Reagan, Gorbachev prepare to meet in Iceland

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union joined the Reagan administration Wednesday in predicting a breakthrough on curbing nuclear weapons at the meeting in Iceland between President Reagan and General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

Presidential chief of Staff Donald Regan said the two days of summitry Oct. 11-12 "could lead to a better understanding and, perhaps, some give here and there in order to reach an agreement so we get some arms reductions."

For the Soviet Union, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said he expects in Reykjavik "some kind of breakthrough" in the form of instructions to lower-level weapons specialists to solidify an agreement.

"It's quite possible that we can have movement" on missiles, the Soviet official said on NBC-TV's "Today" program. "We want ... our leaders to put their heads together and to think big and to find some kind of direction to solve our problems."

Secretary of State George Shultz, meanwhile, said Reagan had accepted Gorbachev's proposal for a two-day, informal meeting within two weeks because "the name of the game here is to solve problems."

Noting that a range of issues will be discussed, Shultz, interviewed on the NBC program, said: "We are in a position, I hope, to make some progress on these problems that I think all of us would want to see resolved if it's possible to do so."

Beyond arms control issues, Reagan and Gorbachev are likely to agree on broader cultural exchanges and expanding consular offices in the two countries, an administration official said.

The two sides also have established "an extensive dialogue" on the guerrilla wars in five countries,

Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia, Ethiopia and Nicaragua, since Reagan proposed a year ago that they set up negotiations to end the conflicts, the official said.

Overall, "there are some interesting prospects" for the Iceland meeting, said the official, who demanded anonymity.

He said Reagan would press Gorbachev to allow more Soviet Jews to emigrate to Israel. The exodus is at a two-year low. Apart from reuniting some divided families by permitting Soviet citizens to join their relatives in the West, "there has been no progress on broad human rights issues," the official said.

Reagan and Gorbachev also are expected to take up the U.S. order to expel 105 Soviet diplomats over the next two years. As part of the deal that brought American reporter Nicholas Daniloff home, Shultz extended for two weeks Wednesday's deadline for 25 to depart.

Indeed, Gerasimov said the dispute over the order, which the Soviets say is illegal and could lead to retaliation, will be resolved at Reykjavik.

"The ultimate decision is going to be taken during this summit," the foreign ministry spokesman said.

Shultz maintained, meanwhile, that "we are getting our objectives as far as the U.N. arrangements are concerned."

The Los Angeles Times, quoting unidentified U.S. counterintelligence sources, reported Wednesday that the chief of the KGB station and the GRU military intelligence chief at the United Nations were among the 25 and that they would be allowed to remain.

The newspaper identified the KGB chief as Valery Ivanovich Savchenko, who is listed as a counselor at the mission, and Vladislav Borisovich Skvortsov, who is listed as a senior counsel — both in political affairs.

Charles Redman, a State Department spokesman, declined to discuss which of the 25 have not departed, or which might be permitted to remain.

The two world leaders probably will also set a date for their long-delayed formal summit meeting in Washington, an administration official who demanded anonymity said Tuesday night.

Regan, appearing on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said he did not think any agreement would be signed by the president and Gorbachev in Iceland.

"I am not trying to hype this meeting to that extent," he said. "But I do think that an exchange of views between them could lead to a better understanding and perhaps some give here and give there in order to reach an agreement so we can get some arms reductions, some progress in human relations, lessening of tensions throughout the world."

As Reagan toured the newly opened Jimmy Carter presidential library in Atlanta Wednesday, the president was asked about concern among his supporters that he would give away too much at the summit in Iceland.

"I'm not in the give-away business," Reagan replied.

