Ticket-writer not ticketed when failure to yield causes mishap

A Pampa Police Department lieutenant, known in the city for his prodigious ticket-writing, was not issued a ticket by the Texas Highway Patrol Wednesday afternoon after failing to yield the right-of-way in the police unit he was driving, which collided with a Southwestern Bell Telephone truck at a Pampa intersection.

At about 3:35 p.m. Wednesday, city police were called to the scene of a two-vehicle accident at the intersection of Charles and Harvester Streets, involving Lt. Preston E. Bailey, 65, driving a Pampa Police Department patrol unit, and Rabon Daniel Mouhot, 27, of 1028 E. Francis, driving a 1976 van, owned by Southwestern Bell Telephone. No injuries were reported in the mishap.

Texas Highway Patrol Trooper John James said Bailey was traveling south on Charles when a Chevrolet Camaro, violating a traffic law, passed him. Bailey turned the police unit north to follow and stop the vehicle, the trooper said.

James said Bailey told him he did not see the telephone company van when he passed through the intersection.

Mouhot said he realized the police unit was coming into the intersection and hit his brakes. Bailey apparently also realized too late that another vehicle was coming and braked. The two vehicles slid into each other in the center of the intersection. James said he would not issue a citation to Bailey, who he said was at fault for failing to yield right of way to the oncoming vehicle.

"There's no need to give a ticket when both parties agree who is at fault and have come to an agreement on who will pay for the damages," James said.

The trooper said he would do the same, even if the person at fault was not a law enforcement officer.

The city will be paying for all damage in the accident. Chief of Police J. J. Ryzman said today he had not received all damage estimates on the police patrol unit. He said the vehicle will be repaired and put back in use.

City joins Energas rate protest

Pampa city officials will be traveling to Lubbock tonight to join city officials throughout West Texas in a meeting on the $18.5 million rate increase request submitted by Energas, the city's natural gas supplier.

City Manager Mack Wofford said city officials will be meeting at 7 p.m. tonight in the Emergency Operations Center in the basement of Lubbock City Hall.

Wofford said if the meeting is conducted like similar meetings on utility rate increases, the representatives of cities attending will plan a course of action to take regarding the increase. He said a steering committee of various city officials will probably be selected to study the company's rate request. The committee will then decide on whether or not to employ a consultant, he added.

The city manager said 63 cities in West Texas will be affected if the rate request is okayed by the Public Utilities Commission in Austin. Pampa and Panhandle are two cities in the North Texas Panhandle which have been picked out for rate increases by the natural gas company.

Energas spokesmen have said the increase will up the average residential customer charge for 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas by $63 — or from $340 to $403. About 180,000 customers will be affected by the increase.

Revenues for the company will be hiked by $18.5 million annually, the company says.

Wofford said a resolution postponing action on the rate increase is the only action taken by Pampa City Commissioners concerning Energas's request.

Reagan signing reverses government course

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan today reversed the course of government with the stroke of a pen by signing into law the largest tax and spending cuts in American history.

By placing his signature on the legislation in an outdoor ceremony at his secluded mountaintop ranch, Reagan achieved the No. 1 goal of his first six months in office.

The new laws slash planned federal spending on domestic programs by an estimated $130.5 billion over the next three years and reduce individual and business income taxes by $74.9 billion through fiscal 1986 — the cure Reagan prescribed to revitalize the nation's economy.

Federal income tax rates will be cut 25 percent over 33 months, beginning Oct. 1, when the amount withheld from most workers' paychecks will drop about 5 percent.

Additional 10 percent reductions in withholding will be made next July and in July 1983.

Starting in 1985, personal tax rates, the standard deduction and the $1,000-per-person exemption will be adjusted each year to help offset inflation.

Seventy-five reporters, photographers and television cameramen were assembled for the signing ceremony at Reagan's 688-acre ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains, his first public appearance since he began a four-week vacation last Thursday.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the president's top priority after he returns to the White House next month will be "to make the economic program work."

He also is promising further budget cuts and plans to meet next week with budget director David A. Stockman to begin plotting those reductions.

The legislation being signed today set a federal budget of about $700 billion for fiscal year 1982, $35.2 billion lower than the spending plan submitted by former President Carter before he left office in January.

It reduces spending for Social Security by $2.2 billion, mostly by eliminating the $122-a-month minimum benefit. Food stamps are cut $1.7 billion and employment training $4.6 billion.

It also reduces by $11.6 billion the government's authority to enter into contracts to build low-income subsidized housing.

Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, has called the Reagan budget "the most monumental and historic turnaround in fiscal policy that has ever occurred."

The legislation cutting taxes is equally staggering.

Three-quarters of the cuts will go to individuals, mostly through rate reductions averaging about 25 percent at each income level.

For a typical family of four with one earner and a $20,000 income, the tax reduction will be about $25 this year, $228 in 1982, $371 in 1983 and $464 in 1984. By the time the bill is fully effective in 1984, the family's tax liability will have dropped to $1,549 from the current $2,013.

Business will get general tax relief totaling $152.8 billion through 1986. An additional $20.4 billion is earmarked as incentives to savings and $11.8 billion is tailored specifically for oil producers and royalty owners.

Easing of regulations draws protest

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is drawing cries of protest from consumer, environmental and women's groups over its broadest attack yet on government regulations governing everything from sex discrimination in sports and jobs to help for the handicapped.

Vice President George Bush announced Wednesday that 30 more rules have been targeted for possible elimination or easing in response to 2,500 individual suggestions for regulatory relief. That swells the administration's regulation "hit list" to 91.

"It's another signal to big business that there will be no law and order applied to them under the Reagan administration," consumer advocate Ralph Nader said. "It's just another installment in withdrawing the health and safety protections for the American people that have been in place for years."

Women's groups were particularly unhappy with the review of regulations prohibiting sex discrimination in school athletic programs and sexual harassment by employers.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, called the review "outrageous" and said NOW would "make sure that the message gets out to women and girls that this administration, under the guise of trying to simplify, is really taking away women's rights."

The Education Department's "Title IX" rules enforce a 9-year-old law that bans federal aid to the country's 16,000 public school districts and 3,000 colleges if their sports programs discriminate against women. Because of the law, schools have been upgrading women's athletics.

Foreign controllers call off world boycott

By BRIAN FRIEDMAN
Associated Press Writer

The International Federation of Air Traffic Controllers Associations decided today not to call a worldwide action in sympathy with striking American controllers, at least for now.

Portuguese controllers who had planned a boycott of U.S. flights called it off.

IFATCA President Harry Henschler told reporters in Amsterdam that he hoped his group's gesture would prompt President Reagan to reopen negotiations with the U.S. controllers.

A boycott by the Portuguese controllers — announced earlier today and then canceled after the IFATCA action — would have clogged North Atlantic air traffic over Gander, Newfoundland, with rerouted flights by shutting down the control tower in the Azores Islands that handles the southern trans-Atlantic air route.

Henschler said IFATCA's executive board would recommend postponing any international steps in support of the U.S. controllers until Aug. 22, when delegates from the 61 member groups will meet "if required" in Amsterdam.

The Portuguese controllers had announced in Lisbon a one-week boycott on handling all flights to and from the United States to support their striking U.S. counterparts. Their boycott would have begun Sunday at midnight Lisbon time (6 p.m. EDT).

After Canadian air controllers returned to work from their sympathy boycott, overnight flights to Europe took off close to schedule from New York, prompting officials on both sides of the Atlantic to predict a "normal schedule" today.

There were some delays Wednesday on flights from Europe to the United States and hundreds of would-be travelers spent the night sleeping where they could at London's Heathrow Airport, but the problems were expected to clear up quickly.

"By tomorrow morning, assuming the lanes stay open, we should be down to a normal schedule" across the North Atlantic, U.S. Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis said Wednesday. He said delays of only a half-hour are foreseen today.

The flight zone "has opened up again and it is our feeling that we will be getting things back to normal," said Gerald Fitzgerald, operations manager at Kennedy International Airport, the nation's busiest handler of international flights. On a normal day, 120 jets depart over the North Atlantic from the airport.

Trans-Atlantic travel was thrown into havoc Monday and thousands of passengers were stranded when Canadian controllers refused to handle flights to or from the United States, claiming that a strike by American controllers had made the U.S. air traffic system unsafe. Many flights were canceled and there were lengthy delays on others.

The Canadian controllers agreed on Wednesday to end the boycott, in return for an inquiry into the safety question. U.S. authorities deny that the system is unsafe.

Jean-Luc Pepin, Canada's minister of transport, had begun actions that could have led to $5,000 fines, job suspensions and firings against the Canadian controllers. More than 25 controllers were suspended.

Lewis said domestic air service remained at about three-fourths of normal as the strike by members of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization over wages and working conditions entered its 11th day today.

Although Lewis said the lengthy delays for international fliers had abated, he also said there was the possibility of some disruption of trans-Atlantic flights this weekend if Portuguese controllers carry out a planned boycott of flights to and from the U.S. that go over the Azores.

Spanish controllers voted to refuse clearance to U.S.-bound flights, but their boycott is not in effect yet. Australian controllers were seeking a court injunction to stop flights to the United States. British controllers meet Friday to consider action.

In New York, meanwhile, PATCO President Robert Poli said in a federal court deposition that a fund of $2.8 million could not be used to pay millions of dollars in fines levied against the union. He denied in court that it was a strike fund and said the union's benefit fund "is paid to workers who are suspended or dismissed."

Outside the courtroom, however, Poli told cheering PATCO supporters: "The money in the strike fund belongs to the members. It is not an asset of the union."

Poli had been ordered to appear by U.S. District Judge Thomas Platt to answer questions from the Air Transport Association of America, a group representing 32 airlines.

Carson County DA says officers fired shot killing ranch foreman

A 31-year-old ranchhand in Carson County was shot accidentally early Tuesday by law enforcement officers who thought the man was a fleeing fugitive, Carson County District Attorney David McCoy said today.

James C. Grandstaff, foreman of the 6666 Ranch, was killed early Tuesday morning when he went to aid law enforcement officers who were involved in a chase with an Oklahoma fugitive that ended near Grandstaff's ranchhome.

Grandstaff was mistaken for the fleeing fugitive," Carson County District Attorney David McCoy said today.

Ballistic tests on the bullets taken from the body of Grandstaff are being analyzed to determine which officer fired the fatal shots. The tests had not been returned to the investigators as of press time today.

"From the information I have received from officers and friends, it appears that Grandstaff got into his pickup by his ranch house on the 6666 Ranch to aid police officers he apparently saw searching near his home," McCoy said.

"The police had been chasing Lonnie Cox of Elk City, Okla., who was in his pickup, speeding through the streets of Borger and eventually into Carson County. Cox had been shooting at the police officers and continued to flee from their pursuing vehicles," McCoy said.

"For some reason, Cox drove near a pump station one-half to one-quarter mile north of the Grandstaff ranch house and left a .45-caliber gun, a shoulder holster and two knives at this location," McCoy said.

"Grandstaff got out of his pickup to aid in the search and the police thought this was the bad guy. The police shouted, 'Raise your hands,' but Grandstaff apparently thought they were talking to the fugitive and did not comply. Grandstaff reached down for something and the police started shooting."

"The actual fugitive was one-quarter to one-half mile away when the police started firing," McCoy said.

"There is no way we will ever know the exact circumstances, but remember this — the police knew that Grandstaff heard the loud speaker, and they also knew that there were guns in the fugitive's pickup, and the fugitive had been shooting at them during the chase," McCoy said.

Friends said Grandstaff knew the police were out there, and he ran to get his gun to help them. Unfortunately, the police did not know that Grandstaff was there to aid them," McCoy said.

"Charges against Cox at this time include aggravated assault with a firearm on a peace officer and deadly assault with a firearm against a peace officer," McCoy said.

"The maximum penalty for these felony offenses are ten years in prison and a $5,000 fine. If there have been any prior charges, he (Cox) could possibly get more; but so far, I don't know of any. We do know that he was in a mental hospital twice — and he may be headed that way again," McCoy said.

"It is a sad thing," McCoy said. The case will go to the Carson County grand jury on Aug. 24 and to the Hutchinson County grand jury on Aug. 28.

US-Soviet exchange at Geneva

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The Reagan administration told the Geneva disarmament conference today that the neutron weapons being produced in the United States "are designed not to make nuclear war more thinkable, but to make aggression less so."

However, the Soviet Union said the U.S. decision to build the neutron weapon could "not fail to complicate" disarmament talks, and that "it is difficult to find any justification whatever... (for this) new qualitative leap in the arms race."

The neutron weapon produces twice the deadly radiation of a conventional nuclear weapon but less than a tenth as much explosive power, heat and fallout. Thus the neutron weapon, a small warhead that can be placed on artillery shells, can kill people without inflicting intolerable damage to buildings.

The U.S. ambassador, Charles C. Flowerree, said the United States "categorically rejects" the argument that deployment of the neutron weapon, which he labeled "preeminently an anti-tank device," would make it easier to cross the threshold into nuclear war.

He told the 40-nation committee that the West was forced to react to the reality of Soviet armament.

Reagan's speed surprised controllers

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Air traffic controllers say they weren't surprised by the toughness of President Reagan's response to their illegal strike — only by the speed with which he moved. And most of them also say they expect that they and the administration will come to terms — eventually.

"I think it's only a matter of time before there will be a very definite breakthrough," said Bob Cameron, 35, of Norfolk, Va. "The economic pressures will be the key to the termination of this whole thing."

The controllers walked off the job at 7 a.m. on Monday, Aug. 3, defying court orders and risking fines and jail. At 11 a.m. the same day, Reagan gave them 48 hours to return to work or be fired. Most controllers ignored the threat. The government started mailing dismissal letters a week ago Wednesday and took the position that there was no more strike; there were merely empty jobs to be filled.

"We were prepared to be fired, or we wouldn't have walked out to begin with," said Ben Grimes, 36, of Charlotte, N.C. "We were surprised by the quickness of it all."

Jim O'Connor, 35, of Hanover Park, Ill., a Chicago suburb, said the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization "anticipated everything that happened."

O'Connor added, however: "On the first day of a strike to walk out and fire 12,000 people is unheard of. It was a mistake and unfair. I'm not surprised because he (Reagan) is a conservative Republican and probably a bit of a reactionary."

Larry Hartman, 33, of Tucson, Ariz., wasn't quite so prepared. "We had expected some of the things they were going to do. We didn't expect all of them," he said. "We didn't think they were going to fire us and then throw us in jail and then fine us."

Bob Westra, 33, who, like O'Connor, worked at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, said Reagan's action strengthened the determination of the strikers. "When they unloaded all the big guns on us and gave us the Wednesday deadline, they really did us a favor. NO ONE EXPECTED THE PRESIDENT TO JOIN THE FRACAS SO QUICKLY..."

