Dear Editor

We want to thank and commend the Plains Volunteer Fire Department for their efficiency and commitment to their work. We had a module of cotton to burn out near Bronco and the firemen responded to the call and went immediately. They also exhibited skill in putting out the smoldering module.

These men and women have been responding to fires at a near average of two fires a day since Thanksgiving including the big grass fire out west. Fire fighting is dangerous and exhausting and we want to thank each and every one of these men and women who feel a responsibility to this community.

So to Bear Paw, Robert and Brenda Wasson, Charles and LaDonna Diamond, Roland and Debbie Taylor, Deryl Sellers, Vincente Loya Jr., Frank Madrano, James Wright, Calvin Weir, Valentine Luna and Lewis Nelson and to Jim Barron for sending equipment out west...Thank You Very Much! The Plains Chamber of Commerce supports the community through programs to benefit the economy of the town as well as its people, Jim Warren said.

"We (the chamber) are designed to help boost the economy of the community," said Warren, the third year president of the chamber.

By attracting new businesses in Plains, sponsoring ribbon cutting ceremonies and supporting the clean up of trash around the town, the chamber is trying to spread and enhance the reputation of Plains throughout the South Plains, Warren said.

A "Yard of the Week" contest is sponsored by the chamber as well as many Open Houses, Warren said.

The group of about 30 members also sponsors the annual Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony, Warren said. This year's ceremony, celebrated last Wednesday night, with Santa Claus watching over and carols being sung.

From The Superintendent's Desk

Dean Andrews

I have not written about school funding for several weeks now and during this time a new group called "School Finance Working Group" has come forward with a plan to meet the requirements of the Edgewood vs Kirby law suit. This group is made up of thirteen professional organizations.

The plan, entitled "Texas Guaranteed Yield Program," has as its ultimate goal the assurance that no fewer than 95 percent of Texas public school students have an equal opportunity to have access to the money needed to provide a quality education. The plan says that state education funds should be distributed on the basis of local property tax wealth and local tax effort. Districts that must increase their local tax effort, either to replace losses of state aid or to qualify for the maximum state funding, should be given some flexibility from the current laws providing for rollback elections and truth-in-taxation law.

Preliminary estimates say the plan could require an additional $1.5 billion in state aid when fully implemented in 1995-96. Another $600 million would be used to cover capital debts and facility costs.

In brief, the major points of the plan include:

- * A five year phase-in period to allow the state and local districts to adjust to changes in the funding system. Losses or gains of state aid by school districts under the new system would be limited during the phase-in period.

- * Asking the state to establish a minimum standard of education and the mechanisms necessary to ensure its delivery.

- * The career ladder be fully funded.

- * Funding formulas for compensatory education and "at risk" students should be adjusted to place more emphasis on drop-out prevention.

- * State facilities aid should be distributed by wealth and local debt service effort. A maximum of 10 percent of a districts total program allotment should be made available to a district for facilities based on needs criteria and data on accountable costs per square foot of instructional space.

- * The state should eliminate the first grade TEAMS test, and should adopt a system of norm-referenced testing for grades two through twelve.

- * The state should provide financial incentives as a means of recognizing exemplary performance by school districts.

- * The powers of education commissioner to discipline school board members should be increased.

Raising Ostriches

Hobby Turns Business

by Stacy Smith
Texas Tech Journalism Student

What is seven to eight feet tall, and has a long neck and long legs that account for most of its height?

What has legs that bend forward instead of backward and has feet with only two toes?

What has a big round body weighing 350 pounds and multiplies at a rate of one every three days?

Sound like something from outer space? The creatures are not extra terrestrials, they are ostriches being raised by Sue and Royce Randall.

What started out a hobby for Royce Randall has turned into a lucrative business.

Randall began raising ostriches as a hobby, but when the United States boycotted trade with South Africa, which is home to the ostrich, the price and value shot up.

"I just got into it for the fun of it, but then business turned good," Randall said. "In five or six years, there will be a breeders' market and ostriches will be as good as cattle."

Randall said the bird is a hot item because the whole bird is consumable. The meat is low cholesterol, the bones can be ground as bone meal, and the skin is a soft, fine-grained leather valuable for making boots and other leather goods.

Breeding season for the ostriches runs from February to August, and during that time they lay an egg every three days.

After the eggs are laid, they take 40 days to incubate.

The baby birds will hatch out standing about one and a half feet tall, and will grow at a rate of one foot a month until they reach seven or eight feet tall.

Randall says an adult ostrich will bring in anywhere from $25,000 to $30,000 while the babies will bring up to $2,000.

Randall said the birds are territorial and basically have a mild temperament except during breeding season.

The eggs, which can weigh as much as three pounds, are put in incubators until they hatch. Randall said it is hard to find incubators for such large eggs, so he "remodels" the available incubators, so the eggs will fit inside.

He said the eggs are good to eat, but added since the birds are so expensive, the eggs are too expensive to eat.

Randall said the birds like to run and exercise so they need lots of space. He keeps his in half acre pens that are surrounded by six-foot pipe fences.

He said the birds like to run around and dance when they wake up in the mornings. They dance by spinning around with their wings outstretched. During mating season, this is their mating ritual.

The birds are small brained animals and Randall said, "They are really dumb."

He said this may be the reason the birds can withstand blistering heat and freezing temperatures.

"Sometimes in the winter I can't even see them because snow and ice get all over them" Randall said, "They're tough old birds."

When they are frightened they start running; they can run as fast as 40 miles per hour. If cornered, they can deliver powerful, dangerous kicks.

The ostriches are black and brown and blend in nicely with the West Texas dirt and grasslands. At night they sleep sitting down with their long necks outstretched on the ground.

They do not bury their heads in the sand, Randall said. "That's just an old wives' tale."

The birds are relatively quiet except during their mating season when the males hoot like owls and the females hiss.

They eat mostly plant matter, corn and lettuce and some ground oyster shells so they can make strong eggs.

Randall said when he first began raising the ostriches, he had to make his own food for them because they were so uncommon that food could not be purchased for them.

"It has been very trial and error because not many people are involved," Randall said.

Now, however, there are three ostrich associations. "We formed these associations to share knowledge about ostriches," Randall said. "We get together and help each other out."

Randall said the ostrich business is really picking up. "I don't have to take them to sales. When people find out I'm selling them, they just call," he said.

"It's a neat hobby," Randall commented. "The market is good now, but I got into just because I like them."

NOTICE

NOTICE TO POKA-LAMBRO SUBSCRIBERS
END-USER CHARGE INCREASE

Effective December 1, 1988, the interstate subscriber line charge will increase by 60 cents. This charge is mandated by the Federal Communications Commission. This 60 cent increase will be followed by the final increase of 30 cents in April, 1989, and will complete the $3.50 cap set by the FCC in 1985. This $3.50 has been phased in over a 5 year period as required by the FCC.

The end-user charges are designed to recover a portion of costs of connecting telephone customers to the Nation-Wide telephone network that in the past were recovered through interstate long distance charges.

Due to the changes in the telephone industry and increasing competition in long distance telephone service, the FCC determined that it is no longer appropriate to recover certain local network costs through long distance charges, thus the end-user charges were implemented.