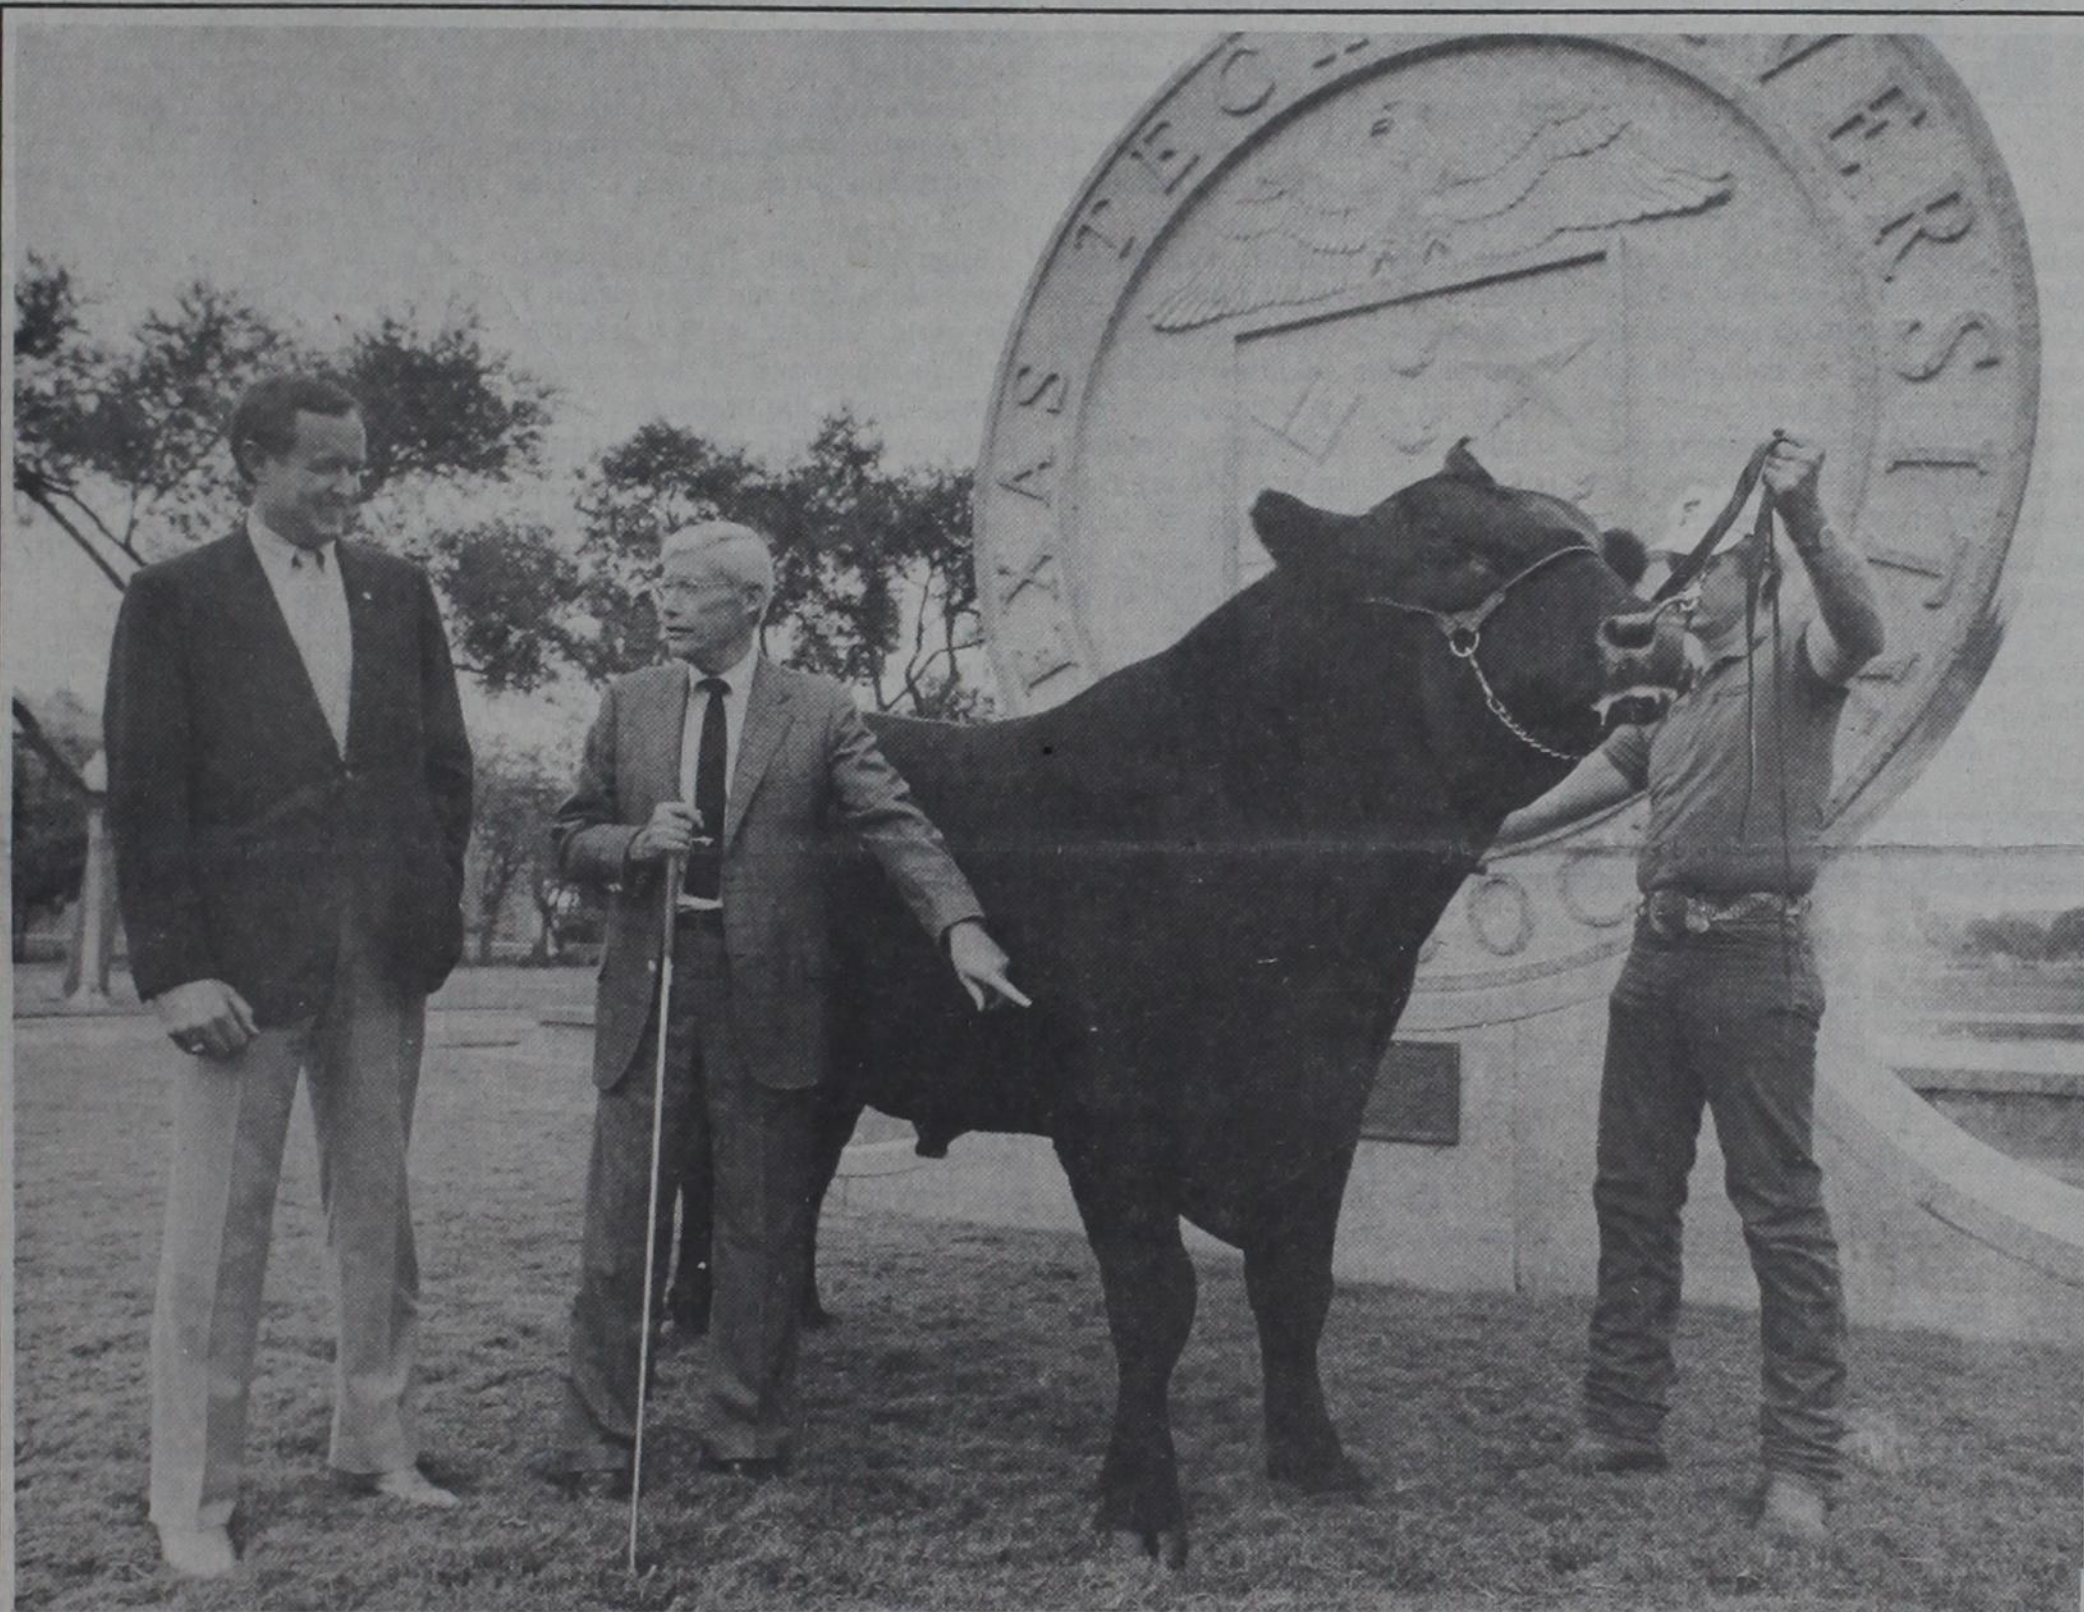

Asked about critics who charged that he surrendered to the Soviets in exchanging Daniloff for Gennady Zhakarov, the Soviet physicist who had been arrested and charged with spying in the United States, Reagan said, "The ones who are saying that are members of your profession," referring to reporters.

Regan, appearing in the Rose Garden with Daniloff Wednesday afternoon, was asked once more whether he had caved in to the Soviets.

"I don't think there's any caving in at all," the president replied, adding, "because no one had to cave in."

Regan and his wife Nancy appeared in the Rose Garden with Daniloff and his wife, Ruth, and their children, Miranda, 23, and Caleb, 16.

The president denied that his meeting with Gorbachev was linked to Daniloff's release.

TABC notes increase in alcohol violations

By JAY MILLER
News Staff Writer

The increase of the drinking age in Texas from 19 to 21 — after its first month of enforcement — has led to a dramatic increase in the number of locally issued citations for alcohol-related violations, said Hank Blanchard, an enforcement agent with the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission.

Blanchard said local citations issued in September for minors in possession of an alcoholic beverage rose by 40 percent over the number issued in August. He said that in August about 40 citations were issued for minor-in-possession violations compared with 60 citations issued during September, the first month of enforcement of the new drinking age.

Blanchard said the number of Texas Tech students given citations for minor in possession has increased as well. In August, 16 of the citations issued were given to Tech students compared with more than 40 underage Tech students cited for the violation during September.

The majority of the locally issued minor-in-possession citations, classified as a Class C misdemeanor carrying a fine from $25 to $200, have been issued outside establishments located along "the Strip" on the Tahoka Highway, Blanchard said.

He said no citations have been issued to any local establishment owners for providing alcohol to a minor, a Class B misdemeanor, since the drinking age changed Sept. 1.

Statewide figures reflecting an increase in the number of citations issued to minors were not available, said Jack Jett, a TABC law enforcement official in Austin. However, Jett said he expects to see an increase in the number of citations issued statewide when figures became available.

Blanchard said he does not expect to see either an increase or decrease in the number of citations issued during the coming months.

"We expect to see the number of citations level off pretty soon," Blanchard said. "It is fairly easy to change a law overnight, but it takes a little while for people's attitudes to change."

"I think as these minors realize that drinking is really not worth the risk of being given a citation and fined, we'll see a leveling off of the number of citations given out," he said.