The issues, according to Westra and other strikers, are not monetary, although PATCO demanded a pay hike of $10,000 a year for controllers who earned an average of $33,000 annually.

Catching falling stars substitute for comet study

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Scientists who found even the cosmos subject to whims of the economy say they have a poor man's alternative to an ambitious international "flyby" of Halley's Comet scrubbed by budget cutbacks.

Johnson Space Center Scientists wanted to study Halley's Comet — due in 1986 to streak past earth for the first time in 76 years — because they believe comets may contain material dating back to the origin of the solar system.

But one scientist says they may find a cheaper, if less effective, peek at a comet in a meteor shower that has been pelting the earth's atmosphere in recent nights.

High-altitude aircraft are capturing particles of cosmic dust from the meteor shower, specks Johnson Space Center scientist Uel S. Clanton said he hopes prove to be part of another ancient comet.

"If we aren't going to have a Halley's Comet mission, what we are doing may be a poor man's way of sampling a comet," said Clanton, curator of the JSC's still-under-construction Cosmic Dust Laboratory.

"I think the meteor shower going on now will add little to our collection of cosmic dust," he said.

Clanton said he designed special dust collectors — about the size of a cigarette package — that stick under the wing of a high-altitude airplane.

The one used in this project is a WB57-F operated by the Department of Energy from nearby Ellington Air Force Base.

The collectors open at 60,000 feet or higher, Clanton said. When the plane begins to descend, they close up again, to shut out pollutants and other earthly specks that would contaminate the sample. The collector is covered with a thin layer of oil that traps the tiny particles.

Once the collectors are returned to earth, a powerful electron microscope is needed to spot the particles, Clanton said.

"A big one would be, say, from three-thousandths to five-thousandths of an inch," he said.

Clanton's collectors have sampled about 1.2 million cubic meters of air in 65 flying hours, he says. Before his study, only about 900,000 cubic meters of air had been sampled over ten years.

He is not positive he is collecting dust from a comet, but Clanton says his sample is far different from the dust contained in the average meteorite that strikes earth. It is much more fragile and porous, he says.

Clanton said some of the dust particles have been sent to the University of Washington for analysis until the JSC's own laboratory begins operating in mid-September.

The JSC lab is specially designed to prevent contamination of the cosmic dust. He says it will be about 100 times cleaner than the lab where the moon rocks are studied.

MASKED MAN. For more than a quarter of a century the Red Raider, a rider dressed in scarlet and black and mounted on a black steed, has been a colorful tradition at Texas Tech University. The masked rider will appear at the Gray County 4-H Horse Show Aug. 21-22 in Pampa.

County 4-H Rodeo set

The Gray County 4-H Rodeo will be held Friday, Aug. 21, and Saturday, Aug. 22, at the Top O' Texas Rodeo Arena, east of Pampa.

The Youth Rodeo will feature cowboys and cowgirls between the ages of 9 and 18, competing in three different age groups and nine different events. The performances will be conducted each evening at 7:30 p.m. There will be a Heading and Heeling at 2 Saturday afternoon.

Since 4-H is a family affair, there will be no gate admission. Programs will be sold for $2 each with proceeds from these going to help fund the various projects throughout the year.

One program each night will hold a special surprise for someone in the audience as a $100 pair of boots from Wayne's Western Wear and a $100 gift certificate from The Kountry Store will be awarded.

Proceeds from the programs, belt buckle donations and the rodeo itself will help fund the Gray County 4-H Awards Banquet in October, help sponsor 4-Hers who wish to go to various 4-H camps and various 4-H projects throughout the year as need arises.

Anyone who has attended a Youth Rodeo knows these contestants put their hearts into doing their best in an event. The rodeo stock will be furnished by Bill Hext of Canadian.

East, West Germany observe anniversary of Berlin Wall

BERLIN (AP) — "Do you remember?" says the TV announcer's voice. Shadowy film clips show thin, elderly women leaping from second-story windows to the upstretched arms of a crowd below.

With such programs and with speeches, parades and memorial services, Germans both east and west of the Berlin Wall observed the 20th anniversary today of the communist barrier.

As they do every year, thousands of workers were to parade in East Berlin and hear a celebratory address by Communist Party chief Erich Honnecker, who supervised the construction of the wall.

East German newspapers have been publishing daily interviews with officials hailing the wall as an "anti-fascist protection" that prevented war during a period of East-West tension.

In West Berlin, wreaths were to be placed at points along the whitewashed wall where black crosses memorialize 71 escaping East Germans who leaped to death from houses on the border or were shot by border guards.

In West Germany, government officials called for improved ties between the two nations despite recent setbacks, including the doubling last winter of fees for visitors to the East.

"To this day, the wall has not lost its inhumanity," said Egon Franke, the West German minister for inner-German relations, in a statement. "It remains a symbol for the division of Germany."

East German militiamen threw up a barbed-wire barrier between the Soviet occupation zone of Berlin and the French, British and American zones during the early morning hours of Aug. 13, 1961, to stem a flood of workers escaping from communist-ruled East Germany.

The year before, 150,000 had fled, and West Berlin was the easiest route. With Cold War tensions mounting, escapes were averaging 1,800 a day. Many were trained technicians and skilled workers, imperiling the limping East German economy.

Later the barrier was replaced by a 100-mile wall ringing the western half of divided Berlin with tank traps, watch towers and automatic machine guns. It reduced escapes into West Berlin to a trickle.

Most newspapers published long articles about the anniversary. West German television, which can be picked up in nearly three-fourths of East Germany, scheduled several hours of programs showing the construction of the wall and efforts of people to deal with its existence.

Next Pampa Air Base reunion plans made

About 80 persons attended the Ninth Army Air Field Reunion of officers, enlisted and civilian personnel at the Pampa Air Base during World War II held here Friday and Saturday.

Reunion officials attributed the small turnout to the air controllers strike and illness of members.

Colonel Harold Ottaway of Dodge City, Kan., was guest speaker at the annual reunion. He spoke on the threat posed to the nation by international corporate conglomerates, emphasizing the need of citizens to support President Ronald Reagan.

During the business meeting of the organization, plans were made for the 10th reunion with a memorial plaque to be erected at the entrance of the Air Base on East U. S. 60. Bumper stickers advertising the reunion to be held here in August 1982 will be mailed in January to more than 400 persons throughout the United States. A concentrated drive will be conducted throughout the coming year in an effort to locate more Pampa Army Air Field veterans.

Officers and directors for the coming year are: President - Quenton Nolte; First Vice President - Roy Kay; Second Vice President - Blake Laramore; Treasurer - James Baird; Secretary - Mildred Pierce; and Executive Secretary - Nina Spoonmore.

THAT'S DETERMINATION. Karen Kline of Indiana doesn't let the soggy weather stop her from riding her bicycle. Wrapped in a rain-proof poncho, she braves the mists to reach her destination. Pampa was soaked with slow rains equalling more than one and one-half inches in needed - moisture during the past four days. However, warmer temperatures and drier weather is in the forecast for the weekend.

Commission head resents allegations

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Evans Wentz, director of the State Commission for the Blind, says he resents the allegations of mismanagement leveled against him this week by a group of blind Texans.

In a three-page statement issued Wednesday, Wentz said the charges were based on "misinformation or imagination."

"The implications that there has been misfeasance in the management of the financial affairs of the commission is deeply resented," Wentz said.

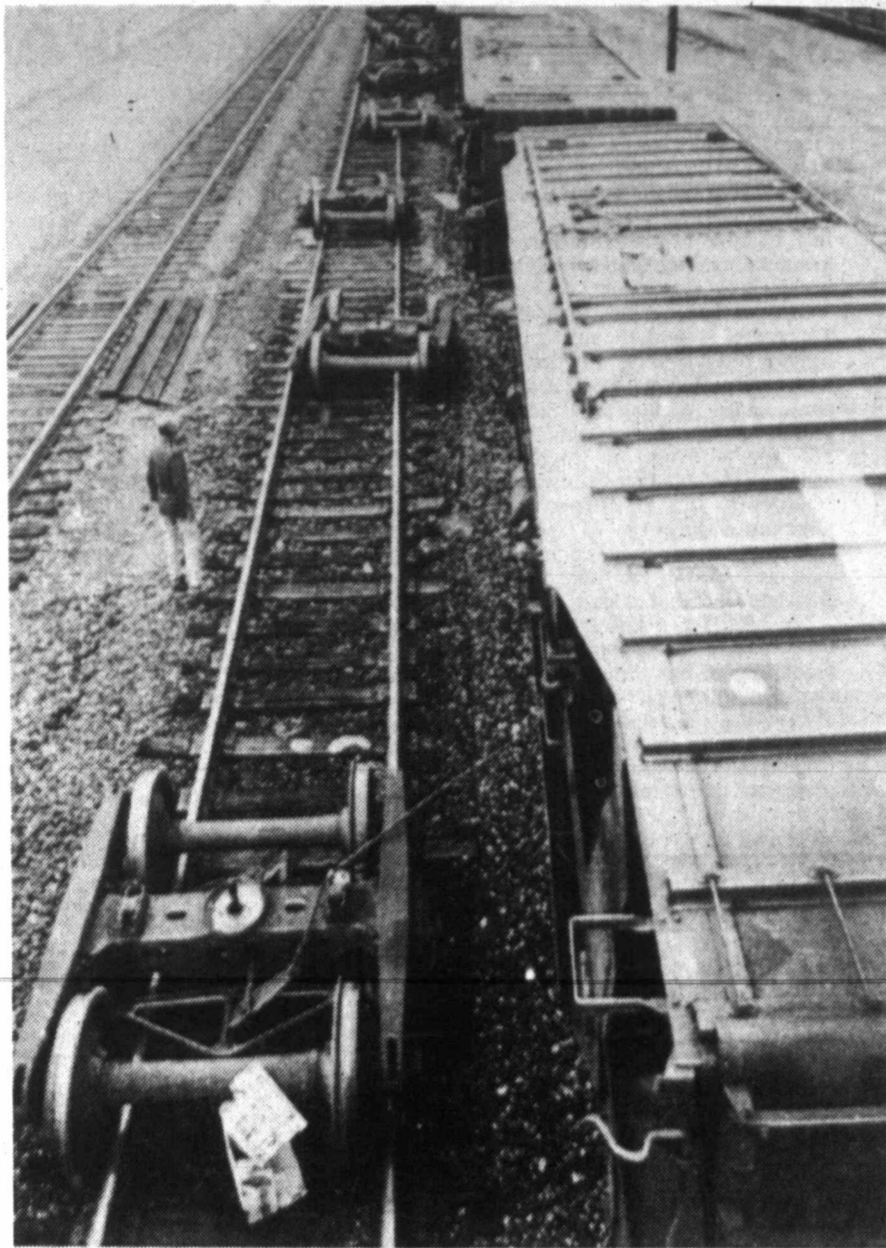

At a Monday news conference and rally, a group of blind Texans claimed commission services to the blind have decreased because of Wentz' mismanagement.

Wentz disagreed, saying, "In fact, services have increased and, we believe, are improved."

The director listed statistics which he said showed a "substantial increase in funds spent on clients." During the same period, he said, administrative costs declined.

Leaders at the news conference and rally complained that commission employees were not trained in working with the blind.

Wentz said, "All the commission's staff members who train and serve clients are trained professionals in the field of blindness."

Mother charges homemaking textbooks are sexually oriented

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Homosexuality and humanism are pushed in several homemaking texts offered for use in Texas high schools, the state Textbook Committee has been told.

Publishers denied they were pushing anything but information and questions to get teen-agers to thinking about matters that are or will be important in their lives.

The committee enters its fourth day of hearings today on texts for earth science, homemaking and elementary school social studies classes.

Janie Riddle, a Houston mother of three children, singled out Bennett Publishing Co.'s "Finding My Way" for criticism.

She read from the book a discussion of homosexual physical exchanges and said:

"Trying to softsoap wrong does not change things. I don't send my children to school to learn the how-tos and why-nots of homosexual behavior."

Mrs. Riddle, who is pregnant, also protested a statement in the book that "making a baby with no one to care for it is immoral."

"I object to a book on homemaking pushing abortion," she said.

Bennett responded in writing that "understanding one's sexuality is important in personal development and relations with others, both of which are also concerns of home economics."

The publisher said the book "recognizes that people are different and gives them the freedom to follow their own consciences. The petitioners (Mrs. Riddle) would deny the students those rights."

Donald Orloff, a Houston mechanical engineer, said

American Book Co.'s "Earth Science," a high school geology text, offers evidence for evolution over billions of years while ignoring evidence for a special creation less than 50,000 years old.

Martin worried about family safety

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — A state representative wounded by a shotgun blast says he won't travel to Austin to answer any grand jury questions about the shooting until authorities give him and his family round-the-clock protection.

"I told them I was not coming back unless they come and get me, provide me with 24-hour security guards and have someone stay with my wife," State Rep. Mike Martin said Wednesday after he refused to appear before an Austin grand jury investigating the shooting.

The 29-year-old freshman legislator who was shot Aug. 1 as he stepped out of his car in front of his Austin mobile home, was subpoenaed to appear Tuesday, said Travis County Assistant District Attorney H. Allen Hill.

Hill, who is in charge of the special crimes division, said authorities had not decided what to do about Martin's refusal to comply with the subpoena.

"When I spoke with him yesterday he certainly didn't request any protection," Hill said Wednesday.

Martin, who wants to require "creation-science" lessons in public schools, said he was provided "very little" security when he went to Austin last weekend to vote on congressional redistricting.

He said his failure to obey the subpoena was "a pure and simple case of I don't want to go back to Austin."

Martin said he has no qualms about discussing his testimony under oath "if they don't mind coming here."

He said when he told officers last Friday he would not return to Austin again until they found a suspect, one of the officers handed him the subpoena and said, "We will see if this will get you back."

He said the shooting has left him a scared man who has trouble sleeping and nightmares.

"The whole thing has made me gun shy," he said.

"It is terrifying to step outside in the dark all alone, except for my aide," he said. "Just knowing who shot me and why would help a lot."

Martin received an elbow wound and his car was riddled with 12-gauge shotgun pellets in the early-morning shooting. Officers say they have no suspect or motive.

Martin said he was not sure why officers want him to appear before the grand jury unless it is to determine whether to keep five or six officers assigned to the case.

If that is the reason, Martin said, they could make a decision without his appearance.

"To me, it (the shooting) is open and shut. I was walking out from my car and boom," he said.

He said officers found no reason to suspect a quarrel over a girlfriend or gambling debts after investigating his background.

"The press wants to find a girlfriend in there, or a Mafia connection; when it was probably a case of mistaken identity. Probably there is a guy holed up somewhere scared to death, and saying, 'Of all the people in the world, why did I shoot this one?'" he said.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Would all speaking one tongue insure peace?

