure last night they'd get a confession from the girl, but they haven't got it yet. At least they didn't have two hours ago. That's why I want to stop in there."

Coleman devoted his attention to his driving. A moment later he brought the roaster to a stop before the old brick building that housed central police headquarters. "Do you mind if I go in with you?" he asked. "Naturally I'm interested."

Bannister assured him that he did not mind in the least, and together they entered the building. The man at the information desk told them Gaine had left a short time before. Bannister nodded and went on. Upstairs they found the same detective Bannister had talked with earlier in the afternoon. He shook his head when they asked for McNeal.

looking for someone to go with me when I met you. There's a piece out there where we can get a first rate dinner."
"There's nothing I'd like better," Bannister agreed. A drive into the country would be just the thing. It would clear the cobwebs out of his brain. And he knew those cosidate eating places. Fried chicken, hot biscuit, home-made pickles and preserves—they would almost certainly be on the menu, together with a host of other delicacies. Perhaps after such a ride and such a meal he would be able to make something of the notions that were tormenting him. They were notions he couldn't arrange into a pattern so that they meant anything and yet that would not leave him alone.

The two men climbed into the roaster. Coleman touched the starter and the quiet, deep-throated throbbing of the motor began. Neither spoke until they had left the congested down town streets behind. Bannister found it pleasant to sit back and feel the cold air whipping against his face.

A large building that was new to him came in sight and he asked what it was. Coleman told him it was a branch of a manufacturing company, recently established in Tremont.

Presently they were on a country road. Coleman, who had been driving rapidly and expertly, increased the car's speed. They fairly shot over the pavement. The wind struck Bannister's face with a sharper lash now. Cold, biting wind that made the blood leap in his veins. It was refreshing, exhilarating.

Coleman turned, smiling, and called out something Bannister could not hear because of the rush of the wind. He leaned nearer, understood the other was telling him something about the highway. There was nothing for Bannister to do but nod and smile. The wind took the words from his throat.

For 30, perhaps 40 minutes they could not hear because of the rush of the wind. The Coleman slowed the car. Ahead lights were twinkling and Bannister could make out the outlines of a building.

"This is the place," Coleman explained. "They call it 'The White Cottage' but it's not such a tea room as that sounds. Good food and plenty of it."
They left the car and went inside. Warm air, lights and the odor of appetizing foods blended invitingly. The room they entered had evidently once been an ordinary cottage living room. There was a fireplace at one end in which logs were burning. Six or seven tables, spotlessly white, filled the space.

A woman came to meet them and led them to a table near the fireplace. When the orders were given Coleman drew a cigaret case from his pocket and extended it. "Have one," he said.

It was ten minutes later, over the plates of fried chicken and sweet potatoes and delicious golden corn, that Bannister had his inspiration. He broke open a hot, flaky biscuit, buttered it and spoke slowly.

"Do you know Matthew and Melvina Hollister?" Coleman thought a moment. "Why, yes," he said. "Brother and sister, aren't they? Used to see them at church." He paused, then said, "That's been some time I'll admit. I'm not exactly regular about church these days. But I used to see them. I was a kid. Mother and father and Melvina. Swell party isn't it?"