Blanchard said the use of altered or fake IDs in local establishments has reached "epidemic" proportions and that the TABC is going to begin cracking down on those offenders.

During September, TABC agents confiscated 40 to 50 fake IDs from minors without issuing a citation for misrepresentation of age, a Class C misdemeanor with a fine between $25 to $200. He said, however, the widespread use of fake IDs is going to force agents to begin issuing citations for the misrepresentation of age.

"In the past, I've been reluctant to begin piling fines up on students, but it (fake ID use) has become such a problem we are going to have to start issuing citations for these violations, as well," Blanchard said.

Botha threatens to end purchases of grain

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The South African foreign minister warned two U.S. farm state senators his country would immediately end purchases of U.S. grain if the Senate overrides President Reagan's veto of economic sanctions against South Africa, Sen. Richard Lugar said Wednesday night.

Lugar, R-Ind., called the action by Foreign Minister Pik Botha "despicable" and an unacceptable intrusion into Senate business that amounts to "bribery and intimidation."

Lugar, who is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the two senators — Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, — were called to the telephone in the Senate Republican cloakroom by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a strong opponent of the sanctions.

According to Lugar, Zorinsky said the South African foreign minister told him that "the moment that you override President Reagan's veto, South Africa will immediately ban U.S. grain imports. ..."

Lugar said Botha also declared that South Africa would react to the override of the veto by barring from its ports U.S. grain shipments bound for the so-called frontline black African nations, some of which are landlocked and all of which are largely dependent on South Africa for transportation facilities.

"I believe that all Americans, and especially American farmers, will condemn foreign bribery and intimidation to change the votes of the U.S. Senate," Lugar said.

He said South Africa has turned to the American grain market and increased purchases of U.S. grain in the aftermath of sanctions imposed by Canada and Australia, which also are major grain exporters.

"We are being bribed because others have had moral courage and done what they should have done," Lugar said.

Lugar said he believes the White House lacks the votes needed to sustain the Reagan veto and said, "I feel confident the veto will be overridden."

The Senate, which is to vote this afternoon on whether to override the veto, opened a four-hour debate on the issue as Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said senators might legitimately consider the possible adverse impact of sanctions on their states.

Dole said the South Africans have in the past bought "substantial quantities" of wheat and corn. "I do believe that makes the point ... that there may be some consequences some people in our states, farmers, may have to contend with."

Helms said sanctions will "shoot the American farmer in the foot." And he confirmed that "Pik Botha called me and several other senators and said, 'We will have to announce we will cease to purchase U.S. grain if the president's veto is overridden.'"

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said Pik Botha also told senators that South Africa will purchase more U.S. wheat if the veto is sustained.

Earlier in the day, Reagan lobbied senators by telephone in a final push to preserve his veto of sanctions aimed at pressuring the South African government to abandon the system of apartheid.

Overriding a presidential veto requires two-thirds of senators present and voting. The House overrode the veto earlier this week.

Secretary of State George Shultz, asked whether the administration has the votes to sustain the veto, replied: "Well, I don't know. We're working on it."

"I think it's very important that the Senate sustain the president's veto first and foremost on the merits," Shultz said on NBC-TV's "Today" show. " ... What the Senate bill, the Congress bill, will do is cause the United States to, in effect, withdraw from South Africa."

Leaders bargain lives

Denise Tackett
Copy Editor

It now seems that the world leaders have resorted to using human beings as bargaining chips. The month-long imprisonment of American reporter Nicholas Daniloff ended Monday as the journalist was "freed" and Genadiy Zakharov was whisked away to his homeland.

According to The Associated Press, the agreement also included the stipulation that Yuri Orlov, a Soviet human rights activist, and his wife be released from Siberia.

Did the United States give in? No. After all, we got the better part of the bargain — three people for one. Admittedly, the United States was in a bind. We couldn't very well start a war over one person now, could we?

The entire issue, however, smells distinctly like a cattle deal. "I'll trade this bull for that one."

The maddening fact is that Reagan is denying that the whole deal actually was a trade. The AP wire included a story in which the president claimed the United States "didn't give in," however, "neither Reagan nor his top aides would divulge any details of what circumstances made Daniloff's liberation possible." When asked if the president blinked in the exchange standoff, he replied, "They blinked."

If Daniloff is innocent as he claims, then Reagan has committed a travesty of justice. He traded one innocent man for a supposedly guilty one. Daniloff himself stated at the beginning of the ordeal that his release in exchange for Zakharov's would as much as convict him of the crime.

Moreover, in the midst of his limo ride to the airport Monday (yeah, let's exile these guys with a little bit of style), Zakharov rolled down his window and told reporters, "I am not a spy!"