By OSCAR COOLEY
If all the people of the world spoke one language, would they get along better? Would there be less conflict?
Some have assumed they would, and over the last century much effort has been put forth to construct a language that all could easily learn and use. Best known of such "constructed" languages is Esperanto, which was dreamed up in 1887 by a Polish oculist, Dr. Ludwlg Zamenhof. It got its name from the penname with which he signed his book, Doctor Esperanto.
Esperanto did not exactly take the world by storm, as Dr. Zamenhof hoped, but it nevertheless has spread amazingly. According to the Universal Esperanto Association, Rotterdam, there are over a million fluent Esperantists in various countries. More than 100 periodicals in the language are published, and radio stations in China, the Vatican, and elsewhere broadcast in Esperanto. It is said that in Poland, birthplace of Esperanto, one can go into any retail store and find there someone who can converse with you in Esperanto.

Esperanto is reputed to be quite simple and easy to learn. It consists largely of short words, or morphemes, to which various prefixes and suffixes are added to take other related words. All the nouns end in o, all the adjectives in a, all adverbs in e. There are only 16 grammatical rules, and these have no exceptions.
One rather serious drawback to Esperanto — and to any artificially constructed language — is that it lacks a literature. Only with long usage, over time, does a language acquire a literature. The stories told, the songs and poems sung, in English have endeared the language to us who use it.
However, this drawback may be overcome. Books of poetry in Esperanto have been published and classics, including the Bible, have been translated into that tongue.
The need for a universal language has become more apparent since the organizing of the United Nations and the European Common Market. Translating all the documents of the United Nations into each of the many languages of the member nations is a prodigious job. At the Common Market, where seven languages are spoken, interpretation costs add up to more than $23 million a year. It is a laborious way to do business.

People cling to their native tongue even when they migrate to a land where a different tongue is spoken. So many people who use the Spanish language have migrated to Southwestern United States that there is pressure to have Spanish spoken in the schools. Some Americans think it should be. On the other hand, English has always been the standard tongue in the United States, and immigrants have assumed that they or certainly their children must learn to use English here.
Aware of the attachment that people have for their native language, Esperantists do not advocate giving up such tongues. Rather, they offer Esperanto as a universal second language, to be used whenever people who have different native tongues are communicating.
They point out what a boon it would be to travelers and to multinational business firms. It might facilitate international trade to such an extent that the increased exchange would considerably increase the world's wealth.

Would it lessen differences between nations and make for peace? No one knows. Unfortunately, nations that use the same language have sometimes fought one another. America's war of independence is an example. But it seems logical that peace would be safer in a world where nations could read one another's publications and converse without interpreters.
The world's population is increasing, forcing people to live more closely together. This increases the danger of friction. Every nation wants to preserve its own life style. But it wants still more to preserve its own life. Wars with modern weaponry can snuff out a nation's life. The more folkways people have in common, the less likely they are to make war.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Thursday, Aug. 13, the 225th day of 1981. There are 140 days left in the year.
Today's highlight in history:
On Aug. 13, 1980 — one year ago — President Jimmy Carter was nominated by the Democratic Party to run for a second term.
On this date:
In 1521, Spanish Conqueror Hernando Cortez captured Mexico City from the Aztec Indians.
On 1624, France's Louis XIII named Cardinal Richelieu as his first minister.
In 1792, French revolutionaries imprisoned the royal family.
And in 1961, East Germany sealed off the border between East and West Berlin, closing the Brandenburg Gate, to halt the flight of refugees to the West.
Ten years ago: East Germany celebrated the tenth anniversary of the Berlin Wall with parades of groups that built it.
Five years ago: South Africa pledged support for the U.S. effort to bring about a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia.

Tax cuts and opportunities

Apparently the margin by which the watered-down Reagan tax cut proposal passed the House was a surprise even to White House strategists. On the eve of the showdown all sides were saying that it was too close to call, and one might have expected that if administration strategists were sure they had it in the bag they would have been trying to create a bandwagon effect rather than projecting an image of uncertainty.

What the vote demonstrates is that when Ronald Reagan talks plainly to the American people, he has great influence, so long as he seems to be making sense. Many congressmen, have heard from their purported party leaders about party discipline, heard also from their constituents. We don't know at this writing just how much horse-trading went on to secure some of the Boll Weevil votes. Given the president's ability as a communicator, such dealing as apparently occurred to secure the previous vote on the budget may not have been necessary.

The vote spotlighted the current disarray within the leadership of the Democratic party, and the difference between the party structures in the United States and some of the European democracies. In many European countries such wholesale defections by members of the "opposition" party would have been virtually unthinkable. Yet party discipline in the United States has never been as strong as in some other systems. The powers of incumbency are mighty, but most members of Congress know that they must face the people in two years. In its current state, the Democratic hierarchy has little to offer in the way of rewards and punishments, compared to the possibility of being voted out of office. A system in which parties are loose coalitions rather than tightly disciplined structures has its weaknesses as well as its strengths, but it does permit greater flexibility and a certain antic element of unpredictability that we find rather charming.

For the long run, the most important aspect of the tax bill may not be the immediate tax cut, but the indexing provision inserted by the Senate. The Reagan administration was at first reluctant about including indexing, which would adjust tax rates in accordance with inflation rates, eliminating "bracket creep" and the backdoor profits that government reaps from inflation. But the Senate demonstrated that it is politically feasible to go farther than the administration wanted to go in providing tax relief.

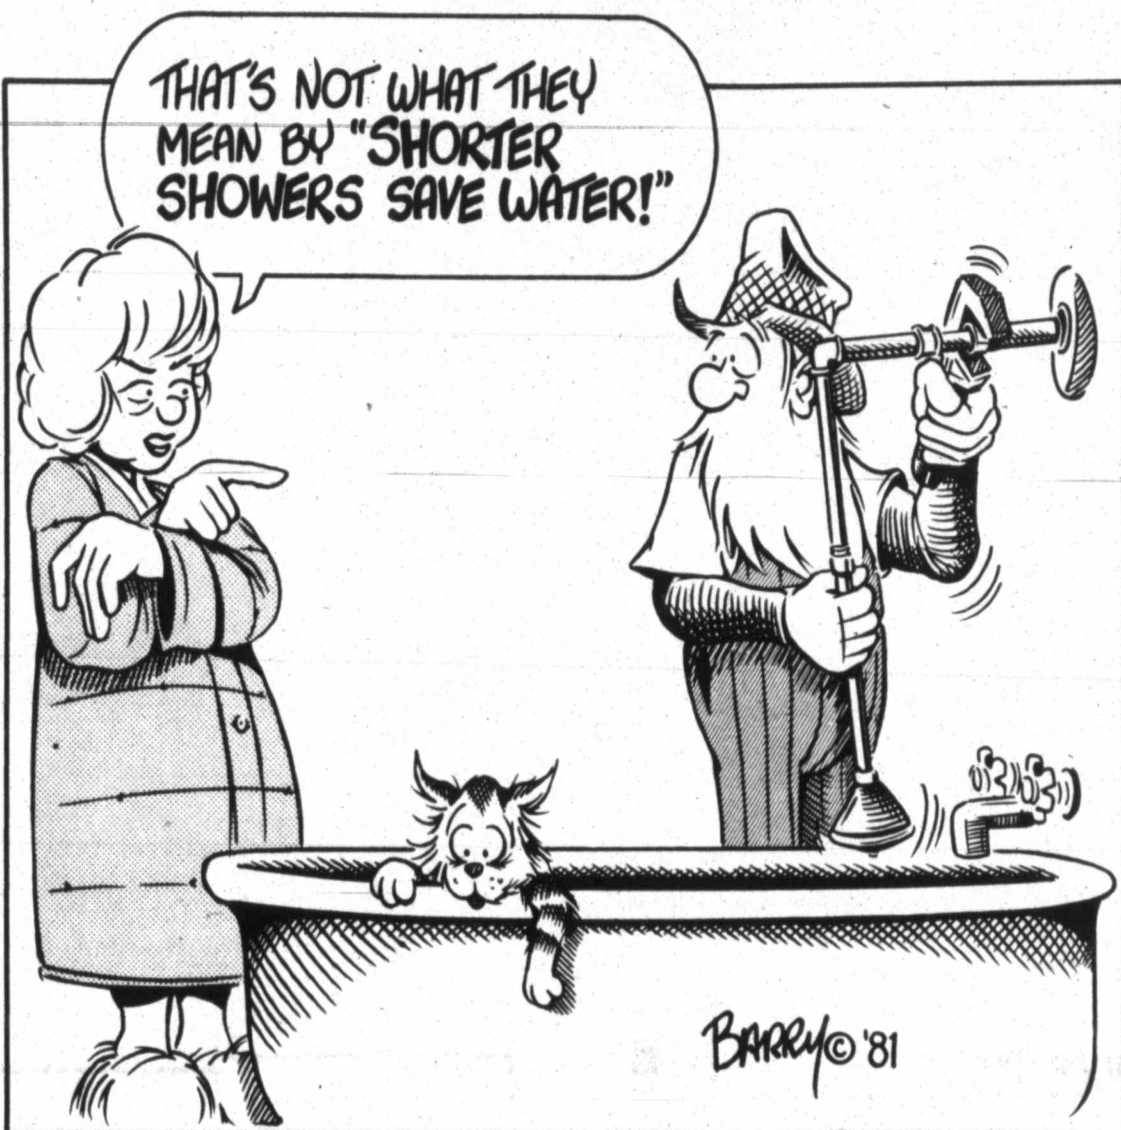

This vote, so obviously influenced by the voices of constituents, makes us all the more wary of all those public opinion polls that purported to show, with carefully worded questions, that Americans didn't really want a tax cut, seeking only to have the federal budget trimmed a bit. That notion has seemed so unlikely to us that we have long felt that only a politician or sociologist could have held to it without being embarrassed by its absurdity.

We hope the administration will not assume that it has accomplished all it can expect to accomplish now that it has won this victory. The vote on taxes should embolden the administration to seek even more comprehensive restructuring of the American government. The outright elimination of the Departments of Energy and Education comes to mind. The elimination of the Export-Import Bank and other indirect subsidies to American big business now appear as distinct possibilities. The elimination, or radical reduction, of government subsidies to agribusiness, and the outright abolition of a number of regulatory agencies should be on the program.

The most important weapon the administration has is the president himself. So long as he can be persuasive on national TV, which is to say so long as he makes sense and projects sincerity, he appears to have an authority with the American people that has been approached by few presidents in recent memory. He should use that authority to suggest fundamental changes and substantial reductions in the power and cost of government.

Tax cuts and budget cuts are important. But there are a thousand ways in which the dead hand of government holds back the creative and productive impulses of the American people. Reagan should make it his business to eliminate as many of these artificial barriers to progress as possible, moving society away from the notion that the government should manage the economy and toward the idea that the people, through their own voluntary decisions, should manage the economy, and their own lives, themselves.

That's a long-range goal, but recent events indicate that the people are much more ready for bold action than are most of the politicians and pundits. If Reagan can take even a few important first steps toward that goal, he will unleash a period of productivity and growth that will serve as a lasting legacy. Few presidents have had such an opportunity.

The terrorist threat

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN
The problem of international terrorism is worsening year by year. Moreover, it is a problem which directly affects American citizens. In 1980, Americans were the primary targets of international terrorism, with nearly two out of every five incidents involving U.S. citizens or property.
Given these facts, the Reagan administration was wise to place stress on terrorism and the role of the Soviet Union in training and aiding terrorists.
Now that the problem has been placed in proper focus by Secretary of State Haig, more attention should be directed to the prevention of terrorist actions and the handling of terrorist incidents in the United States.
To date, the United States has been spared the outrages that have afflicted West Germany and Italy. But there is growing concern that terrorist groups, including Palestinians and Latin American revolutionaries, will seek mass destruction targets in the United States.
The obvious targets of a terrorist campaign in the United States would be nuclear power stations. These have the greatest potential for destruction and for manipulation of public opinion — always a major aim of terrorist groups.

America's nuclear power stations weren't built with the possibility of terrorist attacks in mind. Obviously, much must be done to increase security at these installations. They aren't the only potential targets, however. Municipal waterworks are another likely target if terrorists become active here.
At the international level, the United States is increasingly well-prepared to deal with terrorist actions. The State Dept. is organized for cooperation with other countries.
The problem is on the homefront. Lines of authority in dealing with terrorist threats aren't clearcut. There is need of an overall plan for command and control of counter-terrorist forces in the event of an incident on the domestic scene. Federal, state and local forces need to develop contingency plans and work out joint procedures.

The Freedom of Information Act must be modified if the United States is to be protected against terrorist actions. At present, state and local police forces are denied the right to maintain files on revolutionary activists. This right must be restored. Law enforcement agencies can't operate in the dark. Intelligence is the key to deterrence of terrorists. Happily, Sens. D'Amato of New York and Hatch of Utah have introduced helpful legislation on FOIA.

Up to now we have had only a small number of terrorist actions on American soil, including the murder of American naval personnel in Puerto Rico and bombings by Puerto Rican terrorists in New York City. Common sense tells us that we should be prepared for more such incidents.

The free world has a major problem with terrorist networks. The Palestinian Liberation Movement is host to terrorists from all over Europe, Latin America and Japan. Separatist groups such as the Irish Republican Army cooperate with nihilist revolutionaries in Germany. The Italian Red Brigades use the Cuban connection and assist Turkish terrorists.

Cooperation among law enforcement agencies in the free world is essential to successful protection of democratic societies.

A death in the family

It is not easy to write an obituary for a newspaper. The death of a newspaper in any country is a tragedy. The passing of a very good newspaper is doubly so.
The "Washington Star" was a very good newspaper. It had some of the best writers in the business. It was lively, it was informative and it was honest. Because it was printed in the capital, it had a much greater impact on the nation than any paper of its size and circulation.
With its death many important voices have been stilled, voices that should be heard by those who make our laws and decide our destinies.
A newspaper is a very human thing. It has a heart, a soul, and a mind of its own. When you first hear the news of the death of a paper you think of the people who worked on it, loved it and brought it to life every day.
Their loss is incalculable. To many it is not just their livelihood that has been snuffed out — but a part of themselves. It's hard for someone who has not worked on a newspaper to understand how personal it becomes. To the employees, the newspaper they work for is family. To some their newspaper is the only family they have.
And so the death is a wrenching experience, the loss is greater than they imagine and a part of it remains with them for the rest of their lives.