Bannister said, "I was with Matthew today. I didn't know that the Hollisters live at the Shelby Arms apartment directly below ours where Tracy King was speared. Parker Coleman took me tonight on his lips. "No, I don't recall that," he said.
"Well, they do. McNeal were out there the other night but we didn't get much. I was more interested in Matt. He told me today. He peated the story, adding college girls in his car before about canary bird.
"I've been wondering about all this," Bannister said. "There's no use in my talking to the woman. She's like a clam. McNeal anything out of her either she's made up her mind not to have anything to do with the police."
"But if you know why she'd tell you what it is the other night—or if she's the thing."
"YOU mean," Parker said slowly, "you to go to see Melvina. You want me to ask her. Oh, but I don't really know her."
"You know her better than the rest of us," Bannister said. "And what she knows you. Everyone knows who the Coleman girl is."
It wasn't easy, but finally Bannister and Parker Coleman agreed to the next day or two he would out what he could learn. "But it won't do any good," warned Bannister. "I don't know anything about business. As a detective wash-out."
"You'd like to have murder case solved, would you?" "Sure I would!" "Then this is your help."
They finished the meal for half an hour longer and talking. Presently said, "Let's go back and see McNeal. Never can tell what has happened in a hurry. Back on the highway shot the motor up to it. It reached 58, wavered, made 60. Then it linged nister glanced at his watch. "That's all right," was reassured. Parker enjoyed speed but he confidence and skill.
Overhead the night white pavement stretched them and here and there from the road, a lighter Bannister, lost in thought noticed when the road for a winding incline. He aware of the dark oblie up on their right until Coleman's cry.

HAIL THE CHIEF!

Here comes the World's Laugh-leader!

Bearskins are put into moth-balls ... when Winter hits the North Pole!

OF COURSE, we're having fun. But how else can we make you understand the warmth and comfort in HANES Wonderwear? Words won't ever tell you. You've got to slide your feet through the fleecy legs ... pull the sleeves onto your arms ... button up and get out where your breath turns to smoke and your nostrils pinch with the cold. Will your knees knock and your flesh creep? ... not while you're inside HANES! And remember this: You can trust the sizes on HANES labels. For HANES is knit and cut two ways—to the trunk-measure as well as the chest! It fits without hitching or itching—or clutching at the crotch and armpits. Buttons, cuffs, seams are sewed to last the life of the fabric. Stock-up for a warm Winter with HANES Wonderwear. P. H. Hanes Knitting Co., Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

Frank B. Stoker and Miss Nellie Teague Marry At Abilene
 Marriage of Miss Nellie Teague of Snyder and Frank B. Stoker of Eastland was solemnized at Abilene, Tuesday evening, in the home of the Rev. C. A. Powell, pastor of the University Baptist church. Rev. Powell officiated for the ring ceremony, witnessed by only Buck Howell, Simmons university student, and Katherine Powell, friend of the couple.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoker went from Abilene to the Stoker ranch between Eastland and Breckenridge to make their home.

Mrs. Stoker, member of a well known ranch family near Snyder, was married in a pearly blue dress with maline cocktail hat and gray accessories.

"The Perfect Fool" In Perfect Talkie
 For the first and only time this year you will be given an opportunity to see and hear Ed Wynn on the talking screen when "The Chief" opens today at the Lyric Theatre, heralded as Wynn's greatest talking picture entertainment.

The infectious giggle, the hilarious "So-o-o-o-o-o," the screeningly funny stories that have made Wynn internationally famous as "the silliest man in America"—all these will be heard when Wynn steps out of his radio invisibility and appears on the screen.

To many, this will be their first glimpse of a personality who ranks with Will Rogers and Marie Dressler as one of America's outstanding humorists. For a score of years Wynn has been one of the country's premiere funsters.

See Him and Hear Him
 There was a wave of indignation when he disappeared after one of the most astonishing and successful radio careers in history. It will be good news to millions that he is going back on the air this fall, and that in the meantime they will have an opportunity to see as well as hear him via the talking screen.

The picture was made at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in California. Dorothy Mackaill, whose loveliness has adorned many successful screen plays, appears opposite Wynn. Charles "Chic" Sale, himself a comedy star in his own right, contributes to the fun. William (Stage) Boyd, Effie Ellsler and C. Henry Gordon have prominent roles.

"The Chief" is said to be more than an aggregation of Wynn funny stories. It is a narrative of the hilarious adventures that lifted a simple Bowery boy to local fame and won him the affections of a torch singer. During the course of the picture Wynn cracks more than 100 new jokes.

Why the "knees" on automobiles? Haven't they been crawling downtown long enough? What the autos do need is a pair of shoulders, to shove their way through jams.