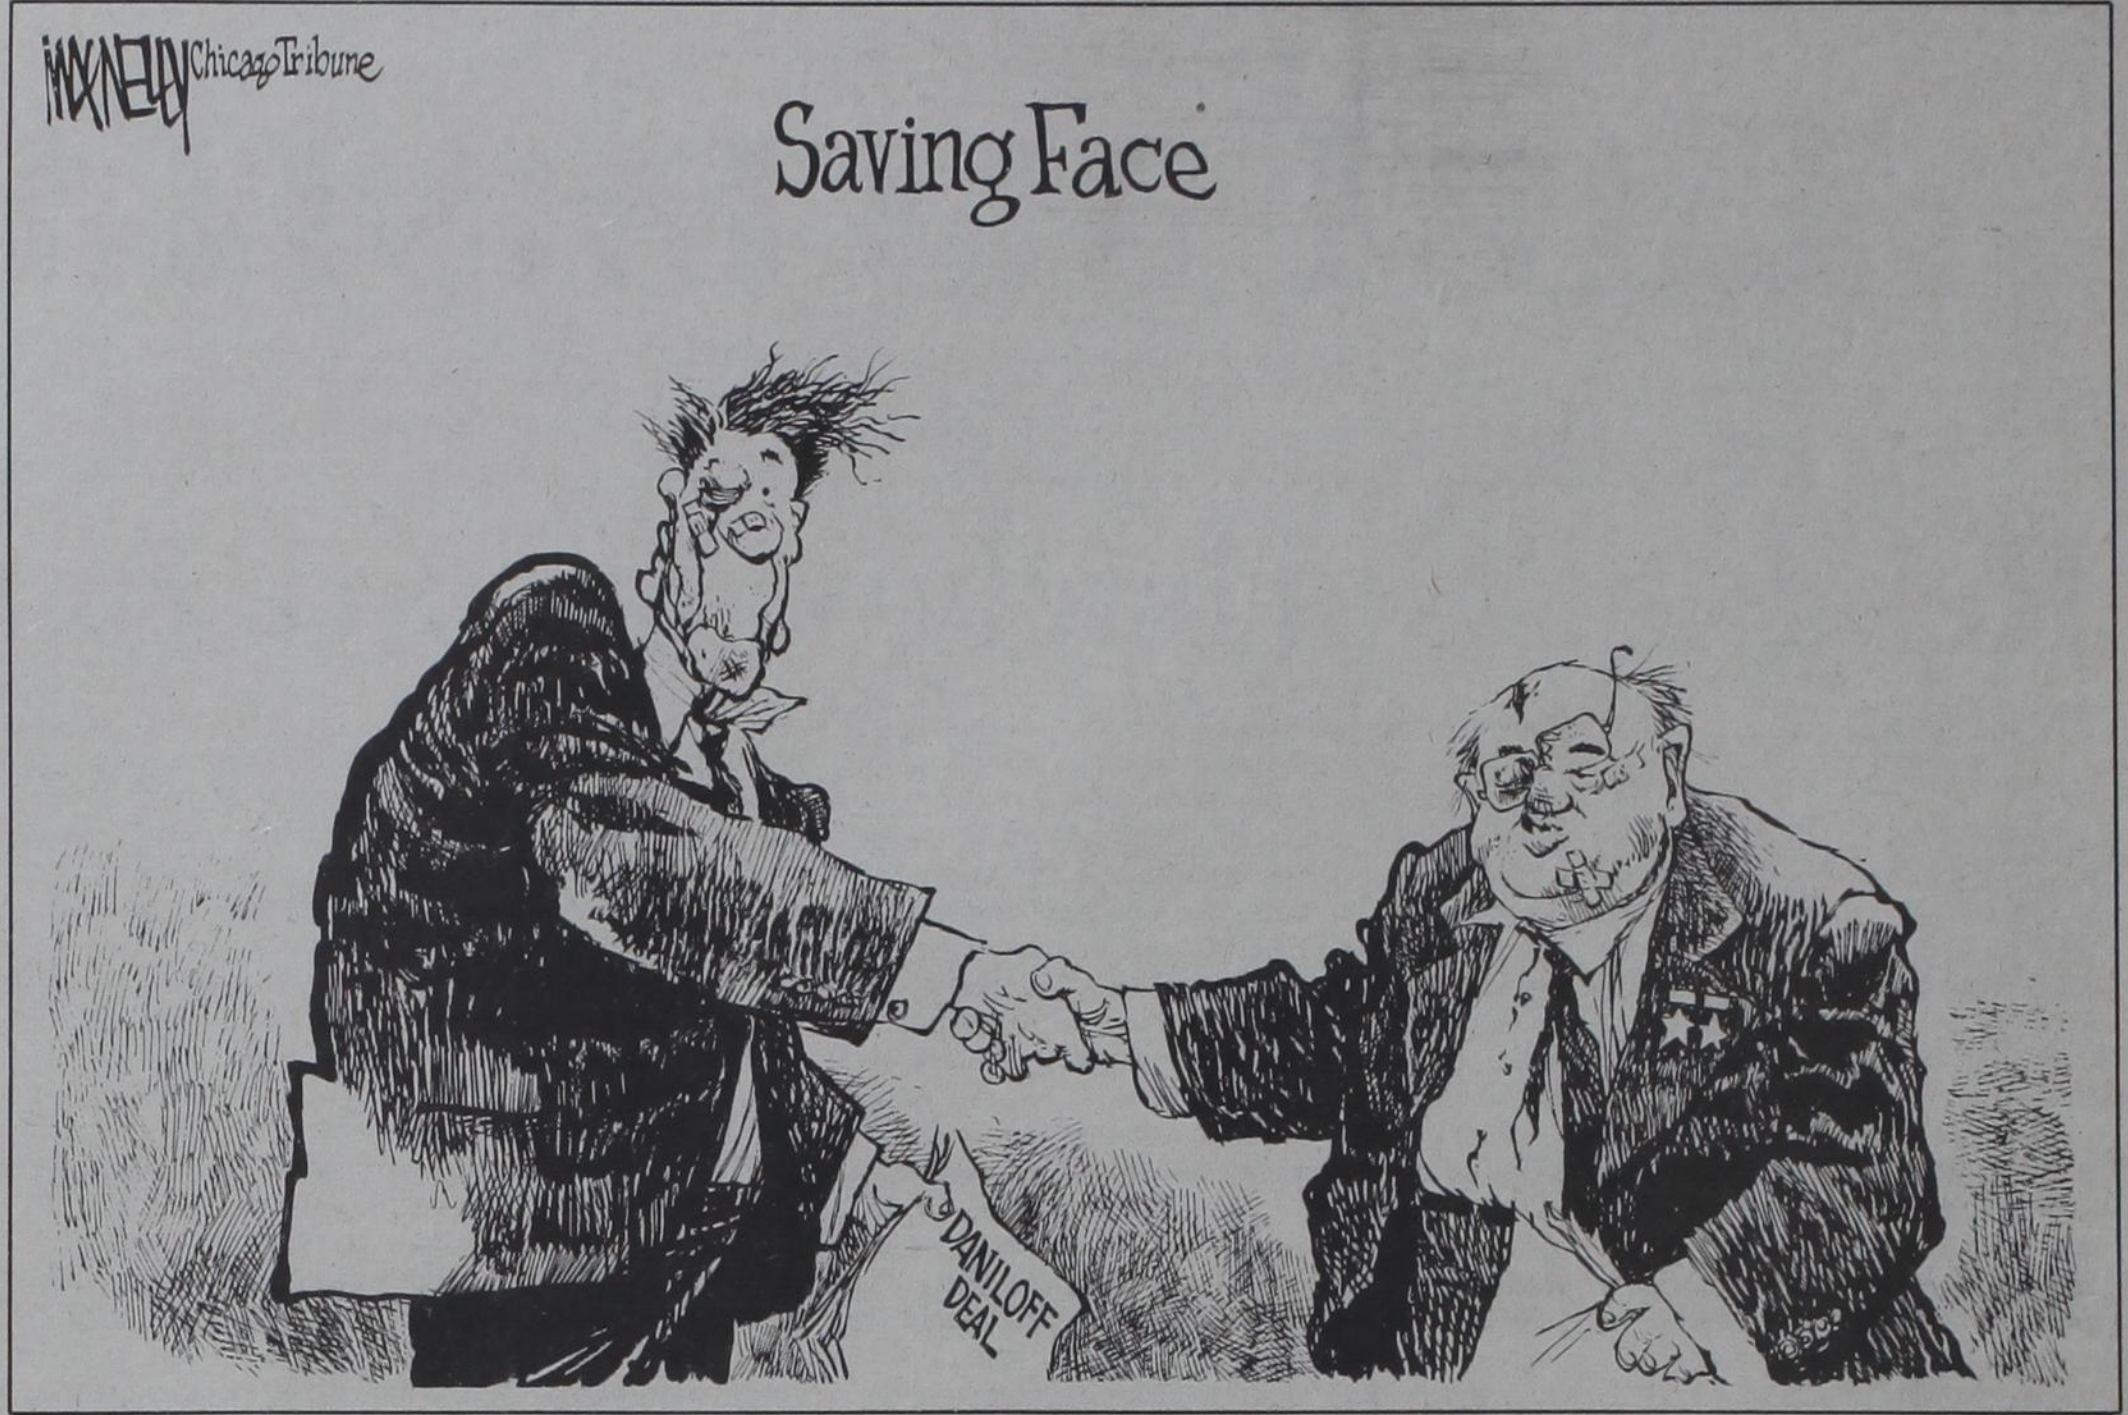

The two situations seem remarkably similar. Both men were "caught red-handed" with government papers. But it's just not possible that the United States government would ever do anything so underhanded as framing an innocent man.

Where, then, does Yuri Orlov come into the picture? The Soviet dissident opposed the Russian regime and thus was exiled to Siberia. His civil rights actions seem to have a uniquely American flare. Oh well, maybe he is just one of those extras you get if you buy a product at a special price. You know, kinda like a potato peeler-slicer-dicer thing.

The upcoming "meeting" between Reagan and Gorbachev is scheduled for Oct. 11 in Iceland. Why not? It seems like an appropriate place considering the chilly conditions the men are getting together under.

How the two can face each other with any semblance of respect is beyond me. They both resorted to underhanded means of acquiring the ends they wanted.

More important, what's going to happen the next time a spy is apprehended in the United States? Maybe the opposing power will throw in a couple of short-ranged missiles and a pair of diamond earrings.

America strives to be the best on the trivial

Cindy Pandolfo
News Staff Writer

A feature story in a recent newspaper boasted of America's achievements, listing areas in which the United States ranks first. Areas of achievement reveal more about the character of America than we as a nation might care to know.

For instance, America has the most Nobel prize-winners. We also have more dentists, newspapers and automobiles per capita than any other nation in the world.

We are the number one importers of bananas, yachts, blazers, vitamins and opiates, and we are major importers of movies and radioactive materials. America produces more pesticides, nectarines and beer than any other country in the world. The United States has been in the number one position in the field of nuclear weapons since the birth of the Atomic Age.

So what's the point? In a country with advanced technology and prosperity, it's sad that so many of America's firsts are linked to material possessions.

We follow the USSR, Canada and China in size and we rank fourth in population. As the fourth largest country in the world, we also rank fourth in the production of food staples such as sugar, potatoes, onions and cucumbers. We are No. 4 in libraries, tourist trade and in the production of chickens, turkeys and milk cows. America also has the fourth largest divorce rate.

One irony of America's position in the world is that the United States houses the largest populations of both Christians and Jews in the world, yet the country is the leading consumer of cocaine.

We trail other countries in the advancement of health-related fields such as the prevention, quality and cost of health care. We rank 13th in infant mortality and 15th in prevention of deaths related to childbirth. We have lower birth weight rates than a country steeped in poverty such as China.

Americans have more material possessions than any other people of the world. And yet, we have less time to take advantage of those possessions. Female life expectancy ranks ninth among world nations and male life expectancy is ranked 19th.