The reader, though not as emotionally involved, also experiences a disquieting sense of loss. Something has gone out of his life too. The mourning period may be much shorter for the reader, but he or she knows instinctively that when a paper dies everyone is poorer.
There are no villains in the death of the "Washington Star." It died from natural economic causes.
For those of us who worked for the competition there is no joy in the "Star's" demise. The joy was picking up the "Star" every day and seeing what it was doing that was better, and forcing us to be better because they were so good at what they were doing.
Without a second newspaper, Washington will be a much quieter town — much too quiet for comfort.
When President Kennedy was assassinated Mary McGory, one of the paper's great writers, said to Pat Moynihan: "We'll never laugh again," and Moynihan said "We'll laugh again, Mary, but we'll never be young again."
It seems a fitting epitaph for the death of the Washington Star.

Polish reforms run counter to Leninism

The Democratic reforms within the Communist Party in Poland are a source of hope and optimism for all of Europe and for the world.
It was, after all, in Poland that World War II started in 1939. The country has been a battleground for ages, and its future is central to the future of East-West relations.
Poland has a history of domination by the Russian empire, and of efforts to break free. Moreover, unlike the Soviet union, Poland has a history of democratic experience. The country knew parliamentary government briefly during the 1920s. There is a tradition of freedom.
By contrast, the direction taken by Lenin in his emerging leadership of the Bolshevik faction of the Russian Social Democratic Party in the early years of this century was toward Asiatic centralism and total control from the top. Lenin's views prevailed and were given even more totalitarian effect by Stalin. In the Soviet Union today, it is an article of faith that the party controls the people, and the Kremlin controls the party.

Poland's party is breaking with the Russian tradition, and the effect of the heresy on Moscow cannot be overstated.
Only under the greatest duress have the Russians allowed the Poles to progress as far as they have toward democracy and self-government.
The Polish people have displayed courage in defying their Russian rulers. They must also display restraint to avoid a crushing reaction. The world is watching the performance as a circus audience watches a high-wire act — with admiration and apprehension.

Nerve gas bombs transferred under scrutiny

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah (AP) — The transfer of 128 lethal Weteve nerve gas bombs from Denver to the Utah desert went as well "as we could reasonably expect in terms of health and safety," according to Gov. Scott Matheson, an opponent of the move.

Sixteen iron pallets, each carrying eight nerve gas bombs, were transferred Wednesday as soldiers armed with M-16 rifles and jeeps carrying mounted machine guns kept watch.

Soldiers could be seen sitting atop the seven-foot-long bombs inside the trailers as more pallets were carefully moved from two Air Force C-141 Starlifters. The planes had carried the bombs from the Rocky Mountain Arsenal at Denver to Michael Army Airfield, 65 miles southwest of Salt Lake City.

"We are satisfied from our involvement that the efforts on the part of the military in moving the Weteves has reached as high a level as we could reasonably expect in terms of health and safety," Matheson said.

But the governor, who has opposed the transfer vigorously, added that he would be unable to breathe a final sigh of relief until the entire move is completed.

The Weteve bombs, along with 760 other bombs and three one-ton containers of GB nerve agent to be transferred from Colorado in similar operations over the next three weeks, will be trucked under guard to Tooele Army Depot for permanent storage in hundreds of igloo-shaped bunkers.

The depot, 35 miles southwest of Salt Lake City, already holds 122 million pounds of debilitating and lethal chemicals, one of the largest such caches in the free world.

The schedule for the 13 other flights and the truck movements to the depot will not be made public until after each plane step of the operation is completed. The Army said it is withholding the information for security and safety reasons. The same provisions were in effect for Wednesday's flights.

The Army said the teams were placed so one could reach a crash site anywhere along the 400-mile route within 30 minutes. The planes flew at 24,000 feet along a route selected to avoid passing over any cities or towns.

First business venture of kids a big success

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Who'd have thought that making gumball machines could earn a big profit — nearly a 274 percent return on invested capital after just five months?

Ask the B.G. Vending Co. of Denver, a bunch of high-school kids who did just that in their first venture in the American capitalist system.

"Free enterprise is great because anyone who has incentive and a goal and a dream can make it come true, if they just push," said Shani Kramer, vice president for manufacturing.

She and her 30 partners bought shares in the tiny company, purchased raw materials and hired workers to assemble and sell the gumball jars, kept the books, paid their taxes — and turned a tidy profit.

The kids who made B.G. Vending Co. work are among the 400,000 students nationwide who take part each year in the Junior Achievement program.

Miss Kramer and her partners from Arvada West High School in Denver are among 17 finalists competing here this week for national honors as the top Junior Achievers of 1981.

In the process, they and 3,300 other teen-agers are getting an opportunity to meet leading business executives and discuss capitalism with the men and women who make America work.

About 350 business executives came to Indiana University on Wednesday for the 38th annual National Junior Achievers Conference, mostly aboard corporate aircraft, for informal seminars with the youngsters.

"If we could build this up, get about 2 million high school kids going through this program, we'd have no problem in this country with what the general public feels toward business," said Roy Little, retired founder of Textron Industries and a Junior Achievement sponsor.

"Right now, you know, the general attitude isn't too good."

But among successful Junior Achievers, there's no doubt capitalism is OK.

Miss Kramer's attitude is typical: "You have to have competition to keep everybody working harder and harder to make themselves a success," she said. "Anybody can make something of themselves if they really want to."

Her company produced and sold bubble gum machines made out of fruit jars. The five officers were paid $2.50 an hour; regular employees got 40 cents an hour. And taxes — actually a contribution to the local Junior Achievement program — amounted to $100.

The final dividend was $9.60 a share. And the investors also got back the $3.50 they'd each put into the company.

Stripe free, Ivy trial continues

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — State Sen. Gene Stipe is a free man today, a three-time winner over the U.S. Justice Department, but Chickasha attorney Red Ivy, his former co-defendant, remains on trial.

Stipe, a McAlester attorney, and Ivy went on trial Monday on a two-count federal grand jury indictment alleging they had conspired to extort $17,000 from Oklahoma ex-convict John Lewis on the pretext that Stipe could use his political influence to block extradition proceedings against Lewis.

But U.S. District Judge Lee West halted the trial in mid-afternoon Wednesday and acquitted both men on the first count, which was a conspiracy-extortion count. West said the prosecution has failed to prove a conspiracy existed.

The judge then approved a prosecution motion to dismiss the second count — a wire fraud allegation — against Stipe, but prosecutors said they will continue with the wire fraud count against Ivy, and they announced they will subpoena Stipe as a witness.

Stipe walked out of federal court a free man Wednesday and renewed his long-standing charge that federal officials are guilty of "the most despicable conduct known to civilization by their false and fraudulent prosecution against me ... over a period of 13 years."

Only in 1968, when Stipe was acquitted of federal income tax evasion charges by a Muskogee jury, has the prosecution been able to complete its case. The last two times he has stood trial — both this year — judges have dismissed the charges in mid-trial because of insufficient evidence.

The wire fraud count against Ivy alleges he made false statements to Lewis and his wife, Jean, during several telephone conversations to persuade them to give him money.

"I guess I should be happy, but I think it's rather sad that people have to go through such an ordeal," Stipe said following his acquittal. "This has tortured my family and depleted my financial resources. It has been a terrible experience for all these years."

He said federal officials have been conducting a "bogus and false and fraudulent action against me."

Stipe and two other McAlester men stood trial in January on charges of making false statements to the Small Business Administration, but visiting U.S. District Judge Juan Burciaga of Albuquerque, N.M., acquitted them in mid-trial on the primary charge and declared a mistrial on the remaining allegations.

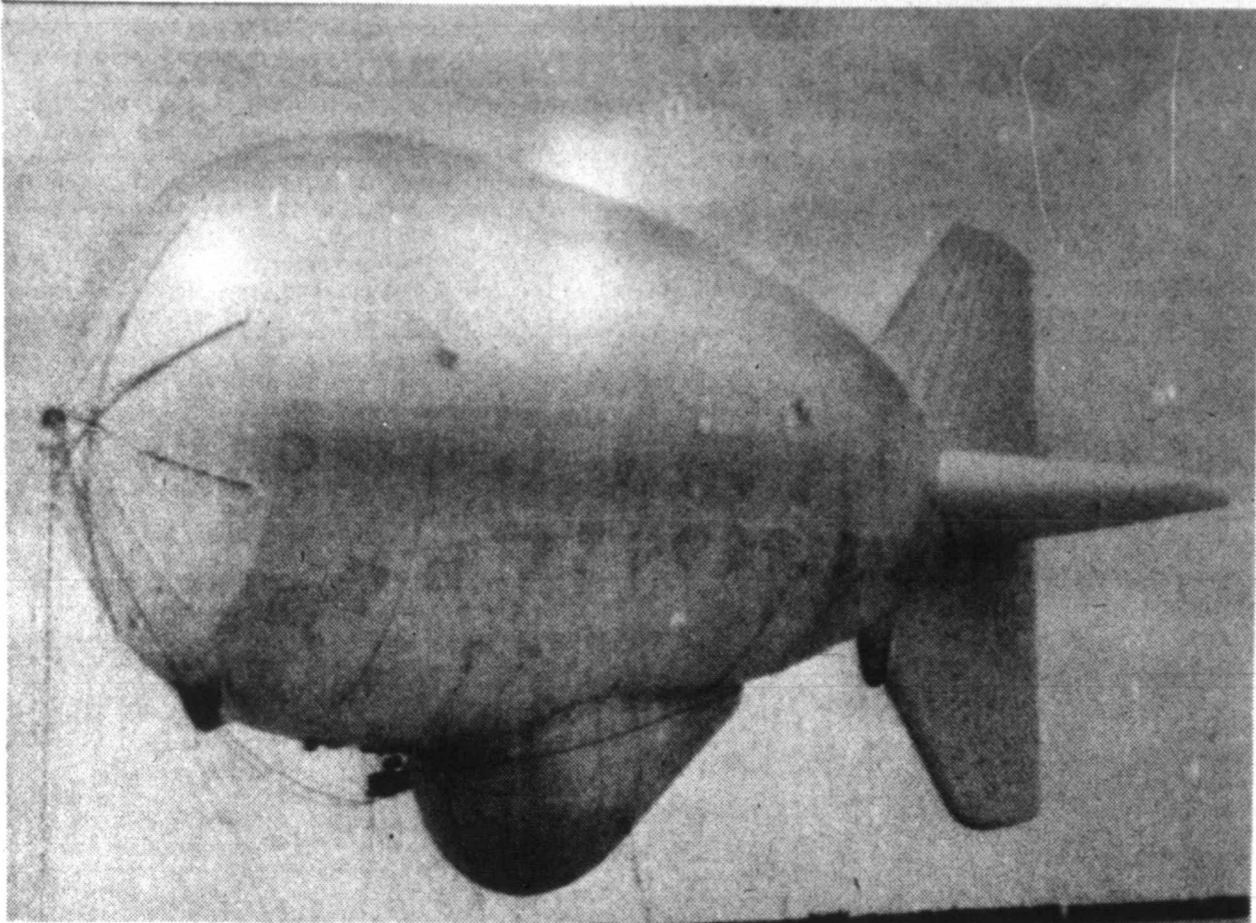

Burciaga, like West, said the prosecution had failed to produce enough evidence to allow the trial to go to the jury.

Reagan learned about television

WASHINGTON (AP) — While two television networks broadcast his remarks live, President Reagan stood in the Rose Garden and told the nation's striking air traffic controllers that they would be fired if they did not return to work within 48 hours.

For dramatic effect, he read a paragraph from the oath that each had signed promising not to take part in a strike. But when the president's remarks were broadcast that evening on the television news shows, he was dismayed to find the oath had been left out of the reports.

"I didn't see it played much," Reagan recalled.

From that, Reagan learned a lesson. He told interviewers he wished he had left that segment out of his prepared remarks.

Rather, he said, he should have "kept the piece of the form that they have to sign in my pocket and dramatically brought it out and read it."

"It might have gotten more attention," he said.

The photo opportunity has become a hallowed tradition in the White House, brought on whenever the president's news media advisers determine it would be to his advantage to have his picture taken.

As the appointed hour for the session nears, photographers and reporters, who are summoned to the Oval Office or Cabinet Room to catch any chit-chat loud enough to hear, gather at a door of the White House press room.

The more likely the event is to produce an important picture, or commentary by the president, the larger the horde and the greater the pushing and shoving that always accompanies it.

When a visitor to the Oval Office is from another country, the mob is doubled by foreign reporters and photographers, television camera crews and radio sound engineers.

And so it was a few weeks ago when Pierre Elliott Trudeau, prime minister of Canada and for years a hit with photographers, visited Reagan at the White House.

'Pinocchio' writes to aging South African lad

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Pinocchio, the ex-puppet who became a real boy in the Disney cartoon fairy tale, is coming to life again for a South African lad who has a rare premature-aging disease that may prove fatal by age 16.

Officials at the Characters Department at Disneyland have written a letter from "Pinocchio" to 8-year-old Fransie Geringer of Orkney, South Africa, in which the character asks Fransie to be his pen pal.

Pinocchio got Fransie's address from an Associated Press article that told about the boy's disease — progeria, or premature aging — and how Fransie wanted to come to Disneyland to meet the boy-puppet, his favorite storybook character.

Because Fransie's father, Herman Geringer, could not afford the trip, the boy said he hoped for the next-best thing, a letter from Pinocchio.

The letter, mailed Tuesday, said: "Dear Fransie, The Blue Fairy told me that you are one of my biggest fans. She also said that you are a real boy like me. Jiminy Cricket (he is my official conscience) sends his love and wants me to make sure that you stay out of trouble. It must be fun to live in South Africa. I wish I could visit there someday. Maybe we could be pen pals."

"I am sending some pictures of me and some of my friends. Your pen pal, Pinocchio."

The letter should take at least a week to reach Fransie.

who lives in a small gold-mining town about 100 miles southwest of Johannesburg with his parents and 10-year-old brother.

Bald and emaciated, with only 40 pounds on his 3-foot-8-inch frame, Fransie has old-looking but strong hands. He wears rubber-soled slippers that provide soft padding for his bent toes.

He has big brown eyes, bulging over a spindly nose and once asked his mother, Magga, "Why do I look so ugly?"

"What can I say?" she said. "I say, 'No, you're not ugly. You're a very pretty boy.'"

His doctor, Dr. Martinus van Zyl, says the child will live to be 16 or 17.

"Victims of this disease die of coronary heart disease," he said. "If he gets a coronary, he'll die, just like that."

When Fransie was a year old, his hair began to fall out and he failed to develop fatty tissue. The visits to specialists began.

"My aim is to make him happy and let him enjoy his life for as long as he's here for us," said his father. "That's all I care about."

The Pinocchio letter was read to The Associated Press by a worker in Disneyland's Characters Department who asked to remain anonymous.

Cooke will be court-martialed

SCOTT AIR FORCE BASE, Ill. (AP) — The Air Force says it will court-martial the nuclear missile launch officer accused of making unauthorized contacts with Soviet personnel and passing them classified information.

