Our daily prayer should be:

- Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace.
- Where there is hatred, let me show love: Where there is doubt,
- faith;
- Where there is despair, hope;
- Where there is darkness, joy.

I heard God's voice upon the wind today;

I heard Him speaking through the song of birds;

And clearly, plainly, through the silver rain I heard His words.

I saw God's face upon a flower today: I saw him moving on the hills, and oh, He walked upon the waters of the stream, I know! I know!

I heard God's voice, I saw His shining face; He spoke to me; He moved along the land; I reached through all the beauty of the day And touched His hand.

"I'M SORRY to have to bother you, Miss Clemens, but Mr. Rigby called me." "Thank you, Mr. Murray."

"Thank you, Mr. Murray." Elinor Clemens stroked the brown ears of her boxer dog. "Rockets, what have you been up to?"

Mr. Murray, the humane officer, took off his cap and ran a gnarled hand over his brush of hair. "Well, Mr. Rigby, the new fellow on the corner . . bought Edmon's house, you know . . . well, he raises some kind of birds and said that Rockets, here, was scaring the living daylights out of them."

"I'm terribly sorry to put you to so much bother. I'll have a fence put up today. Rockets really might get into serious trouble; he's so big and playful."

Elinor was roused from her reading that afternoon by a ringing of her door bell and the barking of Rockets. She opened the door to find a repetition of the scene enacted earlier that morning. Mr. Murray had Rockets in tow again. But far from looking repentent, Rockets appeared to be fully enjoying the attention.

"He's been at it again. This time Mr. Rigby was really mad." Mr. Murray chuckled and scratched his ear. "Funniest thing he said, 'You tell that old optimized to' keep her confounded dog at home where he belongs.'" around here until he came to town. The following afternoon Elinor was walking briskly up the street carrying a heavy package under her arm, when she was bumped by a young man in a great hurry.

Instant concern crossed his tanned face. "I'm terribly sorry, miss. Here let me pick that up. Must be filled with money from the weight and jangle." He handed her the package and put out a hand in apology. "That was inexcusable of me to barge into you. I guess I was pretty riled up and wasn't watching where I was going."

was pretty riled up and wasn't watching where I was going." "That's quite all right." Elinor smiled and succeeded in almost blinding the confused young man. "Accidents will happen. No harm done."

Elinor would like to have stayed and talked to this attractive stranger, but she had to get home and put the chain on Rockets before he got out again. She smiled again and walked on.

The young man turned to watch her enter her yard. He saw Maggie come out on the front porch. "Elinor Clemens, what in the world have you got in that huge package? Here let me take it."

"While you were gone that Mr. Rigby brought Rockets back again. He was really burning. Said he was going to have you arrested if you didn't keep that dog home." Maggie laughed as if it were all a huge joke.

huge joke. "Indeed! I'm going over and have a talk with that man." Elinor handed the chain to Maggie. "Will you put this on Rockets, I'll be right back."

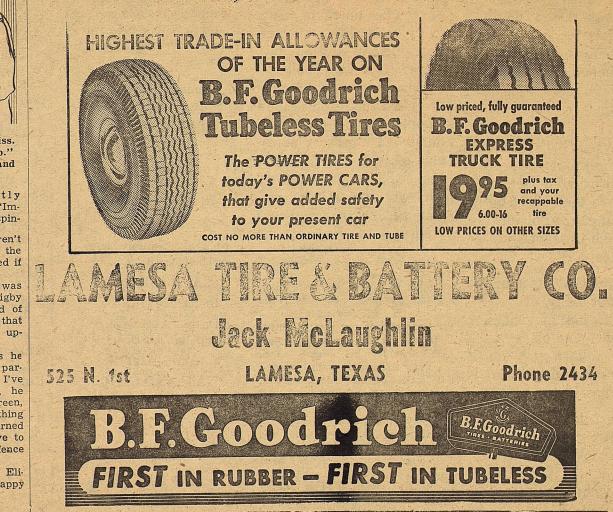

She was walking at a much faster clip than usual when she reached Mr. Rigby's fence. Suddenly she heard someone calling rather furtively. She stopped for a moment behind the hedge and peered over the top. There was the handsome young stranger with a huge bone in his hand. "Rockets, Rockets," he was calling in a loud whisper."

"I'm terribly sorry, miss. Here let me pick that up." He handed her the package and put out a hand in apology.

Mr. Murray seemed greatly amused at the insinuation. "Imagine him calling you an old spinster. All of twenty-three aren't you?" He laughed again at the joke. "Wouldn't he be surprised if he were to see you."

Elinor, not easily agitated, was beginning to dislike Mr. Rigby immensely. "Just what kind of precious birds is he keeping that Rockets should get him so upset?"

Darndest thing I ever saw." Mr. Murray turned to go. "Guess you'll just have to chain him up or build the fence higher. Bye, good luck."

EVERYBODY with a grain of sense wants to be happy. Most sensible people also know the kind of happiness they want, though some of them have not yet found the way to get it. What we really want is a happiness that will not melt in the rains of "misfortune," will not slip from our grasp in the nights of sorrow, will not be blown away by the winds of disappointment. What we want, in short, is happiness that will last. Furthermore, if we are grown persons and not children, and not children, we want a happi- Dr. Foreman ness that goes much deeper than the surface. We don't want one that is tied to things. We want a happiness that reaches the inside of our lives and is not a mere glamorous finish on the outside.

Handicaps Of Happiness That very practical friend of God and man, Saint Paul, is a solid example of how true happiness can prevail over the most disheartening handicaps. Many a man in his situation would say to himself: Happiness is just not possible for me. If things were only different, I could be happy. But consider the handicaps of Paul's happiness. He was a Jew in the Roman Empire, and a Christian among Jews-a member of a minority group either way you take it. He was in a situation where his future was most uncertain. If Paul had waited for "security" he never would have known happiness to his dying day. He was never a well man; at the time of the Philippian letter he was a prisoner. Freedom, health, security, power—he lacked all these. But he did not lack happi-ness. If Paul could find happiness, so can any one.

Grass Silage Use Growing, AD Says

available.

U. S. D. A. gives the following three reasons for the rapid growth:

1. Increased acreage and yield of grassland crops. 2. Need for preserving more and better feed for livestock.

3. Better methods of harvesting, storing and feeding grass silage. All grass silages properly made from fresh green crops, or with dry materials added, will provide enough carotene, if fed liberally, to produce milk with a good yellow color and a high vitamin A content. Wilted silage will also contain enough carotene for the and small fields where there are production of high vitamin A milk, if properly made from an earlycut crop.

Maximum utilization of pasture and low-cost grass silage will provide the lowest feed cost. Grass silage with a moderate moisture content (65 to 75 per cent) made from forage cut at an early stage of maturity will come nearest meeting all the essential requirements of such a program, U.S.D.A. reports.

The United States Department The University of Illinois reof Agriculture reports a rapid in- ports that spraying thin asphalt crease in grass silage making coating over the soil after seeding during the past few years.