Americans seem to have created a utopia where anyone can succeed if they apply themselves and work hard. However, is our society really a utopia as long as the problems of starvation and deprivation exist within our environment? Not only do we have fewer years to enjoy life, but many Americans within the borders of the United States don't really live. They merely exist.

Results of a survey published by Redbook magazine indicate that more than 50 percent of all children living in the United States are living in poverty. National child care programs are nonexistent. Ask these children if America is number one.

If bombs, cars and drugs are the things Americans value, maybe we need to re-examine our priorities. How can America as a nation oppose the inhumane treatment of people in countries such as South Africa or the Soviet Union when we refuse to acknowledge the right of American citizens to necessities of life such as food, clothing and shelter?

America needs to be more introspective. We need to re-evaluate our priorities. A country that does not provide for its own citizens does not deserve to be number one.

For the majority

To the editor: I'd appreciate it if people like Dawn Coplan wouldn't speak on behalf of "society" or "the majority of Americans." I doubt the eradication of so-called pornography would have any profound effects on AIDS, taxes, divorce or crime. It might have an effect on taste, since there appear to be two kinds of publications: those which are fairly tasteful, like Playboy (in which you can find very informative interviews and excellent fiction. Honest.) and those less tasteful, which bear names such as Spanking Nuns.

Yeahs for Robertson

To the editor: The proposed presidential candidacy of Pat Robertson has gained a great deal of press association. An article of particular interest to the campus community appeared in The University Daily (Denise Tackett's "Robertson muddles church/state separation"). In her analysis of the reverend's candidacy she expresses a number of reservations about his candidacy; on some I agree. However, there are some with which I disagree and feel obliged to reply.

At the outset I must explain that I do not support Pat Robertson for president. Further, I am not a fundamentalist but rather a Roman Catholic.

One of the interesting things about the media coverage of Robertson is the similarity to the coverage given Jack Kennedy in 1960. In that election people feared that if Kennedy won the pope would rule America. Well, Kennedy won and the republic survived. Likewise, if Robertson wins, the republic will survive.

In her editorial Miss Tackett asks her reader, "will the pastor be able to keep from injecting his religious views on the public?" The obvious answer is no. The tone of Miss Tackett's question suggests it is bad for a public official to inject his sense of morality upon the body politic. I do not believe that is true. In a democracy, it is the duty of a leader to persuade his countrymen that his policies are correct. In the marketplace of ideas, those founded upon religion deserve the same hearing as all others.

Miss Tackett next tells us, "I firmly believe in the age-old American ideal of separation of church and state." The question Miss Tackett fails to answer is exactly what separation of church and state means. The founders, who gave us the first amendment, opposed the idea of a national church. Yet, did they intend to build a wall of separation topped with barbed wire to keep religion off the public square? History shows that they did not. Nor should we, because as Education Secretary William Bennett said, "The fate of our democracy is intimately intertwined — 'entangled', if you will — with the vitality of the Judeo-Christian tradition. From the Judeo-Christian tradition come our values, our principles, the animating spirit of our institutions."

Miss Tackett further argues that the problems facing our country are not "moral problems." This is an arguable assumption. Yet, suppose that we pay off the national debt, the Soviet Union ceased to exist and we ended poverty. Would America then be a "shining city on a hill?" We would still have three out of four marriages ending in divorce, millions of single-parent families, about one million abortions a year and countless teenage suicides — suicides occurring in economically well off and sophisticated suburbs. Those are moral problems, social problems left unaddressed by most politicians.

Those are issues which our generation must face, as well as the economic issues. Country Club Republicans and Welfare State Democrats ignore those issues.

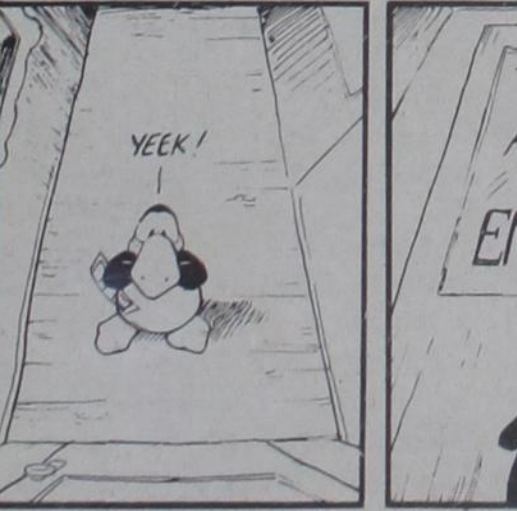

They are issues of flesh and blood, and Robertson believes they are the important issues. For that, the good reverend deserves two cheers.

Boo tenure

To the editor: It is unfortunate that "tenure" is often perceived by professors, administrators, regents and students alike as meaning a lifetime guarantee of a job, regardless of performance. Tenure at Tech is a sham! In so many instances it has produced faculty members who, feeling this false sense of security, treat students no better than dirt. These individuals have lost sense of the primary and secondary responsibilities of their "respected" position — to educate students and contribute to the quality of that education through research and publication.

I had a professor recently whose whole idea of teaching class was to stand in front of it and recite, virtually verbatim, the textbook. No attempt to challenge us. No real-world insights. No practical guidelines. No stimulating theoretical questioning. I made a "B" in the class by attending it a grand total of eight times, by reading the very same textbook the professor was so determined to read to us, and by taking four mediocre tests (no final exam). This in a junior-level course. This from a tenure Ph.D with seniority at this institution. The fact that this individual has been allowed to continue to teach is a disgrace. Fire a tenured professor at Texas Tech for poor performance? I hope I live to see the day.

But maybe I will. Finally, a Tech professor (a Horn professor and department chairperson, at that), Dr. Henry Wright (range and wildlife department) has come out and said what so many students and alumni have known for years: that our past, current and proposed financial exigency tenure policies are failing. No one could improve on his words as expressed so eloquently in the Sept. 26 UD article: "...there are professors at Tech who do nothing — they either cannot or will not teach, they refuse to advise students, they intimidate students so classes will be smaller and they make no effort to conduct research. 'Tenure is important, but it should not be equated with performance... If I'm not doing anything for the university — teaching or research — then tenure should not protect me from losing my job... If we don't build a young faculty, Texas Tech is in real trouble. We don't need any more problems.'"

Where has this eloquent and courageous person been hiding? Dr. Wright's talents are being wasted as a department chairperson — he should be a dean! Certainly a majority of Tech faculty are not shabby or undeserving of tenure. But in the six years I've spent here, the problem has definitely gotten worse.

Defending liberals

To the editor: I am, as many of my friends will attest, a "devout" liberal. I am also, as many others should be, appalled by the horribly broad generalizations made by Sam Fields in his letter appearing on Sept. 30, 1986.

As a liberal, I see the world with all its good and bad points, but I believe that we can change the bad ones and strengthen the good ones — an optimistic viewpoint, I agree, but only through optimism can progression occur. Do not, therefore, attempt to label me as seeing the world as I wish. All I wish is that the people of this country are given a fair chance, and, because ours is an imperfect system, this brings about the need for social programs. Quota systems are necessary until the remnants of prejudices are wiped out; prayers should be in our private lives, not our politics, because an intermixing can lead to the election of an Aytollah — possibly not the next step, but rather a series of gradual steps.

I agree that my view does not contain all the answers, and that is why I am tolerant of conservatives. I know that by trying to understand each other a compromise can be reached that will work better than either of the extremes. I suggest then, Mr. Fields, that you too try to understand the opposing viewpoint and stop seeing liberals as moral degenerates.

Cross about puzzle

To the editor: I wanted to ask one question: WHAT HAPPENED TO THE CROSSWORD PUZZLE? It was my favorite pastime besides "Bloom County." While I sat around waiting for my next class, I would attempt to do the crossword puzzle. Even when my class was just not as exciting as my hopes were set for, my old buddy, The Crossword Puzzle, was there to save the day (or hour).

I know everything is changing because of budget cuts, but does this also include the crossword puzzle? To me, I actually thought it was an advertisement because it was sponsored by the Pancake House.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The crossword puzzle was contained in an advertisement sponsored by a local restaurant. The restaurant owners opted to not resume carrying the crossword puzzle this year. Another advertiser to carry the puzzle has not been found.

Legislators fail to eliminate Texas' deficit

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — They debated, negotiated, feuded, cut spending and raised taxes. But when lawmakers ended their back-to-back special sessions, state government still was almost $1 billion in the hole.