Second Lt. Christopher Cooke, 25, commander of a Titan II missile squadron at McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita, Kan., is accused of passing classified documents to the Soviets on three different occasions.

He also is charged with violating Air Force regulations on 11 occasions by failing to report contacts with Soviet Embassy personnel between June 1980 and May 1981.

Gen. James Allen, commander of the Military Airlift Command based in St. Louis, announced Wednesday that Cooke will face a general court-martial on the charges. Lt. Col. David Orser was appointed to hear the court-martial and will set a date for the proceeding.

Meanwhile, Cooke will remain in confinement at McConnell.

An Air Force spokeswoman, Capt. Virginia Prybila, said in Washington that she does not know the maximum possible penalty Cooke would face if convicted on all counts.

In documents filed with the Court of Military Appeals in Washington, the Air Force alleged that Cooke "engaged in a series of contacts with and visits to the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Republics, the purpose of which was to compromise the information to which he had access."

The Air Force said that on May 9, Cooke made an "admission that for approximately one year he had been photographing, copying and giving to the Soviets secret and top-secret information relating to the American strategic nuclear deployment."

Cooke, an international relations major at William and Mary College, originally said he had contacted the Soviets to obtain their views on a research paper he hoped to have published, the Air Force said.

Later, however, Cooke gave Air Force investigators a different version, which has been classified.

The Air Force said Cooke should be kept in confinement because he "still possessed information extremely useful to the Soviets" and had a passport, English currency and friends in foreign countries.

Cooke "had a former identity that he could easily assume," the Air Force added.

The Justice Department also has been investigating the case.

Horse thief gets 10 years

HOUSTON (AP) — The hanging of horse thieves may have gone out with the Old West, but horse stealing is still around and one modern-day rustler says inflation made him do it.

Milton Ray Oliver, 19, was sentenced to 10 years in prison Wednesday on charges of stealing two horses and a trailer to carry them in.

He said he started rustling horseflesh after he was laid off his job with a homebuilder when interest rates went up.

"I used to steal horses just for myself. Then one day someone offered me money for them," said Oliver, an unemployed electrician. "I had to do something to make money, so I started stealing horses."

Soviet summer means rush to vacation spots

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet constitution provides that every citizen has "a right to rest and leisure." Each summer, including this one, citizens stand on that constitutional right — many of them in a line.

In Yalta, the popular Black Sea resort, a million more visitors show up than the public facilities can handle, forcing vacationers to scramble for rooms in private homes.

Individual Soviet families have the right to buy their own plane or train tickets and go wherever they want in the Soviet Union on their vacations. But such trips can be difficult.

"There are so many people competing for tickets and hotels that getting a reservation is a problem," said one young Moscow worker. "It's better if you can get a pre-organized package."

These packages are available from trade unions and government travel agencies. About 55 million people participated in trade-union package tours last year; many others couldn't get bookings because of limited facilities.

One Moscow travel bureau sells a 20-day Volga River cruise, with sightseeing in 11 cities and all meals, starting at 90 rubles, the equivalent of $118, or about half an average worker's monthly pay.

Many places of work organize their own resort packages, for as little as 60 rubles ($78) for room and board for 14 days. Lodging, however, may be in spartan hostels with four or more people to a room.

Workers who can't get a package can travel to a resort area and look around for a bed in a private home, often for about 2.50 rubles ($3.30) a day.

Vacationers with health problems can seek admission to medical treatment resorts like the Svetlana Sanitarium for 320 men, women and children in northern Moscow. A 24-day visit there normally costs 45 rubles ($59).

At the center, recently shown off to foreign newsmen, children with hyperactivity and insomnia are offered "electrosleep." A weak current that cannot be felt is passed through their heads by electrodes, supposedly regulating their bodies' electrical systems and improving sleep patterns.

Other treatment for children includes romping in a swimming pool — labeled "hydrokinesis therapy" by the terminology-conscious staff. Adults receive inhalation therapy, get massages as they lie partially underwater in bathtubs, and are encouraged to rest in the open air — "climatological therapy," officials call it.

Healthy children spend all or part of their vacations at Young Pioneer Camps that host 14 million children a year.

University and technical school students often spend summers in student construction units building rural houses or other projects and making pocket money. Students still trying to get into a prestigious institute, however, often spend much of the summer deep in textbooks, preparing for August entrance exams.

Swedish national crayfish season opens

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The stroke of midnight opened Sweden's crayfish season, launching weeks of netting and feasting on the country's most prized delicacy.

At garden parties under the August moon, Swedish were donning paper hats, tying colorful napkins around their necks and digging into piles of the salty crustaceans, boiled with dill, chilled and washed down with beer and schnapps.

Fishing rights are restricted because crayfish are rare in the country where they are cherished the most. So the lucky few tossed their nets into lakes and rivers Wednesday afternoon in preparation for the first catch at midnight.

The sale of imported crayfish also was banned until the season started. Some stores stayed open past midnight to give eager eaters an early start on frozen imports.

It is forbidden to eat crayfish shorter than 3½ inches, but the youngest specimen, born in June, usually have grown big enough by mid-August.

Pollution and a parasitic mold long ago made the Swedish crayfish scarce, pushing the supermarket price up to nearly $16 a pound, a meal for one.

Many years ago parasite-resistant American crayfish were introduced in Swedish waters to compensate for the shortage of the local variety. But imports are still needed to meet Swedish demand.

About 2,200 tons, most of them from Turkey and the United States, are consumed every fall by the 8.2 million Swedes.

As much as 1,800 tons come from mountain lakes in Turkey. Consequently, Turkish crayfish are the cheapest, costing about $2.50 a pound. About 200 tons imported from the United States sell for around $4.50 a pound.

Some people who feel crayfish prices are too high forgo the August moon parties. They wait for the surstromming parties in September.

Surstromming is raw Baltic herring fermented to point of ripe fragrance that it can only be eaten out of doors. Served with potatoes, onions and wheat crispbread, it is much cheaper than crayfish, and it also goes well with beer and schnapps.

Atomic power plant girds for big protest

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — In a valley with a view of long-dead volcanic peaks, rows of tents and bare wooden lean-to frames await the "troops" in the next major battle against atomic power.

An army of protesters organized by the Abalone Alliance vows to blockade — by land and by sea — the 735-acre site of the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant when a license is issued, possibly within the next several weeks.

They hope to keep Pacific Gas & Electric Co. from loading fuel, igniting the nuclear chain reactor and beginning a series of low-power tests at the $2 billion twin-reactor complex.

"We will do everything we can non-violently to stop the plant from operating," Joyce Howerton of the alliance told a Los Angeles news conference Wednesday, which included remarks by actor Robert Blake and singer Jackson Browne.

Alliance members oppose all nuclear energy as inherently unsafe. But Diablo, they say, raises the specter of a potentially devastating disaster due to earthquake — the Hosgri Fault is located just 2½ miles offshore.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, however, has concluded that the plant can withstand any earthquake likely to strike the area.

Demonstration may shut down airport

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Intercontinental Airport may be shut down by a demonstration in support of striking air traffic controllers, a state labor leader has said.

Chuck Bertani, Texas president of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, said Wednesday local labor unions hope to draw 10,000 people to a demonstration August 22. He said they would march up the boulevard leading to the airport.

"If that shuts down the facility, that's too bad," Bertani said.

Bertani said plans for the demonstration were discussed at a Wednesday meeting of the Harris County AFL-CIO.

Leaders of other unions denied such plans had been discussed. Frank Juarez, president of one of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers locals said plans were "still in the discussion stage."

training recruits in non-violent protest and advising blockaders to bring provisions for 30 days.

"We are telling people to be prepared for the possibility of arrest," spokeswoman Pam Metcalf said earlier. "Our intent is to actually obstruct operation of the plant physically and non-violently with our bodies."

PG&E remains confident that it will be ready for tests soon after the NRC issues a license, and all sides expect the NRC to approve the plant.

"There's no doubt in my mind or in the company's mind whatsoever," PG&E spokesman Greg Pruett said. "Two weeks after the NRC rules... we will be ready to load fuel."

Fuel rods have been on the site for years. PG&E says it will bring workers in by helicopter and house them inside the complex if necessary.

No electricity will be generated by the tests. The application for a fullscale operating license will be considered separately.

But what will likely ignite the Abalone Alliance protest is a ruling on PG&E's security plans, which in turn would clear the way for granting the interim testing license.

The NRC's Atomic Safety and Licensing Appeal Board is expected to rule on the safety plan "anytime at all,"

according to NRC spokesman Jim Hanchett. Approval would permit the NRC to consider the test license application, a process that could take up to 10 days.

"As soon as the security decision comes down, we will put out an alert," Ms. Metcalf said Wednesday. "People should start coming to San Luis Obispo and the blockade should begin shortly."

Ms. Metcalf said protesters will block all gates into the property, others will hike into the hills and still more are to swim ashore from a mini-armada led by a 70-foot schooner provided by The Greenpeace Foundation.

Sheriff George Whiting of San Luis Obispo County said his deputies, along with the state Highway Patrol and potential support services from the National Guard, are prepared to handle whatever develops. A mounted patrol will comb the hills on horseback, he said.

"People have a right to demonstrate," he said, "unless they break the law. And if they break the law, they'll be arrested and hopefully they'll be convicted and sent to jail."

In past demonstrations, Whiting and the protesters have discussed ground rules. Each side has kind, if cautious, words for the other. Past demonstrations have meant hundreds of arrests, but they have been free of violence.

Although the Alliance promises to break a few laws, such as trespassing, Ms. Howerton said. "At no time, under no circumstances, will we penetrate the security fences around the reactor itself." The double fences are patrolled by guards and dogs.

Browne, the singer and a longtime opponent of the plant, told reporters at the news conference: "The plant at Diablo Canyon is the most important one in the country right now. If they can open one on an earthquake fault, they can put one anywhere."

Farm group churns interest in butter sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Farmers Union is churning up congressional interest in the recent sale of 220 million pounds of butter to New Zealand.

George W. Stone, president of the NFU, said Tuesday that the terms of the sale represent "a Reagan administration decision to impose a virtual one-year embargo" on U.S. butter exports.

Stone complained that under terms of the sale the United States agreed not to sell any more butter for export until next July "unless approved by the New Zealand Dairy Board."

The restriction on further exports was not made public when Agriculture Secretary John R. Block announced the $155 million sale a week ago.

An Agriculture Department spokesman said the no-export clause in the sales agreement was included in part to assure New Zealand and other U.S. trading partners that no more of the surplus would be dumped precipitously on the world market.

The sale, involving 220 million pounds of butter, was announced last week. It was sold for about 70 cents a pound, about half what the department's Commodity Credit Corp. had invested in it.

The butter also represented half the 440 million pounds that had been stockpiled under the government milk price-support program.

New Zealand, in return, agreed to not resell any of the butter to the Soviet Union which, according to State Department officials, was prepared to pay about $1.05 a pound for it.

Stone said he made his request for a congressional probe to Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on dairy and poultry.

A Senate investigation of the deal was requested by Cy Carpenter, president of the Minnesota Farmers Union; Leland Mulder, president of the Wisconsin Farmers Union, and Stuart Huber, president of the Farmers Union Milk Marketing Cooperative.

The farm leaders said the agreement was an "unbelievable decision to put control of the U.S. dairy export policy in the hands of a foreign country."

After the sale was announced last week, a New Zealand embassy official here said the purchase was made as a defensive gesture to keep the United States from dumping the surplus on the world market, which would depress prices.

New Zealand is the world's largest butter exporter.

Wallace Lindell of the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said the 220 million pounds sold to New Zealand would "just about tie up" butter shipping facilities until mid-1982. The butter is to be delivered to New Zealand between Sept. 1 and June 30, 1982.

Further, he said, the no-export stipulation also was an assurance to other countries that the United States would stick to agreements reached through multilateral trade negotiations.

Parents dubious about new child snatching law

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Eunice Munford says the police would have shown more concern if her purse had been stolen — instead of her four children.

Mrs. Munford was granted custody of the children in her divorce settlement, but she said police treated their disappearance as a "domestic squabble" because they had been snatched by their father, her ex-husband.

The American Bar Association says 100,000 children are snatched from their mothers or fathers each year by ex-spouses who refuse to abide by legal custody orders. Only 10 percent of the children are ever returned to the parent who was granted legal custody, the ABA estimates.

If an adult snatched any child not his or her own, it would be a violation of the federal kidnapping law and the FBI would help track the culprit down.

But most officials agree that law enforcement agencies treat child snatches as family quarrels, reluctant to spend time, resources and taxpayers' money to help distraught parents track down and seize custody of their children.

But as one of his last acts in office, former president Jimmy Carter signed a child-snatching law that, for the first time, put the federal government on record as frowning on the phenomenon of child snatching.

The law, which took effect July 1, does three things:

—Standardizes child custody orders throughout the 50 states.

—Allows the federal Parent Locator Service, originally aimed at locating parents who skip out on child support payments, to find child snatchers as well. The service is part of the Office of Child Support Enforcement, operated by the Social Security Administration.

—Empowers the FBI to handle arrest warrants which charge unlawful flight to avoid prosecution in such cases.

Mrs. Munford, who lives in Austin, said the law still leaves parents mostly to their own devices to track down their children and retake custody.

"It doesn't have much teeth," she said of the law. "Even if the Parent Locator Service can assist these people, there's nothing they can do as far as enforcement."

Mrs. Munford was luckier than most. Using mostly her own resources, she found her children in California and regained custody. She had searched for a year.

"I found in my own experience that it would have been much easier (to get help from the police) if my ex-husband had taken my car — much easier," she said.

Mrs. Munford, who works for the state Department of Human Resources, is Texas coordinator for Children's Rights Inc., a Washington, D.C.-based organization made up of parents whose children were snatched.

The new law empowers the FBI to act when state felony warrants are issued, but only six states, including Texas, have felony child-snatching laws, and even in those cases, local prosecutors are often reluctant to act.

Charles Conaway, first Assistant District Attorney in San Antonio, explained that it's up to the complaining parent to find the missing child, and prove that the ex-spouse has taken custody, before the state can file felony charges.

"There's not a lot you can do if you're dealing with someone who doesn't have any roots, any close ties to anywhere," Conaway said. "It's awfully easy to take a small child and get on Greyhound and say 'bye. How are you going to find them?'"

John Warren, 29, a San Antonio who works for the state welfare department, said he paid $20,000 to have a lawyer and private detective help him gain physical custody of his 5-year-old daughter.

Warren obtained a "writ of attachment" for the arrest of his ex-wife and return of his child, but he said no law enforcement agency would help him find her.