Comptroller Bob Bullock reported Wednesday that despite all the budget juggling by the Legislature, a deficit of $983 million remains.

Bullock said the special sessions "improved but did not solve" the state's money woes.

"The tax bill and spending cuts and bookkeeping maneuvers have chiseled away at the problem," Bullock said.

However, he said, the regular legislative session in January will have to deal with the remaining income shortfall brought on by the falling price of oil.

"They face the prospect of seeing taxes and finances top their agenda when the regular session starts in January," the comptroller added.

Before the special sessions began, Bullock estimated that state government faced a $2.3 billion shortfall in its major funds, and a bottom-line deficit in all funds totaling $2.8 billion.

Several estimates have been given of what reduced oil monies will mean for the 1988-89 fiscal years.

Lawmakers have been told that the deficit for that biennium could run between $3 billion and $6 billion.

During the special sessions that were convened on Aug. 6 and Sept. 8, the Legislature made a variety of financial moves. Chief among them were:

— An $872 million increase in sales and gasoline taxes, to be in effect from Jan. 1 to Aug. 31, 1987.

— Spending cuts which legislators pegged at about $510 million.

— Elimination of a 3 percent pay raise planned for state workers, saving another $70.7 million.

— Shifting state workers' pay day from the end of the month to the beginning of the next, which results in a one-time savings of $197 million.

— Delaying until February the government's payments to teacher and state employee retirement funds. That provides about $64 million a month for cash-flow purposes that lawmakers said would help keep the state from writing bad checks in December.

"The Legislature has given the state some breathing room by narrowing the budget gap," Bullock said in a statement.

Gov. Mark White was traveling Wednesday and not immediately available to comment on Bullock's new report, his press office said.

Carter dedicates Atlanta library housing presidential documents

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Former President Jimmy Carter presented to the nation Wednesday a sprawling complex containing documents and photos from his administration, a period which President Reagan said was marked by Carter's "passion and intellect and commitment."

The two leaders joined about 9,000 people, including former Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale, at a ceremony marking the dedication and public opening of the Carter Presidential Center.

Carter, celebrating his 62nd birthday, presented the National Archives and Records Administration with the deed to the Carter Presidential Library and Museum, which takes up more than half of the 130,000-square-foot complex on 30 acres.

He called the library and museum exhibit on his presidency "a gift from me and my family to all the people of the United States in appreciation for the great honor you have bestowed on us."

But Carter said he looked forward to a future of continued public service through a human rights organization, a conservation foundation and an Emory University-based public policy "think tank" housed in the remainder of the Carter Presidential Center, which is owned by an operating foundation.

"We appreciate the past. We are grateful for the present and we're looking forward to the future with great anticipation and commitment," he said.

NEWS BRIEFS

Warrant issued for ax murder suspect

LANCASTER (AP) — A murder warrant was issued Wednesday for a 34-year-old man who was staying at a house where three women were hacked to death with a knife and hatchet, authorities said.

David Martin Long, who left the house Saturday in a station wagon owned by one of the slain women, was charged with capital murder in a warrant signed by a state district judge in Dallas, said Steve Harris, assistant city manager in this suburban city.

Authorities believe Long sped south on Interstate 45, where he was jailed about 100 miles away in Leon County for investigation of drunken driving.

Officers said it was Monday morning, 36 hours later, before the grisly murder scene was discovered. By the time an all-points bulletin could be released with a description of the stolen car, the man had been released from jail on a $500 bond, authorities said Tuesday.

The 6-foot, 190-pound mustached man, described as the prime suspect in the triple killing, was believed to have hitchhiked to Houston after his release about 10 a.m. Monday.

Economy forces SMU to reorganize

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist University will begin reorganizing administrative departments to cope with the financial strains caused by a flat Texas economy, the institution's president said.

Administrative reorganization is expected to continue for the next three years, said SMU President Donald Shields.

"We are trying to preserve the integrity of our academic programs and face up to the budget reality here," said Shields.

As University officials leave or change posts, Shields said, their posts will be reduced in scope, renamed or possibly eliminated.

He said the reorganization will involve staff reductions through attrition and layoffs. He declined to say exactly how many positions would be cut and where.

"I think it would be inappropriate," said Shields.

Natural resources could boost tourism

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — State officials could improve the Texas tourism industry by promoting natural resources, development specialists said Wednesday at a conference on revitalizing the economy.

"The economic value of Texas' wildlife, fisheries and related natural resources has increased dramatically in recent years but remains underexploited," Lonnie Jones of Texas A&M's Department of Agricultural Economics said.

Daniloff visits, thanks Reagan at White House

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nicholas Daniloff told President Reagan Wednesday that if it hadn't been for Reagan's "very deep and personal interest" in his case, he probably would have been kept in the Soviet Union for years.

Reporter Daniloff, spending his first full day in the United States since his release, met briefly with Reagan at the White House before the two made a joint appearance in the Rose Garden. They were joined there by Nancy Reagan, who stood next to the reporter, and Daniloff's wife, Ruth, and Daniloff's children, Miranda, 23, and Caleb, 16.

Reagan defended the arrangement with the Soviets that led to Daniloff's freedom, saying: "I don't think there's caving in at all." Daniloff had been arrested Aug. 30 by the KGB and charged with spying in the Soviet Union.

Asked whether U.S.-Soviet relations are back on track with Daniloff's release, the president said, "We'll find out in about 10 days." That was a reference to the planned meeting in Iceland Oct. 11-12 between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev

The meeting, described as preliminary discussions to a formal summit, was part of the deal ending in Daniloff's release.

Daniloff, 51, praised Reagan for his involvement in the case.

"This is a very complex situation and if it hadn't been for President Reagan taking a very deep and personal interest in my case it would probably be some years before I could stand in front of you and say, 'Thank you, Mr. President.'"

Earlier, Daniloff was given a warm welcome by co-workers in the lobby atrium at U.S. News • World Report. He said he was pleased with the "mini-summit" between the superpower leaders in Iceland, and wanted to cover it.

"I'm awfully, awfully moved," Daniloff said after the rousing welcome from colleagues who clapped, cheered and extended their hands. "I didn't know so many people worked here."

Daniloff said he would thank Reagan and the American officials "who, I think, turned themselves inside out" to secure his freedom. He was arrested in Moscow Aug. 30 on espionage charges, which the administration said were phony.

Profs study unethical accounting practices

By ANN McBRYDE
News Staff Writer

A student pursuing a career as an accountant should be aware that client requests to alter tax returns is a major ethical problem facing most certified public accountants, according to three business administration professors.

Don W. Finn, an accounting professor at Texas Tech, along with Horn professor of marketing Shelby D. Hunt and Lawrence B. Chonko, a Baylor University professor, have examined the major ethical problems facing accountants in a paper titled "Ethical Problems in Public Accounting: The View from the Top."

Finn sent a questionnaire to members of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) to illustrate that a problem of varying ethical standards does exist for accountants because of client requests.

In the results that were taken from the 213 respondents, Finn found that 33 percent had received requests for tax alterations, which was the largest problem encountered. Five other issues, tax fraud, financial statement alteration, conflict of interest and independence, and fee, personal and professional problems, also were cited frequently as difficult ethical issues.

Finn said although it is impossible to avoid such occurrences, "Accountants must be independent in fact and in appearance."

"We must remember our ethical bearing and stick by it at all times, because undoubtedly there will come a time when someone will ask that you compromise your ethics," he said.

Although about 35 percent of the CPAs surveyed perceived opportunities for unethical activities within firms, Finn said the study found that only 3 percent felt their co-workers had engaged in those practices.

Finn said the study showed that CPAs do not believe unethical behavior in general leads to success and that most believe successful CPAs do not engage in certain specific unethical behavior investigated in the survey.

"The study showed that 9 percent believed that generally unethical behaviors lead to success in CPA practice, and 10 percent agreed that it is necessary to compromise one's ethics in order to be successful," Finn said. "Although the 10 percent who are in agreement may seem like a lot, you have to consider that 90 percent disagreed."

Also, it was noted that when top management discourages unethical behavior, the ethical problems perceived by CPAs seem to be reduced, Finn said.

In the report, Finn noted the accounting profession recently has been under increased scrutiny by the House of Representatives subcommittee on oversight and investigations concerning activities that undermine the integrity of financial statements.

Finn said it is important for both instructors at the academic level and practicing accountants to play roles in future research involving accounting ethics and behaviors.

Tech library installs new reading machine

By HOLLY HATCH
News Staff Writer

A new machine has been installed in the Center for the Visually Handicapped at the Texas Tech library that can "read" aloud anything from published material through a voice synthesizer.

Nancy Sant, office coordinator for the Tech Center for the Visually Handicapped, said the Kurzweil reading machine scans a page of text and uses knowledge about the printed characters to translate information into words that are "spoken" by a synthesized speech module.

"The machine can be used by anyone, not just the visually handicapped," Sant said. "Anyone who has trouble reading can use it."

"Some dyslexic students hire people to read for them, and instead they can use the KRM," she said.

Sant said there are about 25 visually handicapped people at Tech who will use the machine.

An identical machine is located in Lubbock's Mahon public library, Sant said. The state donated the $50,000 machines to the libraries, which pay only maintenance fees, she said.

"The KRM opens the world of printed materials to those who may have never had 'equal access' for education, business or reading for enjoyment," Sant said. "Although it has trouble reading some newspapers, the machine lets a blind person read any book they choose, not just those printed in braille or recorded on tape."

The KRM 400 was invented in Cambridge, Mass., by Raymond Kurzweil of Kurzweil Computer Products and can read hundreds of type styles. Sant said the machine can read numbers and that an additional disc can perform calculations aloud.

Some training is required to use the KRM. A typical training session takes from eight to nine hours, Sant said.

"I was trained wearing a blindfold, so I know how a visually impaired person would feel trying to learn about the machine," she said.

Anyone interested in using the machine should make an appointment with her for a training session, she said.

InfroTrac offers students new, faster technology

By CINDY PANDOLFO
News Staff Writer

The Texas Tech library is subscribing to InfroTrac, a new service that offers students the latest emerging technology in videodiscs.

InfroTrac is a system of indexes published by Information Access Co. The two commercial databases use microcomputers to access information recorded on a videodisc, said Tom Rohrig, reference librarian. A single videodisc has the capacity to store as much information as 5,000 floppy computer disks, he said.

Rohrig said one of the most important features of InfroTrac is that the system is free of charge for student use. The system is designed with a menu of online help screens to assist untrained patrons.

"The systems are very user friendly," Rohrig said. "They are like an online tutorial system."

InfroTrac allows students to obtain reference information faster than from ordinary indexes, he said. The system also is equipped with a printer so the student can make a copy of information.

"The system uses computer technology to allow students immediate access to the system," he said.

The InfroTrac database contains references to business, technical and general interest publications as well as two periodicals, The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times.

References include titles from the current year as well as three previous years.

The InfroTrac system contains about 900 titles, which are updated monthly. The Tech library has about 600 of the database titles available. The InfroTrac Backfile Database contains information from 1980 through 1982 and is updated annually.

The second database contains a government publications index. A monthly catalog of the United States Government Printing Office can be used to search for references from 1979 to the current year. The government index is updated monthly.

Both databases have an online thesaurus so the user can search for precise terms and view all listings under a specific heading or subheading, he said.

InfroTrac is available during library hours. Students needing assistance with the system can ask for help at the reference desk.

Bank sues Tolliver for car loan default

By MICHELLE BLEIBERG
News Staff Writer

Texas Tech quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver said Wednesday he wouldn't have defaulted on a car loan he had with Whisperwood National Bank of Lubbock if he had the money to pay it out.

Tolliver, a sophomore liberal arts major from Boyd, is being sued by the bank, which filed suit Monday claiming that Tolliver defaulted on an automobile loan he signed on Sept. 23, 1985.

According to a copy of the loan document, Whisperwood Bank renewed a previous loan on Tolliver's 1979 Oldsmobile Cutlass two-door car. The suit stated that Tolliver signed a promissory note and a security agreement to pay the bank more than $4,330 but that he failed to make his most recent payment that was due June 28, 1986.

"I bought the car before I came to Tech," Tolliver said. "I couldn't work once school started (because of NCAA rules), so I got the loan to help pay for the car."

He said his parents were helping him make loan payments until they no longer could afford to. "My dad got ill, and my parents are kinda hurting now," Tolliver said. "The bank will eventually get their money, but it will take time to pay it off."

The suit and a copy of the loan showed Tolliver did not have a co-signer on the loan and listed the Tech athletic department as his address.

As of Aug. 13, 1986, Tolliver owed the bank $3,802.90, including the amount of principal, interest and expenses. The bank attorney's fee of $800 is included in the suit against Tolliver.

Officials at Whisperwood National Bank declined to comment on the suit because it is against their policy.

Local group sews quilt for lab production

By MISSY COSTELLO
Lifestyles Staff Writer

They say that a stitch in time saves nine. Well, 49 area women have spent about 189 hours of their time in recent weeks stitching a "Legacy Quilt" to be used in the Texas Tech University Laboratory Theater's production of "Quilters."

The quilt to be used in the play is 10 feet square. A Texas star is in the center of the quilt and 16 blocks surround it, depicting events in the life of Sarah, the matriarchal figure in the play.

At the opening of the play, the character of Sarah says, "I've lived a long time and I've made a lot of quilts. But this is the last one I'm making; this one's gonna be my best effort ever. It's like a family album. Each block is different; each pattern has a thread in there from time to time with all the others ... it's my legacy quilt."

Throughout the play, the various quilt squares are used to represent important events in Sarah's life.

The quilt was created by the Prairie Windmill Quilt History and Research Chapter of the National Quilting Association. Member Sharon Newman of Lubbock said she first saw the play in 1984 after reading the book "The Quilters: Women and Domestic Art" by Patricia Cooper and Norma Bradley Allen.

Newman gave the play's actors a "mini-lesson" on quilting and "the philosophy of quilting." She also shared her book of "The Quilters" with Kay Fuselier, a graduate theater arts student who will portray Sarah.

First approached to be a technical adviser for the play with quilter Jackie Reis, Newman had the original idea for creating an actual quilt to be used in the play instead of a painted backdrop. At first the theater department said no, but according to Newman, as production time grew nearer, the department changed its mind.

A stitch in time ...

University News and Publications

Quilters Caroline Crawford, Bethany Larson, LaJuan Slaton and Jackie Reis work on the quilt to be used for the University Theater's lab production of "Quilters." The musical will open Oct. 9.

Not only has an entire quilt been made for the play, but 16 individual squares were crafted for use in the play as well. This required added effort by the quilters, as quilt squares that normally are drafted at 12 inches had to be revised to 20 inches square for the quilt and enlarged again to 24 square inches for their individual use in the play.

Big wheel of mystery spins around Vanna White's good fortune

Michael Stephens
Lifestyles Staff Writer

Vanna-mania — just one of the many pop-cult crazes that blaze across this great nation from time to time. Another example are those little diamond-shaped signs that people have begun to mount in the back of their cars.

Back to the subject at hand, i.e., Vanna. Did you know she has just published an autobiography? I guess it's sort of a "rags to vowels" story — how she pulled herself up from the dregs of life in the southern United States to the glamour of bankruptcy and gift certificates.

I must add this volume to my Vanna library. I'll put it right between the People interview and the Enquirer story about her "Double Tragedy."

It's all right here. Suspense — (Will Vanna turn over the wrong letter and reveal today's puzzle?) Drama — (When will Vanna do a cameo on Miami Vice?) Romance — (Will she and Pat tie the knot, and couldn't he let her spin the wheel just once?)

Let me remove my tongue from my cheek for a minute. What is the big deal about this woman? I'll admit that she is reasonably attractive despite the fact that Merv Griffin Productions insists on sometimes dressing the woman in clothes that Joan Collins wouldn't touch.

But I still can't grasp the sudden appeal of this woman. Why the big to-do? There may be no answer to that question, because there are some things that we just don't ask in this country.

If a simple girl like Vanna can make it big, then the door must be wide open for everyone. For the next national celebrity to grace the covers of our periodicals I nominate: Imelda Marcos.

Why not? The woman has all the ingredients. She likes to sing, she likes to socialize. She dresses just as well as Vanna. She has a man who makes her life interesting. (Boy, does he ever). Her life would make a great book. She has loved (shoes) and lost (shoes). She has struggled from the bottom (sandals) to the highest pinnacles (fine leather pumps by Bandolino). She has faced hardships (broken heels).

Maybe not Imelda.