"Everybody has a lot of sympathy for you, but nobody will enforce the law," Warren said after seeking help from police, the district attorney's office, the Dallas court that granted him custody, the sheriff's department in Corpus Christi and the FBI.

Warren won custody of his daughter last Dec. 8, but didn't see the child again until June, when his ex-wife voluntarily surrendered her to him in front of a Dallas church.

"She told me she gave up, that she couldn't run any more, that she didn't have any money," Warren said.

Mrs. Munford said she hired a lawyer in California and the police went along in an unofficial capacity when she removed her four children from school and her ex-husband's home a year after she gained custody.

"It's just a helpless situation," she said. "I couldn't believe something like this could happen and the law wouldn't help me and protect me. The children are the real victims of this. The kids love their father and their mother. They don't want to be pulled between one and the other."

Craig Hatchett, head of the Parent Locator Service in Austin, said it's difficult for his office to enforce the new federal law.

Hatchett said people who use the service to locate their children will be charged a fee to cover the cost of manpower and time. He said he's not sure how far the state can go to validate custody orders, and noted that in some cases both parents have been awarded custody — in different states.

"The Parent Locator Service is not worth very much, anyway," Warren said. "It's very unsuccessful in finding even fathers who don't pay child support."

Is decline of jobless rate a miracle or an accident?

NEW YORK (AP) — Among the economic miracles or accidents of the first few months of the Reagan administration is a decline in the nation's jobless rate. But, some say, the President's luck may be running out.

First, some news about the improvement.

One year ago, the rate stood at 7.6 percent, with close to 8 million people unemployed. In the latest completed survey, for July, the rate dropped to 7 percent, with about 7.5 million workers idle.

To be sure, a year ago the economy was in a recession. But to be fair, it should be noted that some non-job measures suggest that the economy has not improved much since then and that it may soon return to recession.

But the job situation has brightened decidedly. In a statement accompanying the July figures, Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, provided this summary:

"Since the recession low of July a year ago, employment has risen in all major industries except for construction and government. Labor force participation has held steady, the percentage of the population employed has increased and the unemployment rate has declined."

Having read and digested that material, however, economists are now looking for the worst. The rate shouldn't be that low, they are saying. They are looking for flukes. They are forecasting higher rates to come.

The flukists look for a major revision in the figures. They are always looking, and frequently they find what they are looking for. Revisions are not uncommon, a consequence in part of the speed with which the figures are initially compiled and released. July's rate was released Aug. 9.

There is also the matter of seasonal adjusting, the purpose of which is to remove from the figures any strengths or weaknesses resulting solely from seasonal influences. Miscalculations do occur in such adjustments.

SESAME STREET TURNS TO PARENTS

NEW YORK (AP) — The producers of Sesame Street, the internationally shown television series that has sought to educate children for the past 12 years, have launched a monthly publication for the parents of their young viewers. The Children's Television Workshop's new "Sesame Street Parents' Newsletter" is aimed at mothers and fathers of 2-to-8 year olds.

Regular features include a parents' round-table discussion of issues such as discipline, sibling problems and working mothers; a fathers' page on which men offer their perspectives on parenting; medical information and advice; first-person accounts of the problems of parenthood, and regular polls which allow parents to communicate their concerns.

I'm an adoptive parent who will be forever grateful to the young unmarried mother who had the courage to bear and relinquish her infant son to us 13 years ago. I wish that she could know how wonderful he is, and how much joy he has brought us. One day I'm sure our son will want to know his natural mother, and we will help him in his search. I want to put my arms around her, cry with her for all she's missed and say "thank you" for giving us this wonderful son.

Women now wait longer to have babies

By LYNNE MARSHALL, Copley News Service

Women are waiting longer to marry and have babies. According to the National Center for Health Statistics in Washington, D.C., between 1975 and 1979 there was a 37 percent increase in the number of women between the ages of 30 and 35 giving birth to their first child.

"If a woman decides to wait to have a child," says Dr. Alvin Eden, pediatrician and author of "Positive Parenting," "becoming pregnant will be more difficult because fertility decreases after age 30. An older woman also may have more difficulty giving birth and getting back into shape afterward because her birth canal and stomach muscles are less flexible than at 20."

"Women of all ages who even suspect they are pregnant should take precautions with everything they eat or drink," says Dr. Sarah Short, professor of nutrition at Syracuse University.

"An expectant mother should follow the diet her doctor recommends — a variety of fruits, vegetables, whole-grained cereals, dairy products and some high-protein foods. She may be advised to take iron and folic acid, a B vitamin, and drink six to eight glasses of fluoridated water daily."

The adverse effects of smoking, alcohol and caffeine on an unborn child have received widespread publicity lately. "Although it may seem conservative," Short says, "I think an expectant mother should stop smoking and cut down on caffeine and alcoholic beverages. The potential risks are too great to take chances."

"Smoking," Short adds, "may cause low birth weight babies. Excessive alcohol intake — even one binge — may cause fetal damage. And caffeine, found in cola soft drinks as well as coffee and tea, is also suspect, so women should moderate their consumption."

Medicine of any type should also be very carefully monitored — even aspirin — particularly when taken in the first three months of pregnancy.

In the 1970s there was renewed interest in breast-feeding — twice as many postpartum mothers now breast-feed as in the 1950s. While authorities agree that milk from a healthy, well-nourished mother is recommended for infants, the American Academy of Pediatrics says infant formulas provide the best nutritional alternative for the first year if breast-feeding is not chosen.

"Breast milk," Short says, "provides immunological benefits, strongest in the first few days after delivery. Its antibodies protect the infant and combat bacterial infections and gastroenteritis, which cause diarrhea."

Although about 60 percent of all women choose to breast-feed in the hospital, many give it up when they get home or soon after. By the third month, nearly half of all new mothers have stopped breast-feeding. The reasons vary:

medical, the return to work or because many new fathers want to participate in feeding.

"If a mother decides not to breast-feed, or discontinues before the child is 1 year old, she should switch to commercial formula — not cow's milk," says Short. "The nutrients in infant formula provide the same essential vitamins and minerals as in breast milk. The protein in the formula is more digestible — and in better proportion to the infant's needs — than that in cow's milk."

"Introducing solid foods or cow's milk too early are common mistakes which can be detrimental to an infant's normal development," pediatrician Eden warns. "Although society has influenced new mothers to believe that rushing the eating of solid foods or the drinking of cow's milk is important in the child's development, it's simply not true."

"We've learned that breast milk or an iron-fortified formula should be the sole source of nutrients in the first four to six months of life and the primary source for the first year."

"Solid foods will add necessary calories after the first four to six months, but cow's milk should be avoided completely until the infant's first birthday," Eden continues. The premature introduction of cow's milk — either whole, low fat or skim — can contribute to serious excesses and deficiencies. Cow's milk is very hard for a baby to digest, contains too much fat and doesn't meet the nutritional requirements for the infant in his first year of life.

Eden offers one final caution to new mothers. "An infant is not a miniature adult. Infants double their height and triple their weight in the first year — their nutritional needs are very specific." Eden urges prospective mothers to learn about good nutrition before the baby is born.

Mexican snack features wheat germ

By CECILY BROWNSTONE, Associated Press Food Editor

I'm happy to report I've found a dish, great for snacktime fare or a light supper, that is both good for you and tastes unusually good. It's a filling for tostada or taco shells that blends ground beef, spinach and tomatoes with that important source of nutrients — wheat germ. After the filling goes into the shells, enchilada sauce, cheese and avocado top it off and, if you like, you can pass sour cream as an extra fillip.

About wheat germ. The "Nutrition Almanac" (McGraw-Hill), a guide I find reliable and useful, sums up wheat germ's virtues this way: "Wheat germ is the heart of the kernel of wheat. It is an excellent source of protein (24 grams per one-half cup), B-complex vitamins, vitamin E and iron. It also contains copper, magnesium, manganese, calcium and phosphorus.

Wheat germ contains a vegetable oil and therefore should be tightly covered and refrigerated."

WHEAT GERM MEDLEY FOR TOSTADAS OR TACOS

1/2 pound lean ground beef
1/4 cup butter

1/4 cup wheat germ, see Note
10-ounce package frozen chopped spinach, thawed and well-drained

2 medium tomatoes, chopped medium-fine
1/2 teaspoon crumbled dried basil

1/2 teaspoon crumbled dried oregano

1/4 teaspoon ground pepper
10-ounce can enchilada sauce

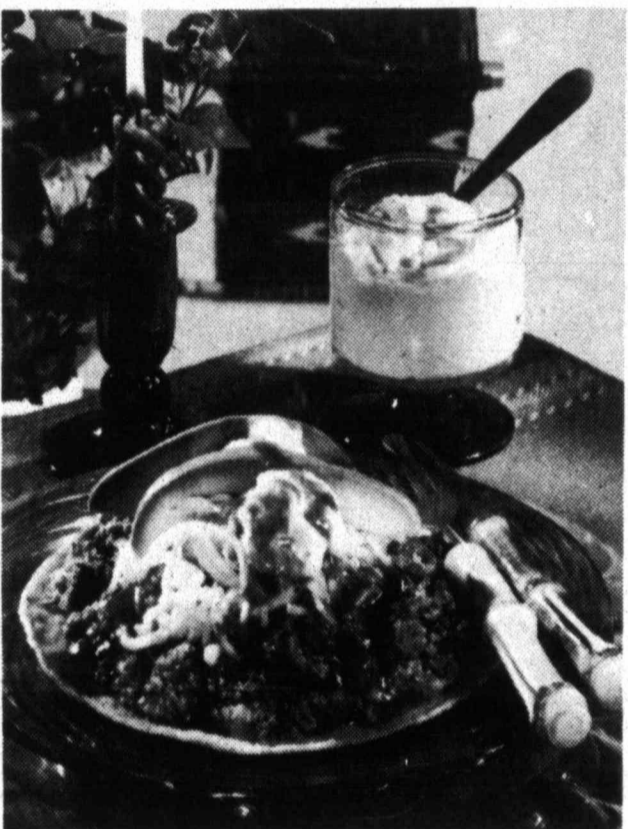

Packaged tostada or taco shells
1 1/2 cups grated Monterey Jack cheese

1 avocado, peeled and sliced
Commercial sour cream, if desired

In a 10-inch skillet over moderate heat melt the butter; add the beef and cook, crumbling with a fork, just until it loses its red color. Stir in the wheat germ, spinach, tomatoes, basil, oregano and pepper and heat. Heat enchilada sauce. Heat tostada or taco shells according to package directions. Fill the tostadas or tacos with the beef mixture and top with the enchilada sauce, cheese and avocado. Pass the sour cream. Usually enough filling for 4 tostada shells or 8 tacos.

Note: We tested this recipe with regular, vacuum-packed lightly toasted wheat germ. Some experiments have shown that toasting increases the nutritive value of wheat germ.

DELICIOUS AND NUTRITIOUS. Tostada or taco shells may be filled with a savory mixture that features wheat germ.

had. By "family," we mean Mom, Pop and four kids.

Our eldest son is married, and when his wife heard that we were going to take a family portrait and exclude her, she became furious. Our son then sided with her and refused to be in the picture unless his wife was included. They have both stopped talking to us until this is resolved.

We explained that we would also take an "extended family" picture, which would include this complaining daughter-in-law as well as the two grandchildren. She wasn't satisfied. She wanted to be in the portrait with Mom, Pop and the four kids.

We can't seem to get together on this. Our son refuses to be in any picture unless his wife is in it too.

Should we just take the picture without this one son? Or include him and his wife?

NEW YORK (AP) — Children will soon be able to broaden their learning by "talking" via computer to their TV sets.

The Children's Television Workshop, creator of "Sesame Street," is designing and producing computer lessons that blend entertainment and education through the home television screen.

The programs, to be available this fall, have been adapted from a group of some 50 games developed by CTW and tested over the past year at "Sesame Place," a new participatory play park it helped found near Philadelphia.

Unlike the present TV games which are limited in their functions and memory, the CTW computer games receive their input from keyboards, which use letters and numbers to give direction, reply to questions and can be programmed to personalize games in a variety of ways.

Easier teaching methods not always best

DALLAS — The American educational system has been in a "dark age" since the 1920s, and it is only recently that parents are starting to notice, according to the director of a teacher "re-training" program in Dallas.

"The children, who are now being held back by school systems ending 'social promotion,' are not responsible. The true failures are the teaching methods being used in the early grades — used because they are easy to teach, not because of the quality of the results," said Aylett Cox, director of the Alphabetic Phonics Teacher Training (APTT) programs at the Dean Learning Center.

Why Johnny can't read is not necessarily the fault of local school systems, because many are in the same predicament faced by Texas schools — the state chooses the textbooks and materials.

And in the past, the Texas State Textbook Committee has chosen basal reading techniques which are less time consuming, but not as thorough, compared to phonic methods that stress the make-up of the English language.

But even the school systems that offer small doses of phonics (the tools for learning to read by learning the sound of letters, letter groups and syllables) are not teaching each child to his fullest potential.

"We have found, through research, that one out of five children does not have a talent for remembering whole words, which basal reading systems require. This 20 percent of all children do not relate to printed symbols, so many are completely lost by the time they get to the third or fourth grade," Cox said. "The Alphabetic Phonics approach to teaching was developed for these children who are often thought of as slow, retarded, or not applying themselves because of their lack of two-dimensional talent."

It was in the Royse City school district that an added effect of the Alphabetic Phonics was noticed. For a time, the highly-structured curriculum was used only for those children diagnosed as having a language-learning difference. The other children in the regular classes were instructed with the basal technique, which teaches words as whole units and printed handwriting first.

The parents of children in the special classes began noticing that the reading skills of other children in the regular classes were not at a comparative level.

"The special education child receiving Alphabetic Phonics was developing superior language skills and the school board wondered what was going on," said Cox. "After investigating, they found Alphabetic Phonics could give every child a better grasp of reading, writing, and spelling than other curriculums. And in a very brave move, the basal reading approach was discontinued for this year's starting first graders, replaced by Alphabetic Phonics."

Cox likens the current status of education to the dark ages because of the attitude some educators have when presented with evidence that current methods do not work as well as originally intended.

"Is a whole nation over-reacting when it demands to know 'Why can't Johnny read?'" Cox asks. "But when the parents demand that a method which works be used, such as Alphabetic Phonics, some educators react as if these better methods should be burned at the stake for heresy."

The situation has become a classic example of supply and demand. For 60 years teachers have requested fast and easy methods for instruction, so the textbook manufacturers provided them. Alternatives to the basal approach were seldom bought because of the limited demand. And writers of textbooks worked on improving the streamlined approach, rather than the overall effect of the curriculum.