Tech pistol club opens season with win

The Texas Tech pistol team opened its season Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the University of Texas at Arlington Fall Invitational in Arlington, posting a first place finish in the air pistol competition.

The Red Raiders took second place in both the standard and free pistol competition behind Texas A&M, which finished second in the air pistol event.

Hastings still main man in Tech defense

By BRAD WALKER
Sports Staff Writer

He was chosen on almost every preseason All-Southwest Conference defensive team. He has been mentioned by more than a few publications as one of the best in the nation and is considered a bona fide All-America candidate.

He should be; he is a consensus two-time All-SWC pick at middle linebacker, and nobody in all of college football had more tackles during the past two seasons.

He is a 6-3, 235-pound senior captain for the Texas Tech football team, and big things are expected of him.

He is Brad Hastings, and he has a small problem. He was injured during August two-a-days, he missed the season opener, and the comeback trail already has had hills and valleys through only three weeks.

That's not to say that Hastings won't be, and is not, recovering in the same fashion that he returned from a near-fatal stab wound after his sophomore year, and from knee surgery last spring. He underwent knee surgery again just before the season began and was expected to be out until the end of non-conference play.

Hastings beat that deadline, but the bum knee no doubt has slowed his play. Just ask Miami and Baylor, who found that the quickest route from point A to point B was via passes to running backs.

Red Raider head coach David McWilliams vowed that before Saturday's matchup against Texas A&M, he and his coaching staff will correct the problem the linebackers were having with the passing game. Hastings said the help will come with a new coverage scheme.

"We've been doing more zone-type coverages this week," Hastings said.

"We've been running man-to-man, and it's hard to cover running backs with four-four speed. The zone helps us more."

While teammate Michael Johnson has helped take up some slack as the defensive leader (46 tackles, five for losses), Hastings' rather slow start may have an effect on his personal postseason awards. He is behind Johnson statistically with 32 tackles.

"It (the knee) is getting better each game," Hastings said. "It's affecting me — the operation was just four weeks ago. I just hope to have a better game this week than I did last week."

This week's opponent may be every bit as powerful and explosive as last week's, however. The Aggies are, after all, the defending SWC champions. But Hastings says A&M is the type of team Tech matches up with well.

"On defense, we like to face a big offense because we can use our quickness against them up front," he said. "They have a young offensive line. We're more experienced on defense than they are on offense."

The Aggie offense does have experience in quarterback Kevin Murray, the latest in the long line of fine signal-callers the Raiders have seen this year.

"We've faced real good quarterbacks until now, with Testeverde, and Carlson was excellent, but it's not the quarterback we're concerned with," Hastings said.

On the other side of the ball for the Aggies is some direct competition for Hastings in Johnny Holland, also an All-SWC selection from a year ago and a possible All-America. The contest could turn into a battle of the 'backers. In last season's game in Lubbock, Hastings set a school record with 29 tackles.

"Hastings has been impressive in films," Aggie head coach Jackie Sherrill said. "He's a tough, physical player who makes a lot of things happen. He played well against us last year."

As for the 45-14 loss to Baylor, Hastings says it no longer is in the minds of the Raiders.

"We're kinda upset about last week, but we forgot about it Sunday morning," he said. "We're going to go out and play well and try to be 1-1 in conference."

Clemens injures elbow in search for 25th win

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston right-hander Roger Clemens, making his last start before the American League playoffs, suffered a bruised right elbow Wednesday night when he was struck by a line drive during a game with the Baltimore Orioles. Clemens, 24-4, apparently escaped serious injury less than three hours after being told by Manager John McNamara that he would start against the California Angels here Tuesday night in the opener of the AL Championship Series.

Dr. Arthur Pappas, the Red Sox team physician, reported that X-rays disclosed no broken bones. He said that Clemens suffered a bruise and his status was "day-to-day."

Clemens was struck by a ball hit by Baltimore catcher John Stefero with runners on first and third and two outs in the second.

The Red Sox reported that the ball struck Clemens on the outside of the right elbow as he turned away on his follow through.

Clemens grabbed his elbow as the ball ricocheted over second baseman Marty Barrett's head and into short right field for an RBI single.

Clemens was escorted immediately to the clubhouse, then was taken to a nearby hospital for X-rays.

Clemens was seeking to become Boston's first 25-game winner since Mel Parnell in 1949.

Women golfers to face top-flight field at annual Dick McGuire Invitational

A tournament loaded with nationally ranked teams will provide the Texas Tech women's golf squad with one of its stiffest challenges of the season this weekend at the Eighth Annual Dick McGuire Invitational in Albuquerque.

Coach Jay McClure's team will be greeted by 10 of the country's Top 20 golf teams today, Friday and Saturday at the 54-hole tournament hosted by the University of New Mexico. Play will begin at 8 a.m. each day.

The 21-team tournament will be played on the par-74 University of New Mexico South Golf Course.

No. 1-rated Florida and No. 3 Arizona State head an outstanding field that features seven of the nation's Top 10 women's collegiate golf teams.

One reason so many top-flight teams are playing in the tournament, McClure said, is that the NCAA Division I championship tournament will be played over the course next spring.

"All the top teams want to let their players have a chance to play the course in competition to have them familiar with it before coming in next year for the NCAA tourney," McClure said.

Tech's competition includes No. 5 San Jose State and the nation's seventh- through 10th-ranked squads — Tulsa, Stanford, SMU and Oklahoma State.

No. 12 Furman, No. 18 New Mexico and No. 20

Texas round out the nationally ranked teams.

The rest of the field includes Arizona, Brigham Young, Long Beach State, Lamar, Oklahoma, San Diego State, TCU, Weber State and Wyoming.

Last year, the Red Raiders finished 10th out of 14 teams in the tournament. Kay Linda Shive, a junior from Lago Vista and one of two veterans on this year's squad, shot one of her best rounds during the tournament last year — a one-over-par 75 in the first round of play — but she carded an 80 on the next day's play and ballooned to an 86 over the final 18 holes.

The other veteran, Lisa Franklin-Beck, shot rounds of 93, 86 and 89 at the McGuire Invitational last year, but McClure said he thinks the experience she and Shive have on the course may prove to be an asset this year.

"Our players are really excited about playing in the tournament this year, with so many top players from around the country," McClure said.

Others who will play for Tech include sophomores Mona Jennings and Sherry Weatherby and freshman Amy McDougall. Team scores are computed by using the low-round score of four of the five golfers.

In Tech's first outing this year, the Red Raiders finished sixth among 10 teams in early September at the New Mexico State Roadrunner Invitational.

UH official resigns athletic post

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The chairman of the University of Houston's NCAA athletic advisory committee has resigned two other prestigious campus posts, citing unhappiness in the over-involvement of regents.

Bruce Oppenheimer, an associate professor of political science, has vacated his positions as the regents' appointee to the Intercollegiate Athletic Council and as the vice chairman of the Faculty Senate, saying he is frustrated and angry with the way school athletic problems have been handled.

Oppenheimer said Tuesday he plans to continue serving as a member of the NCAA-mandated athletic advisory committee composed of mostly faculty and several students. But he said the committee has had increasingly little influence over the school's athletics.

"My experiences, especially in the past year, convince me of the absence of leadership at the University of Houston," Oppenheimer said in a letter to the faculty senate. "The handling of the ongoing budgetary problems and of a variety of issues in our intercollegiate athletic program, as well as the over-involvement of the regents in the day-to-day operations of the university, confirm this leadership vacuum."

President Charles E. Bishop left a month ago for another job, Ms. Hanna has chaired a committee of several administrators in charge of running the university system. The unusual arrangement is expected to continue until a new system leader is appointed.

Oppenheimer said he is disappointed that the university is moving slowly to improve the academic performance of athletes.

"The faculty members at this campus deserve better from the administration," he added.

Regents Chairwoman Debbie Hanna declined to comment on the Oppenheimer's letter saying she had not seen it.

"I'm sure Bruce is only speaking for himself," she said. "I've heard from many faculty members who are very excited about the direction the university is taking now."

Since the university's System

He said the advisory committee last spring recommended to tie coaches' salary increases to their athletes' classroom attendance and academic efforts.

He also said some faculty members were discouraged by the way the investigation into alleged improprieties in the football program was handled. The school paid a Houston law firm $43,000 to conduct an investigation into former players' allegations of cash payments by coaches, including Head Coach Bill Yeoman. No results of the probe have been made public.