"When we began our research into learning styles 16 years ago at Texas Scottish Rite Hospital in Dallas, we were looking to help the child with dyslexia. Our techniques are based on research done in the '20's by a neuro-psychiatrist that were combined with teaching skills developed by a psychologist-educator, called the 'Orton-Gillingham Technique.' We followed their direction and after exhaustive work with over 1,000 children, the curriculum known as Alphabetic Phonics was developed," Cox said.

The Alphabetic Phonics curriculum and teacher training functions have been the best kept secret in education. But word is spreading: teachers have traveled from as far as England, Canada and South America to receive the training that can only be found in Dallas. Some parents, frustrated by appeals to school boards, have spent their own money to send willing local teachers to the Texas facility to be trained. And in Houston, a grant has been awarded to construct a teacher training building exactly like the one sitting high on a bluff overlooking the freeways pouring into downtown Dallas.

But for Aylett Cox, the battle is far from over. "I began over 20 years ago with the idea of just helping one young boy who was failing in school because he had a learning difference. Since then, the scope has increased. But still there are too many children failing, too many getting inferior educations, and too many parents without hope."

"This is the first civilization to demand that all children learn how to read, write and spell. It should be understood that there is going to be some hit-and-miss until the proper methods are found that give the best possible education to all children," said Cox.

But without fully understanding the way humans learn, no technique is going to remain the ultimate. Cox says that change should not be resisted by the educational bureaucrats, and the methods that work should be given their fair chance.

"I'm as idealistic as Don Quixote jousting his windmills," Cox said. "I'm fighting textbook publishers."

Dr. Lamb

Woman dislikes shape she's in

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a 50-year-old woman and I have always been slim until I started my menopause two years ago. Then I started putting on weight. I eat less and am still pretty active. Most of my weight and fat is through the stomach. I look six to eight months pregnant. I notice many other women my age in the same shape. What can we do?

DEAR READER — First, be sure you are not six or seven months pregnant. There are some women in this age group or with signs of the menopause who still get pregnant.

Barring that problem, you are faced with "middle-aged spread," and I know how awful that term sounds. It is fat, as you stated; your battle is to eliminate it and tighten up your trunk muscles. Loss of the size and strength of your muscles, which begins to occur at that point in life, has something to do with the problem.

The most healthy thing a woman can do is to cut down her calories and increase her exercise. You need three types of exercises, those to use calories, those to maintain and improve posture and tighten up muscles and those that help you maintain the size of your muscles. I have discussed the whys and hows of these in The Health Letter number 17-12, Winning the Battle of the Bulge, which I am sending you.

Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

Situps are fine when done right. So are leg lifts when done properly to not strain your back. They help with the lower abdomen. But you do need to eliminate the fat inside your abdomen for meaningful results. I would suggest that you and others with this problem start a daily walking program. If you can build up to walking a couple of miles in the morning and a couple at night, the four miles a day will use about 240 calories a day and account for the pound of body fat a week — 25 pounds of fat a year that would otherwise be inside and outside your abdomen.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I have had leg cramps so bad all my adult life, even during pregnancies. No doctor would ever do a thing for this. I would put my legs up or get up and walk. It did not work. One day I thought it was circulation and put a cushion made of wool under my feet every night. What a blessing for me. I've been doing this for four or five years and no more cramps. I thought this would help someone.

DEAR READER — Thanks for your concern for others. And depending on how you use the pillow, it may be useful to others.

There are many causes for leg cramps. I like people who have them to have a medical examination. Most of these that occur at night have a lot to do with the position of the foot and temperature changes. As the toe is pointed downward, the calf muscles are in a perfect position to contract unopposed by the muscles over the shin that pull the toe up.

People with this problem should stretch their calf muscles before going to bed. Stand facing the wall and lean forward against the ankles. Then use a board or pillow to lift the bed covers off the toes so you can keep your toes up. Or lie on your side with your feet against a foot board or pillow to keep the toes up. Long warm wool socks over the calf also help some people — but sleep with the toes up.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

When you come right down to it, there are two kinds of people in this world: those who can tolerate a cricket in the bedroom at night and those who can't.

I won't tell you which group I'm in. I will only say it's a very revealing trait and offers an insight into the person's total personality.

Those who tolerate crickets at bedtime are the kind of people who can sit through "Aida" and not hear a person sitting behind them who is ripping a breath mint out of a wrapper at 82 decibels.

They're the kind of people who can go camping and be oblivious to a party across the lake where the thump-thump of a stereo playing weird music is carried by the winds to your campsite.

They're the insensitive kind of people who can sleep right through a crying baby at 3 a.m. and have the gall to say the next morning, "Why didn't you wake me? I'd have warmed the bottle."

They can play poker with the guys until 3 a.m. and then come home and tell you with a straight face they don't know if the Floyds are getting a divorce or not. Ha! Ha!

You can't miss 'em. Whenever you see a mouse in the house in the fall, these are the flakes who will tell you, "It's only a field mouse and he's just as scared as you are!"

when you know in your heart the mouse is pregnant and is building a condo in your spices.

Oh, make no mistake, it takes a special breed of person who can lie in bed and hear a cricket's blood-curdling screech heard in the closet, then the bathroom, then under the bed, and feel nothing.

That's it. These people don't feel. They don't acknowledge a dripping faucet, a hook that isn't fastened above a zipper, a stamp put on a letter crooked, a cupboard door in the kitchen standing ajar.

They're just animals! They can put a book down in the middle of a page, never wash their hands after playing with the dog, don't brush after every meal, and call their mother on Mother's Day... COLLECT!

But mostly, they're people who can sleep while an animal is under their bed rubbing its legs together with a sound that shatters glass. As I said, I won't tell you which group I'm in, but you all know who you are out there.

Pearson looks at ending career

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys star wide receiver Drew Pearson says his National Football Career is fast drawing to a close, and he won't play in the 1981 season unless his contract is improved.

With three years and an option season to go on his current contract, Pearson has been discussing renegotiation with Cowboy management since February. The two sides are still far apart.

"At this point, I don't feel optimistic, not in the least," Pearson said Wednesday. "Right now there's no way I'm going to play the '81 season with my contract."

Pearson, who came into the National Football League as a free agent in 1973, is the Cowboys' all-time leading receiver, an All-Pro and Pro-Bowl player, and a member of the 1970s All-Decade team.

"If football ended for me today, I've fulfilled my dreams," he said. "I've reached every height, personally and team-wise, that the game offers. Without football, I don't think I'd curl up and die."

"Either this season or next will probably be my last regardless. The only way I would consider playing any longer after a couple more years maximum would be if they were to offer me a great deal of money to stay on."

He said the two sides were $50,000 to $60,000 a year apart. His attorney, Roy McCoy of Dallas, talked to Cowboys player personnel director Gil Brandt last weekend, but Pearson said no progress was made and management appears to be "saying, in essence, that I should settle for less."

He accused Cowboy management of being "unrealistic" and said contract talks were a "one-way street" with management in "complete control."

"Being part of what makes this team go makes it additionally frustrating," he said. "And I really don't see why it has to be that way. That's what's driving me out of the game."

He said he would retire if he does not play in the 1981 season, and that he believed he could match his current income by working in television or radio, although he has not had any concrete offers.

"Right now, I'm in limbo. It wouldn't do me any good to walk out of camp at this point. All they would do is fine me ... and try to let things blow over. Maybe later ... that would be the right strategy."

He said locker room talk is beginning to focus on contracts and money, even among younger players, and "any time money becomes the primary issue rather than football you've got problems."

"Players are beginning to ask how important this (pro football) really is," he said. "They're beginning to wonder if maybe it isn't overrated. There are several younger players talking about making this their last year, things like that."

"They're saying they can get into something that will earn them just as much money and not offer the physical punishment the game does."

Rice: Old standings but new look

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The only sure way to identify the 1981 Rice University football team is by its traditional role as the favorite to finish last in the Southwest Conference.

That annual distinction hasn't changed but everything else has.

First, there is an uncharacteristic air of confidence following last year's startling 5-6 record and a tie with Texas for fourth place in the SWC. Rice teams hadn't won that many games in three previous seasons combined.

Nor will the 1980 program be of much help in getting a fix on the 1981 Owls. Firebrand head Coach Ray Alborn lost 25 seniors, including eight offensive and eight defensive starters and has imported 11 junior college athletes to shore up the losses.

There's even a new look in the coaching ranks. Three assistants, offensive coordinator Les Koenning, defensive line coach Dick Backset and assistant offensive line coach Doug Davidson have resigned and there are three new faces, Clovis Nale, Vince Rachal and Larry Kueck.

Although two super freshmen, Doug Johnson and Phillip Money, were expected to duel for the starting quarterback's job, junior college transfer Michael Calhoun may take the job.

Alborn takes morbid delight in pointing out that in his nine seasons at Rice, six as an assistant, the Owls have been picked to finish last.

"I guess some things never change, but it's become an inspiration to our coaches and players to prove them wrong," Alborn said. "I think our whole season (1980) will have a residual effect. It gave these guys a tremendous amount of confidence."

But 33 members of the 1981 squad (20 incoming freshmen and 11 transfers) weren't around to feel the glow of upset victories over Louisiana State, Texas A&M, Arkansas and Houston.

The Owls lost their entire starting offensive backfield and defensive secondary. The biggest headache for Alborn going into fall drills will be at running back where the top two rushers graduated and everyone who's left is injury-prone.

"It's somewhat frightening to think you might have to start freshmen running backs in those first three ball games (Texas, Missouri, LSU)," Alborn said. "But based right now on what we've got, unless somebody really comes to the front, those freshmen will have to jump in there."

Alborn said Sanders was "the only guy in spring practice that showed any signs of being capable of playing Southwest Conference football. And I'm worried about Sanders, too. He's never made it through a season without an injury."

Colts optimistic of Carr's return

By TOM CANAVAN
Associated Press Writer

Defensive backs may be used to Roger Carr's "now-you-see-me, now-you-don't" routine. Now the Baltimore Colts are facing that very problem in the form of a contract dispute.

The veteran Colt returned to the National Football League team's Towson, Md., training camp Wednesday, and disappeared almost as quickly.

Carr was to have signed a multi-year contract last week. But a snag developed in his negotiations with Colts' General Manager Dick Szymanski and the eight-year pro from Louisiana Tech walked out Tuesday. His return Wednesday caught everybody by surprise.

Assistant General Manager Ernie Accorsi hurried from the practice field at Goucher College to the dormitory where a temporary team office has been set up. But by the time he arrived, Carr was gone.

Szymanski added, "Roger will be back when he's back and I don't want to say anymore about it. Roger is Roger and it's up to him to come back."

Coach Mike McCormack, who said he had talked to Carr Wednesday by telephone, was more optimistic.

"Roger says he wants to come back, and I'd love to have him back. I think Roger will be back very soon."

Attempts to reach Carr for comment were unsuccessful. Carr, who caught a touchdown in the Colts' exhibition loss to New Orleans last Saturday, was Baltimore's leading receiver last season with 61 receptions, including five TDs.

Elsewhere, Dallas General Manager Tex Schramm denied reports that wide receiver John Jefferson of the San Diego

Chargers might be traded to the Cowboys.

"We've had no conversations whatsoever," said Schramm. Jefferson, the only receiver to surpass 1,000 yards in each of his first three seasons, is seeking to renegotiate the final three years on his contract with the Chargers.

The Philadelphia Eagles received bad news when it was disclosed that All-Pro linebacker Bill Bergey's left knee is acting up again.

Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil said Bergey's knee, which was operated on in 1979, will be examined by team physician Dr. Vincent DiStefano.

Walling happy with new role

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The San Francisco Giants have seen Dennis Walling bat just twice in the last three days, and must feel by now that it's more than enough.

Walling laced a run-scoring single Wednesday to lead the Houston Astros to a 5-4 National League victory over the Giants. On Monday he delivered a two-run double to key a 6-5 victory by the Astros.

The recent successes have given him new life as a pinch-hitter, he feels. He was 1-for-9 without a run batted in during the first half of the season.

"I can accept coming off the bench if I can get mentally prepared to be a pinch-hitter," Walling said. "Everybody wants an identity. We made some moves and my role is more defined now."

Luis Pujols opened the Houston eighth with a single and Kiko Garcia ran for him. After a wild pitch and a sacrifice by Terry Puhl, Greg Minton replaced Al Holland, 3-3. Minton walked pinch-hitter Harry Spilman and Walling, hitting for Joe Sambito, 3-3, lined his game-winning hit.

In other NL action, it was St. Louis 11, Philadelphia 3; Montreal 3, Pittsburgh 2; New York 7, Chicago 4 in 10 innings; Atlanta 4, San Diego 3 in 11 and Los Angeles 8, Cincinnati 5.

The Astros chased All-Star Game winner Vida Blue with three runs and six hits in the third inning. Dickie Thon doubled home one run, and the other two scored on base hits by Tony Scott and Jose Cruz. The Astros added an unearned run in the fifth off Fred Breining, staking Vern Rühle to a 4-0 lead.

The Giants scored four times in the sixth to tie the game. Enos Cabell doubled with one out and scored on Jack Clark's single. Darrell Evans followed with a two-run homer, his 10th of the season. One out later, Jerry Martin belted his third homer of the year.

Cardinals 11, Phillies 3
George Hendrick hit two home runs and knocked in three runs and rookie Orlando Sanchez singled home the go-ahead run in the fifth inning as St. Louis clobbered Philadelphia.

For the second straight night at Veterans Stadium, the attendance was well under the pre-strike average of 32,684. A crowd of 23,566 turned out for the third of the four-game series between the top two teams in the first half of the NL East season.

Bob Sykes, who pitched 31-3 innings and gave up four hits and no runs, earned a victory in his first decision of the season. Seven pitchers gave up 17 walks in the game.

Expos 3, Pirates 2
Andre Dawson hit his 15th

homer of the season to back the combined eight-hit pitching of Ray Burris and three relievers, leading Montreal over Pittsburgh.

Burris, 4-5, yielded five hits in five innings, including Mike Easler's leadoff homer in the fourth. Following Burris were Stan Bahnsen, Jeff Reardon and Bill Lee, who gained his sixth save after giving up an RBI grounder to Tim Foli in the ninth.

Mets 7, Cubs 4
Dave Kingman and Ellis Valentine drilled consecutive triples at the start of the 10th inning, leading New York past Chicago for the Mets' third straight victory since the reopening of the season. But center fielder Bobby Bonds and right fielder Hector Cruz both backed off the ball at the last moment.

Valentine then drove home Kingman with another three-bagger to right center for the game-winner.

Braves 4, Padres 3
Brian Asselstine scored an unearned run in the 11th inning on a groundout by Ed Miller to lead Atlanta over San Diego. Asselstine had walked off loser John Curtis, 1-4, moved to second on an error and took third on a forceout grounder by Claudell Washington before scoring the winning run. Rick Camp, 6-1, pitched two relief innings to earn the victory and John Montefusco earned his first save after pitching the 11th.

San Diego had tied the score 3-3 in the seventh on a run-scoring grounder by Joe Lefebvre.

Dodgers 8, Reds 5
Dave Lopes singled home the tying run in the fourth inning and cracked a two-run homer in the seventh to lead Los Angeles over Cincinnati.

Dave Stewart, 4-1, who relieved starter Bob Welch in the fifth inning, earned a victory with relief help from Steve Howe. Howe posted his seventh save.

Rudi leads Boston's home run blitz over Chicago

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

It's been a long time since Joe Rudi was a hero. Wednesday night, he proved he hadn't forgotten how.

The 13-year veteran outfielder belted a pair of home runs Wednesday in leading a six-homer blitz by the Boston Red Sox in an 8-1 romp over the Chicago White Sox. Being in the spotlight again felt good to Rudi, a star with the World Champion Oakland A's in 1972 through '74, but something of a bust since then.

"I feel as good as ever, just great," said Rudi, who will be 35 next month. "I can hit as well as I ever did. I just need the opportunity to play."

Rudi hasn't gotten that opportunity very much in recent years. After joining California as a free agent in November 1976, Rudi was plagued by injuries and slumps. He made it into only 64 games in his first season as an Angel, batting .264, his lowest average as a full-time major leaguer.

In 1978, Rudi knocked in 79 runs but hit only .256 in 133 games, then appeared in just 90 contests in '79 and 104 games (.237) in '80.

The Angels, fed up with Rudi's declining average each season, dealt him to Boston last winter, but it's been more of the same for the outfielder this year. He's batting a miniscule .169 in 22 games.

That made Wednesday's performance even more gratifying. "He's an old pro who can help us a lot down the stretch," said Boston Manager Ralph Houk. "He had trouble with his legs at the start of the year, but now he's in excellent shape. He's been through the pressure a lot during his career and I just hope he stays hot."

Also hot Wednesday night for Boston were Jim Rice, Dwight Evans, Dave Stapleton and Gary Allenson, all of whom homered. The six homers set an American League high for the year.

Bobby Ojeda, called up from Pawtucket of the International League Sunday, scattered seven hits, including three by Ron LeFlore, in his 1981 major league debut. He had a 1-1 record with Boston last year.

Rice also threw out two runners for his sixth and seventh assists of the year.

Elsewhere, it was California 4, Seattle 1; the New York Yankees 5, Texas 4; Cleveland 9, Milwaukee 4; Minnesota 4, Oakland 3; Toronto 4, Detroit 3, and, in a doubleheader, Kansas City bombed Baltimore 10-0, then was edged by the Orioles 4-3 in the second game.

Angels 4, Mariners 1
Bobby Grich, who signed with California as a free agent a week after Rudi in 1976, also pounded a pair of homers Wednesday as the Angels down Seattle 4-1 for their first victory since the resumption of play following the 59-day layoff, which included the 50-day strike.

Grich has fared much better than Rudi with the free agent-laden Angels. In 1979, when California won the West Division — and Rudi was stumbling through a .242 campaign, with 11 homers and 61 RBI — Grich had a spectacular season, batting .294, with 30 homers and 101 RBI.

This year, as Rudi once more has wallowed on the bench, Grich has hit .287 with eight home runs. He was one of the beneficiaries of the strike after breaking a bone in his left hand in early June. The second baseman hardly missed any games, even though the cast was not removed until three weeks ago. Grich did not pick up a bat until the first workout after the baseball strike ended.

His three-run blast in the top of 11th won the game for California.

Yankees 5, Rangers 4
Graig Nettles' two-run homer and a two-run double by Dave Winfield keyed the Yankee attack.

"I looked at the calendar, and it said August, so I knew it was time to get going," said Nettles, who sixth-inning blast lifted New York from a 4-3 deficit. Nettles has two homers in the Yankees' three post-strike games, with both shots providing the winning runs.

Indians 9, Brewers 4
Rick Manning drove in three runs and scored three with a home run and two singles as the Indians snapped a seven-game losing streak.

Mike Hargrove added four hits to a 17-hit Cleveland barrage and Len Barker struck out five and didn't walk a batter in eight innings.

Twins 4, A's 3
Minnesota rallied from a 3-0 hole with seventh-inning RBI singles by Hosken Powell and Mickey Hatcher providing the tying and winning runs. The Twins trailed 3-2 before bunting five singles against reliever Bob Owchinko, 3-2, in the seventh. Wayne Gross hit his sixth homer for Oakland.

Blue Jays 4, Tigers 3
Toronto's Damaso Garcia spoiled the strategy of Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson, who twice ordered intentional walks to the batter ahead of Garcia. The Blue Jays second baseman squeeze bunted home a run, then delivered a sacrifice fly.

The loss was the first since April 29 for Detroit starter Jack Morris who had an eight-game winning streak halted.

Royals 10-3, Orioles 0-4
Frank White's grand slam homer and Hal McRae's three RBI paced the Royals' win, then ace pinch hitter Terry Crowley's sacrifice fly won the nightcap for Baltimore.

Rick Dempsey and Eddie Murray homered in the second game for Baltimore. Amos Otis and Willie Wilson countered for the Royals.

RUIDOSO DOWNS — Twenty-two races are booked in today's first-round elimination trials for the $1,530,000 All-American Futurity in Ruidoso Downs, N.M.

Another 22 races are on tap for Friday. A total of 437 two-year-olds are expected to compete in the two-day trials.

Douglass qualifies at World Games

Clay Douglass of Pampa qualified for the finals in three swimming events, which included a fourth-place finish in the 1,500 freestyle, at the World Games for the Deaf in Cologne, West Germany July 23-August 2.

Douglass' fourth-place finish in the 1,500 freestyle broke his personal record in the event by more than one minute. He wastimed in 17:55.0.

Douglass, 16, placed fifth in the 200 backstroke and seventh in the 100 backstroke.

"Clay did about as well as he could," said his father Malcolm. "He was especially pleased with his performances since he had a 102-degree temperature only two days before the races."

"He's already talking about competing in 1985. By then, he would be at the peak age for swimmers. He was competing against much older swimmers this time."

Cowboys trim roster

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have trimmed their roster to 79 with the release of Dan Anders, a rookie defensive end from the University of Northern Arizona.

The cut, announced Wednesday, leaves Dallas with 19 players more than the 60-man roster they must have by Tuesday. The Cowboys are expected to make another cut this week prior to their game Saturday against the Los Angeles Rams.

Cowboys officials also announced their first sellout of the 1981 season, the Dec. 13 game against at Texas Stadium against the Philadelphia Eagles.

Missing boarding home operator has a past

MIAMI (AP) — A boarding home operator who vanished with six of her elderly tenants, including a 91-year-old woman whose bank accounts had been dropped by $17,000, had a sweet personality and treated her renters respectfully, a state social worker says.

But in Michigan, a state official said the boarding home operator, Cora Galvin, had been denied licenses for adult foster-care homes in Detroit because of "substandard conditions" at the facilities.

Mrs. Galvin is "very familiar" to the Michigan Department of Social Services and used "several aliases" while operating homes before the state began licensing them, James Quigley, director of the Adult Foster Care Licensing Division in the department, said Wednesday.

Detroit officials weren't it with Florida about Mrs. Galvin, who has become the subject of an interstate search by the Dade County state attorney's office. Officials hope that finding Mrs. Galvin will help them trace the missing boarders, who range in age from 62 to 91.

"We're very concerned that no trace of these people has turned up," said Lianne S. Palacin, director of aging and adult services in the Florida Department of Health and

News at a Glance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign investors spent $9.9 billion last year to buy 631 existing businesses in the United States and start another 742 new companies, the Commerce Department says in a preliminary report.

The 1980 investment was 35 percent below the 1979 total of $15.3 billion but will undoubtedly be larger when final reports are in, the department said Wednesday.

The 1979 total also was bloated by the $4 billion acquisition of Belridge Oil Co. by Shell Oil Co., the U.S. affiliate of the Royal Dutch-Shell Group of Companies, officials said.

The report covered only money spent by foreign companies or their U.S. affiliates to start new U.S. businesses or to acquire at least 10 percent ownership. It does not include new investment in companies already owned by foreigners.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, saying it needs "additional preparation time," wants China to delay sending an arms-buying mission to the United States until next month.

China, however, has not responded to the request yet, State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said Wednesday.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. announced during a trip to China in June that the Reagan administration had decided to lift restrictions against weapons sales to the Chinese communist government.

Haig said then that the vice chief of staff of China's army, Liu Huaqing, would visit the United States in August to study possible arms purchases.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group chaired by Ralph Nader has succeeded in postponing until at least next week the merger of Westinghouse Electric Corp. into the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

The U.S. Court of Appeals issued a temporary restraining order Wednesday against the merger but said it was not ruling on the merits of a motion filed by the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting requesting the stay.

Signing ceremonies to close the deal, valued at roughly $650 million, had been scheduled for Wednesday. The merger was approved last month by the Federal Communications Commission.

The citizens committee contends that the merger would "lead to an intolerable concentration of media power and a lessening of diversity" in the cable television industry.

PEKING (AP) — The Taiwanese air force major who flew his U.S.-made F-5F jet fighter to mainland China has been given a $433,000 reward and a job in China's air force, Peking Radio reported.

"I certainly will live up to the expectations and trust placed in me by the motherland and people," said Huang Che Cheng, who landed in Fuzhou province Saturday.

The Chinese say the 29-year-old pilot defected. But Taiwan military officials say Huang was forced to land because the plane ran low on fuel.

Military experts here say Huang's jet will aid the Chinese in their quest for technological advancement but say it would take years for China to reproduce the plane, which carries advanced radar and electronics equipment.

Sentencings for Abscam set for today

NEW YORK (AP) — Four former congressmen and two other men were going to court today for sentencing on bribery-conspiracy convictions in the government's undercover Abscam investigation and faced the possibility of long prison terms.

It was expected, however, that any sentences or fines meted out by U.S. District Judge George C. Pratt in a Brooklyn courtroom would be stayed pending appeals.

The six faced prison terms up to 15 years if Pratt followed his standard practice. Technically, the defendants faced much longer, consecutive jail terms for convictions of more than one crime, but Pratt rarely imposes consecutive sentences.

The six are former Reps. Michael Myers, D-Pa.; Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J.; John Murphy, D-N.Y.; and Raymond Lederer, D-Pa.; and Angelo Errichetti, a New Jersey state senator and former mayor of Camden, N.J., and Philadelphia City Councilman Louis Johanson.

All but Murphy were convicted of bribery, the most serious of the offenses alleged. It carries a maximum 15-year prison term.

Philadelphia attorney Howard Criden, convicted with Myers last year, was to be sentenced today as well, but because he suffered a heart attack, Pratt's office said Wednesday that he would be sentenced Oct. 2.

In a 135-page ruling on July 24, Pratt found that FBI agents had acted properly in impersonating Arab sheiks and their middlemen who offered payoffs to politicians.

Names in the news

CEDAR CITY, Utah (AP) — Attendance by a traveling troupe of British actors at a western barbecue in their honor reminded Jeremy Irons of how things must have been in Shakespeare's time.

"I thought in Elizabethan England the same thing would have happened to a group of traveling actors," said Irons, in Cedar City to play scenes from Shakespeare for a BBC production entitled "All the World's a Stage."

The production, written and presented by Ronald Harwood, is a television history of the theater in 13 parts. The producer, Peter Wineman, said the company chose the Adams Memorial Theater at Southern Utah State College because it was only an open-air Elizabethan-style theater of its kind in the world. Filming was under way Wednesday.

"We have nothing like it in England," said actor Paul Rogers, who plays the ghost to Irons' Hamlet.

BELIZE CITY, Belize (AP) — The Belize government says Prince and Princess Michael of Kent will represent the prince's cousin, Queen Elizabeth II, at its independence celebration here Sept. 21.

On Friday in the capital of Belmopan, the proposed constitution will be presented for its first reading in the House of Representatives.

Belize announced last month that it would declare independence from British rule and move ahead despite lack of a treaty of non-aggression from neighboring Guatemala, which still claims the territory.

Guatemala, Britain and Belize reached an understanding in March on an orderly move to independence by Britain's last colony in the Americas, but last month Guatemala said Belize was changing signals and rejected the understanding.

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — While Brazilian journalists scoured the city for Frank Sinatra, who opens an engagement tonight at a luxury hotel, the singer's public relations man said coolly that Sinatra will come to the hotel "when he's ready."

"He already knows the songs," Lee Solters said. "He doesn't have to practice."

Depression-era shacks house Lufkin's poor

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Lumberjacks, sawmill workers and other laborers who lived in wooden shacks built throughout East Texas during the Depression probably felt lucky just to have a bed in out of the rain.

In the prosperous years since, most of these "shotgun" shacks have burned down, rotted away or been bulldozed back into the earth.

But city officials here estimate 200 to 300 of the shacks not only remain standing but many are home to poor people still living a hard scabble existence reminiscent of the 1930s. In one instance a single outdoor toilet serves 24 residents.

There is no indoor plumbing.

The Lufkin News focused on the clusters of shacks, known as "shantytowns," in July and since then some efforts have been launched to improve them. But no immediate solutions have been found.

The city commission has ordered a housing study to determine the extent of the problem with an eye toward a possible housing code. Other East Texas cities such as Marshall and Tyler already have such codes, and as a result most of their shantytown shacks have been demolished.

Lufkin City Manager Harvey Westerholm said the city hesitates to condemn the buildings if the residents have no place else to go, and owners say they can't make improvements without raising rents, which are now about $35 a month.

"The only question the tenants have asked me is, 'Are you going to go up on the rent?'" said Edward McFarland, a lawyer who bought one 12-shack shantytown last month with a partner for $20,000.

McFarland says he intends to upgrade the shacks, but he said if he installs indoor plumbing and makes other improvements he will have to charge more rent — "I'm just going to have to. That's the way it is."

Jack Stroud, who owned the property before he sold it to McFarland, said, "If they'd have paid me $75 per month I'd have had bathrooms in the shacks. But I knew what I'd have to charge them if I did and I knew damn well they couldn't pay."

McFarland said he plans to invest $50,000 in improvements and afterward hike rents to $100 a month.

"You can see how bad they need fixing," said Hileria Garrett, 51, a shantytown resident who said he was disabled after being stabbed in the chest two years ago. "I'm glad somebody's doing something. But if they go up on the rent, I don't know how I'll be able to afford it."

Next door, inside the shack where Perpetua Kinsey, 81, lives, the thermometer reads 92 degrees. A small electric fan does not help much.

Near her back porch she burns rotting boards pulled from the inside of her shack. "Keeps the roaches away," Mrs. Kinsey said. "I don't want no roaches around here."
